Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Professor A. R. Simpson, of Edinburgh.

Mr. Moody's little book, "The Way to God," has had a circulation attended by signal blessing. During his missions copies have been given to many inquirers after the way of salvation, and a perusal of the pages has shed light on many a dark path. Friends of the missions have forwarded donations in order that a supply of books may be placed at the disposal of workers, and we shall be glad to hear from others who are disposed to facilitate the circulation of this useful guide to the perplexed.

The sketch of Mr. Spurgeon's life, upon which Rev. James Douglas has of late been expending much thought and energy, has at length been published. It is a hearty tribute to one whom the author was privileged to know as a close friend, and at the same time it is a portraiture of a great man, such as cannot but prove instructive as well as interesting to thoughtful readers. The book is entitled "The Prince of Preachers," and gives as a frontispiece a good portrait of its celebrated subject. (2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d. Morgan and Scott.)

The Labour war in the United States, characterised as it has been by distressing displays of violence and outrage, culminating in a sad loss of life, must give serious pause to those who are most warmly in sympathy with the labouring classes. No one familiar with the conditions of life among the poor will deny that there are many wrongs to be redressed, and grievances to be considered, but armed lawlessness, fighting for its own ends and inflicting untold injury on innocent persons, must be put down with a firm hand. The scenes of the past week or two in Tennessee and New York States are intolerable in any civilised community.

It may be that the economic conditions of labour in America, where vast undertakings are in the hands of syndicates, not easily approached by the employés on any question demanding readjustment, lie at the root of these deplorable conflicts; but as the Daily News tersely says:—

> It will be an evil day for the democracy if such acts of brutality as our correspondents have been reporting escape just punishment. The strikers have every right to refuse to work except on their own terms, and in combination; but they have no right to interfere with the freedom of their fellow workmen.

But while firm repression and just punishment are the first necessities of the case, they by no means exhaust the responsibility of those in authority, who will, we trust, feel it right to examine closely and carefully the wrongs which the men believe themselves to be enduring, in order to the adoption of measures likely to give due satisfaction to any who may be suffering under a sense of injustice.

The Times, commenting upon the recent ceremony of investing the new Roman Catholic Archbishop with the Pallium, considers that the official presence of a Papal delegate in England without exciting notice, marks a definite epoch in the transition "from the old fear and hatred of Rome to the spirit of perfect toleration of all religions," and implies that this change is partly due to the modification of the spirit and action of the Roman Catholic Church. But there is a point beyond which toleration becomes treason. None but those who are willingly blind to the signs and tendencies of the times can say that no danger is to be apprehended to the Protestant religion and to civil liberty from such misplaced "toleration." Nor has Rome, as is so often asserted, changed—she is still true to her motto, though she does not carry her heart upon her sleeve.

In a letter to the Times Miss Cusack has drawn attention to the following passage from the oath which Roman Catholic bishops are obliged to take:—"I will, to the utmost of my power, persecute and attack heretics and schismatics against the same our Lord (the Pope) and his aforesaid successors." It has been declared in response that "since the year 1818, by a rescript of Pius VII., no Catholic bishop who is a British subject has taken upon himself any engagement 'to persecute heretics.'" There may be more than one explanation of this fact. There is little need to assume in a formal manner obligations which are universally acknowledged as belonging to an office or dignity.

We recently remarked upon the statement of the Pope, in regard to the Jews, that Rome's mission is one of "persuasion, not persecution." History, as we said, plainly proves the contrary. A correspondent writes to us, pointing out that the decrees of the Vatican Council of 1869-70 are entirely consonant with the verdict of history. He says:—

> If the Pope's words are correctly given, he has infallibly brought himself under the anathema of the Vatican Council, Canon XII., "De Ecclesia Christi." This Canon says, "If anyone should say that the power conferred by Christ our Lord and Saviour on his Church, was only that of directing by advice and persuasion (per consilia et suasiones), but not also of commanding by laws, and coercing and compelling by exterior judgment and by salutary punishments, those who are astray and contumacious; let him be accursed."

Who did not know that this was the true state of the case? Yet it is as well to put on record a literal and precise version of the blasphemous and cruel canon. It is, of course, nothing new for popes and priests to accommodate their utterances to occasion. No one, however, can blame Protestants for being "contumacious" when Rome claims the very virtues which she has most systematically disregarded, most wantonly outraged.

The Romanist journals give some prominence to the celebration of the Mass upon Monte Viso, one of the most pointed Alpine peaks in the perpetual snow region, and one of them, after giving a list of those who officiated at the "extemporised altar," goes on to relate that after a short discourse from one of the functionaries a loud vivat was raised "in honour of the great Pontiff, Leo XIII." Is not this suggestive of the spirit of Rome, with its tendency to give glory to the creature? Illustrating this mistaken and misleading spirit, the same journal, in advocating the perusal of certain biographies of the saints of stigmatisation, refers to them as "the lives of those elect souls to whom Providence has assigned so important a share in the redemptive work of the Church."

Some interesting facts appear in connection with the recently published Census in regard to Ireland. During the last ten years the population of the sister island has decreased by 470,000, or about 9 per cent. The Roman Catholics have decreased at the rate of 10.4 per cent., the Protestant Episcopalians 6.2 per cent., the Presbyterians 5.5 per cent., whereas the Methodists have increased by 7,000, or at the rate of 13.6 per cent., and members of "other persuasions" at the rate of 3.8 per cent. With the large falling off in the number of Romanists, there has, however, been an increase of 339 priests—a decrease being shown in the numbers of clergymen and ministers connected with the Protestant bodies.

We have more than once expressed the opinion that a substantial and lasting alleviation of some of the present miseries of Ireland might follow the judicious development of her natural resources and the encouragement of native, but neglected, industries at her own doors. This view is strengthened by the perusal of an interesting article in the current Fortnightly Review, wherein the writer describes the most encouraging results which have attended operations on these lines among the poverty-stricken people of the West. A new and healthy spirit of enterprise and hope and self-reliance has been kindled among the fisher-folk of the Connemara Coast, and "ever-increasing possibilities of prosperity and independence for thousands" are being opened up. What has been done on the coast may be done for and by the inland peasantry. The North of Ireland has proved that industry and contentment go together, so for the South and West there is far more to be hoped for from such quiet educative methods of self-help than from the most ingenious political apparatus.

A recent article in The Daily Graphic, describing "Morocco as it is," paints a very sombre and saddening picture of the miseries caused by the slave trade in that misgoverned kingdom. This demoralising traffic is stated to be carried on in all the principal towns alike on the coast and in the interior, except at Tangier, where English influence at least forbids an open market in human bodies and souls. Most of the slaves are purchased from the Soudanese Arabs, and hundreds die in the terrible journey across the desert. The lot of the children of slaves is most pitiable, their hardships beginning at four or five years old, while a still darker fate hangs over the adult years of girl life. The condition of all classes in Morocco is declared to be "miserable beyond words":—

> From the captive women in the harems, from prisoners slowly starving to death in the filthy dungeons, from slaves sold like cattle in the markets, from the hated, down-trodden Jews, from the whole helpless and hopeless people of that empire we hear the cry, "Come over and help us."

At a time when so many eyes are turned eagerly and anxiously towards Africa, it is interesting to note some impressions of Matabeleland, which Rev. W. Elliott, of the L.M.S., who with his wife has spent sixteen years in that quarter, has communicated to the Daily Chronicle. On the whole he has formed a favourable opinion of King Lobengula, due allowance being made for the present surroundings and previous training of that absolute despot, "the fountain of all honour, justice, and authority." The traditions and customs of the Matabele are most cruel and hideous, war being the only pursuit of the people, and until this system is broken down the progress of Christianity and civilisation must be slow and uncertain. But there are good reasons for hopefulness. The British South Africa Company is meeting with encouraging success in its efforts to humanise the natives by opening out avenues of peaceful industry. The whole of Matabeleland is described as healthy, beautiful, and fertile; it is a promising field for missionary enterprise, and seems destined, in the providence of God, to be the home of thousands of English emigrants.

Once again the question of the decline of population in France is causing considerable anxiety to those who have the best interests of that land at heart. Of late years there has been a striking development of the crime of infanticide, which takes many cruel forms, and under the influence of a steady annual decrease in the number of births, to-day France has to take the fourth rank as regards population. If only strictly national interests were at stake, perhaps the condition of things would not be of such moment, but behind the startling figures there lies the terrible slough of despond of a wide-spread and deep-rooted immorality, which is sapping away the best life of the people—an impurity fostered by a literature which is as vile as it is blasphemous.

During the recent sittings of the Royal Commission on Labour many very painful facts were elicited in regard to the condition of large numbers of the labouring and deserving poor. In regard to the dock labourers in London, it was stated that, while on the average 22,000 sought work daily, not more than 12,000 found employment even of the most temporary character. What an amount of misery must be undergone day by day by the unsuccessful 10,000, and by those dependent upon them! And what a lamentable feature in our nineteenth-century civilisation does such a condition of things demonstrate! Surely, with respect to many things, social as well as religious, we are crying peace where there is no peace.

A witness, who represented the bakers in Ireland, put in a protest on behalf of his fellows against Sunday work, which he stated was general, although illegal. He added that there was no necessity for the practice. The matter would seem to call for interference of some sort or other, and in the midst of a growing disregard for the sanctity of the Sabbath, and a growing contempt of the working man's right of weekly rest, it is desirable that the question should not be buried in a bulky Blue Book and thus lost sight of.

The following passage, which we owe to the late Canon Liddon, may well be taken in connection with the inspired command to "pray without ceasing:"—

The atmosphere in which a true Christian breathes is above all an atmosphere of worship. He may think it right and reverent to say little, but the day says to him from the early dawn, "Lift up thine heart," and his answer is, "I lift it up unto the Lord." He knows that he has indeed "come unto Mount Zion, and to the city of the living God, and to an innumerable company of angels, and to the general assembly of the Church of the Firstborn whose names are written in Heaven, and to Jesus." The invisible world, with all its beauty and its awe, is around him, and he is able to keep earthly preoccupations at bay, and to surrender himself to the influences which stream down upon him from the throne of the Redeemer.

Acts xi. 19—26.

Before proceeding to consider the next Apostolic discourse—namely, Acts xiii.—let us dwell on the very bright narrative related in the above passage. Free lay labour, as commencing the work, and cordial Church fellowship in maturing it, come prominently into view. But beyond such considerations, the whole passage is full of God; full of truth expressed in terse language; full of delightful blended service in God's harvest field.

The former part of the passage is very suitable as a basis for an outdoor Gospel address; and both the former and the latter parts may well be taken together in an indoor service for the converted and the unconverted.

Note how "the Lord" occupies the foreground at every stage. The speakers preached "the Lord Jesus;" the hand of "the Lord" was with them; a great number believed and turned to "the Lord," and were exhorted to cleave to "the Lord;" and finally much people was added to "the Lord." The details are as follows:—

(a) The dispersion of the Church through persecution, proved to be a means for diffusing the light. They carried the truth with them to distant localities, yet to no one but Jews did they address themselves.

(b) But when some of these disciples came to Antioch, they did speak to the Grecians, and spread amongst them the glad tidings respecting the Lord Jesus.

(c) The hand—the power, the Holy Spirit—of the Lord was with them.

(d) The result (true faith being ever perfected by an action of the soul)—a great number believing, turned unto the Lord.

(e) The cordial fellowship of the Church in Jerusalem was shown in their sending one of their choicest men to Antioch. Mark the happy description of Barnabas. He was a good man, and full of the Holy Spirit, and of faith, showing his suitability to be a missioner. How many weaknesses, evil habits, and practices may have come before him, but that which arrested his attention was some evident mark of the grace of God. Good men have an eye to perceive the mercies of God. It is indeed a great aid to a wise judgment throughout our course to be ready to discern the grace of God in another. If God is blessing, that will dissipate many a difficulty.

1. With purpose of heart (how important!).
2. To cleave (how expressive!).
3. To the Lord—the personal, risen, exalted, coming Saviour, once crucified for us; willing, loving, if we hear His voice and welcome Him, to come even already in spirit, and to hold close fellowship with us.

(g) There are many stages in every history. But the reality, the substance of salvation, is the being like these people at Antioch, "added to the Lord." We attend services and meetings—good. We hear the Gospel preached from time to time—good. We amend our lives—good. We give subscriptions, and do many good works, We are added to the Church. Still, the vital point of all is to be "added to the Lord." Have we, reader and writer, this assurance?

(h) Let us note the tender and sustained care of the man who was good, and full of the Holy Spirit, and of faith:—

1. He sought out and brought Saul to Antioch, and they laboured together for the good of the young converts in holy union—those happy days before contention marred the joy.
2. For a whole year they gathered together the believers in Church fellowship.
3. They taught much people.
4. And at Antioch the disciples—these true learners—were called after the anointed name of Him who had been preached to them, whose hand had laid hold of them, in whom they believed, to whom they turned, to whom with purpose of heart they clave, to whom they were added:—They obtained the name of "Christians."

Are we also called Christians? Is their portrait a picture of ourselves?

CHRIST WAS NEARER THAN THE PAIN.

Three Hebrew youths in furnace hot
Walked scatheless in the flame;
The Son of Man their danger saw,
And to their rescue came.
The seven-times heated fires were vain,
For Christ was nearer than the pain.

The stones were falling thick around
The martyr Stephen's head;
But Jesus "standing" by he saw,
Late risen from the dead.
The sight to him was priceless gain,
For Christ was nearer than the pain.

Two martyrs*, burning at the stake,
Shrank not, but bade "Good cheer,
We've lit a flame that goes not out,
And Christ is with us here."
And then their hearts were stout again,
For Christ was nearer than the pain.

A hero, late, in Southern Seas,†
By dangers thick beset,
Saw Christ again in opened heaven
As his Protector set.
All fear and danger then were vain,
For Christ was nearer than the pain.

Another‡, wounded, at death's door,
Could look to heaven alone;
But there, to his delighted gaze,
Was Jesus on the throne.
Now grief is joy, his loss is gain,
For Christ is nearer than the pain.

And in this world of chance and change,
Of grief and suffering keen,
May we a present Saviour view,
As He has oft been seen!
Thus, more than conquerors again,
When Christ is nearer than the pain.

Paid Native Agency.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe's recent letter leads me to ask: Has not the time come to urge upon the attention of missionary societies a reconsideration of the practice, almost universally in vogue on the fields they are seeking to occupy for Christ, the payment of native agents? Was it thus that the Gospel was spread in the early ages of Christianity? Is there a scrap of evidence to show that the Thessalonian Church, whose obedience to Christ, whose faith and love and hope so filled with joy the Apostle's heart, adopted the practice of calling men away from their ordinary business and industries, giving them salaries as preachers of the Word, and so diminishing the sense of responsibility to preach the Gospel in the minds of the general body of the believers?

The history of the formation of that Church is very significant, and may well claim careful study from all scripturally-minded missionaries; or have we got beyond all appeal to New Testament example in the superiority of our latter-day wisdom? Surely such a successful planting of a church in a Pagan city and the speedy development therein of the lovely fruit of the Spirit are worthy of consideration and of imitation. In Acts xvii. we learn that Paul and Silas held what we moderns would call a fortnight's mission in Thessalonica, beginning (as Paul invariably did) with the Jews, some of whom were persuaded of the truth concerning the crucified and risen One, whilst there were also added to the Church "of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few." "A great multitude!" Oh, how we long to hear of the great multitudes being ingathered nowadays to the Kingdom of Christ.

Paul and Silas were immediately expelled from Thessalonica through the opposition of unbelieving Jews; the Apostle never again visited that well-beloved church (1 Thess. ii. 17, 18), though he longed to see the disciples again "with great desire"; but that they stood in the faith and spread it abroad there is every reason to believe, communicating the glad tidings one to another in all simplicity; and if that church perished as ages went on, its destruction was brought about, in all human likelihood, not from lack of organisation, but through the imposition of sacerdotalism and the errors inseparable therefrom.

To take a modern example. About the year 1870 a leper from a village called Saipow, hearing of cures of disease in the mission hospital at Swatow in Southern China, went for relief and obtained some alleviation of his dreadful malady. He returned to his home, carrying with him some seeds of Divine truth, which he at once began to disseminate among his fellow villagers. That was the commencement of a flourishing church, which, at this day, is larger or smaller in its membership (in all probability) in the proportion in which the private members have been encouraged to continue the work from house to house without the intervention of paid native agency. In China the customary conception of the heathen mind in regard to paid native agency is that the agent has sold himself to the foreigner, and he is distrusted accordingly to a very large extent; one is safe to say that this is so amongst the vast majority of on-looking Chinamen. Not so with the private unpaid members of the native churches, they all sooner or later have to suffer loss for Christ's sake, and so commend the Gospel of Christ to others.

Will some of the Chinese missionaries make a fair trial for a few years of both ways? Select three new stations as yet untouched by Gospel messengers, and continue there the experiment of evangelising with paid native agents. In three other stations (all six as nearly similar in conditions and possibilities as may be found), and there leave the spread of the Gospel to the unaided and unpaid endeavours of the converts themselves; invoke the power of the Holy Ghost for the fructifying of the good word of life in all of these stations; and let them all be visited at intervals, one not oftener than the other, by the European missionaries for counsel and upbuilding; for the foreign missionary, until his work in China has been accomplished, is in the place of bishop (or elder) to overlook and feed the flock of God, and when the results are known let us have them for the guidance of the church. That veteran China missionary, Dr. Nevius, of Ningpo, entertains, I believe, strong and well-confirmed views as to the inexpediency of paid native agency, except on the very smallest scale, and his views are supported by some of the China Inland missionaries. I am less acquainted with Indian missions, but the same principles are surely true and good for all (or nearly all) heathen mission fields.

The Temple of the Lord.

PORTION OF A BIBLE READING.

BY. REV. DAVID BARON.

"Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Consider your ways. Go up to the mountain, and bring wood, and build the house; and I will take pleasure in it, and I will be glorified, saith the Lord."

"Who is left among you that saw this house in her first glory? and how do ye see it now? is it not in your eyes in comparison of it as nothing? Yet now be strong, O Zerubbabel, saith the Lord; and be strong, O Joshua, son of Josedech, the high priest; and be strong, all ye people of the land, saith the Lord, and work: for I am with you, saith the Lord of hosts." (Hag. i. 7, 8; ii. 3, 4).

There is a special message in the mouth of this hoary prophet of nearly twenty-five centuries ago, to the Church of Christ in this generation. The mission of Haggai's prophecy, as of all other Scripture, was not merely to the time in which it was first uttered. Indeed, therein consists the wonderful uniqueness of the Word of God, that it never becomes obsolete or antiquated, but speaks with equal force and power to every age and generation of men.

Haggai's prophecy may be characterised as a call to work—a reasoning appeal, a proclamation of the most high God by the hand of His servant, directed with a view to rouse the people to a certain definite task, and that task was the building of the Temple. It is no mere fancy or speculation on our part to regard the Tabernacle and Temple, which Israel built by Divine sanction, as typical. We are expressly told in the New Testament that they were "examples and shadows of heavenly things," and we should lose a great amount of spiritual truth did we not so regard them.

In Eph. ii. 14—22, we have the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ under the figure of a temple which is "being built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner-stone." Let us contemplate for awhile the glorious mystical Temple which, when finished, shall be for an habitation of God through the Spirit.

It is still in process of completion, for verse 21 may be rendered thus: "In whom an entire building in process of being fitly conjoined together is growing unto a holy temple in the Lord." (Rotherham's Version.) Men and women hewn from the quarry of this sinful world, taken out of the horrible pit and miry clay, are being quickened and polished, and sanctified by the Spirit of God, and built up as lively stones in this spiritual house. (1 Pet. ii. 5.) Yet though, speaking generally, the material is one, and there is no difference, when we come to examine it closer, we find two substances, which before were irreconcilable, for the first time fused and welded together. In spite of the mutual prejudice and hatred, and the otherwise impassable legal and ceremonial gulf that separated the Jew from the Gentile, Christ is the angle at which they both meet and are united into one house. "For He is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition; having abolished in his flesh the enmity, the law of commandments in ordinances; for to make in Himself of twain one new man, so making peace; and that He might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby." (Eph. ii. 14-16.)

In the Gospels we see as it were the foundation of the Church laid in the life and death and resurrection of the Lord Jesus. In the Acts of the Apostles, and after the ascension of Christ and the descent of the Spirit, we see the first courses of the spiritual superstructure laid and its beginning to grow. When we come to Acts xv., we get the limits of this new Temple defined as far as the Gentiles are concerned. It is not to embrace within itself the whole Gentile world, but "God did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name." After this is accomplished, Jesus will return and build the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down. Then the residue of men will seek after the Lord and all the Gentiles upon whom My name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things. The two expressions found in the brief summary of the Apostle James give us the clue to the dispensational purpose of God with regard to the Gentiles. "Out of the Gentiles," a people for his name now; "all the Gentiles," by-and-by, when Jesus returns and the tabernacle of David is rebuilt. In the three chapters which form the wonderful parenthesis in the Epistle to the Romans (ix.-xi.), and in which the Apostle lucidly expounds, for the instruction of Gentile believers, the past, present, and future of Israel, we have the limits of the spiritual Temple defined, as far as the Jew is concerned. It is not to include the whole Jewish nation, but only a remnant, according to the election of grace; and as to the nation, the Apostle tells us that "a hardness in part" is happened to it "until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in; and so all Israel shall be saved, as it is written, There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob." Here, again, with regard to the Jew, the same contrast must be observed between "the remnant according to the election of grace" now, and the "all Israel" by-and-by, when the fulness of the Gentiles shall have come in, and the Deliverer return to Zion. And when we come to this second chapter of the Ephesians, we see how inside the Church there is of the two made one new man, and how the middle wall of partition is broken down, and Jew and Gentile, equally enriched with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, dwell together in unity.

This, then is the Church, a spiritual building, the materials of which are neither exclusively Jewish nor Gentile, but an election from both. Yea, it is the predeterminate counsel of God that every nation, kindred, people, and tongue shou'd contribute material to this Temple, whose glory is to be greater than that of Solomon's, and which shall be for the eternal habitation of God through the Spirit.

For the erection of the second Temple, concerning which we read in Haggai, God was pleased to see human instrumentality, and the progress or delay in its completion depended on man's obedience to God's command. The same is true, also, of the spiritual sanctuary. It pleases God to use human instrumentality for the gathering out of "stones" for his temple, which is to be "exceeding magnifical," from all parts of the earth, and by obedience or disobedience to his command to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature, we hasten or delay the completion of the Church, and the glorious appearing of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ. The means God Himself has appointed for gathering out the living stones, quickened by his own Spirit, to form part of the spiritual house, is the preaching of the Gospel. "It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe."

BELOVED—HATED—EXALTED:

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF JOSEPH.*

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

EARLY DAYS.

Behind our life the Weaver stands
And works his wondrous will;
We leave it all in his wise hands
And trust his perfect skill.
Should mystery enshroud his plan,
And our short sight be dim,
We will not try the whole to scan,
But leave each thread to Him.
—C. Murray.

It was said by Coleridge that our greatest mission is to rescue admitted truths from the neglect caused by their universal admission. There is much force in this. When a truth is fighting for existence, it compels men, whether they love it or not, to consider it. But when its position is secured, it becomes like a well-used coin, or the familiar text which hangs unnoticed on the wall. It is a great mission to rescue such truths from neglect; to flash upon them the strong light which arrests attention; to play the part of Old Mortality, who, chisel in hand, was wont to clear the mould of neglect from the gravestones of the Covenanters, so that the legend might stand out clear-cut. It is something like this that I attempt for this exquisite story. We think we know all about it; and yet there may be depths of meaning and beauty which, by their very familiarity, escape us. Let us ponder together the story of Joseph; and as we do so we shall get many a foreshadowing of Him who was cast into the pit of death, but who now sits at the right hand of Power, a Prince and a Saviour.

I. The Formative Influences of his Early Life.—Seventeen years before our story opens, a little child was borne by Rachel, the favourite wife of Jacob. The latter was then living as manager for his uncle Laban, on the ancient pasture-land of Charran, situated in the valley of the Euphrates and the Tigris, from which his grandfather Abraham had been called by God. The child received an eager welcome from its parents, and from the first gave unusual promise. He was like one of those children whom we sometimes meet in large families, who bear a marked contrast to the rest; and who grow up like some fair Saxon child amid the swarthy natives of a tent of gipsies who have made it their prize.

But what a history has passed in that interval! When yet a child he was hastily caught up by his mother, and sustained in her arms on the back of a swift camel, urged to its highest speed, in the flight across the desert that lay, with only one oasis, between the bank of the Euphrates and the green prairies of Gilead. He could just remember the panic that spread through the camp when tidings came that Esau, the dread uncle, was on his march, with four hundred followers. Nor could he ever forget the evening full of preparation, the night of solemn expectancy, and the morning when his father limped into the camp, maimed in body, but with the look of a prince upon his face.

More recently still, he could recall the hurried flight from the enraged idolaters of Shechem, and those solemn hours at Bethel where his father had probably showed him the very spot on which the foot of the mystic ladder had rested, and where the whole family formally entered into a new covenant with God. It may be that this was the turning point of his life. Such events make deep impressions on young hearts. As they stood together on that hallowed spot and heard again the oft-told story, and clasped each other's hands in solemn covenant, the other sons of Jacob may have been unmoved spectators, but there was a deep response in the susceptible heart of the lad, who may have felt, "This God shall be my God for ever and ever; He shall be my guide, even unto death."

If this were so, these impressions were soon deepened by three deaths. When they reached the family settlement, they found the old nurse Deborah dying. She was the last link to those bright days when her young mistress Rebekah came across the desert to be Isaac's bride, and they buried her with many tears under an ancient but splendid oak. And he could never forget the next. The long caravan was moving slowly up the narrow ridge along which lay the ancient village of Bethlehem; suddenly a halt was called: the beloved Rachel could not go another step. There as the sun was westering, amidst scenes where in after years Ruth met Boaz, and David watched his sheep, and the good Joseph walked beside the patient ass with its precious burden—there Rachel, Joseph's mother, died. This was the greatest loss that he had ever known. A little while after, the lad stood with his father and brethren before Machpelah's venerable grave, to lay Isaac where Abraham and Sarah and Rebekah awaited him, each on a narrow shelf; and where, after a space of seven-and-twenty years, he was to place the remains of his father Jacob.

These things made Joseph what he was. And the little sympathy that he received from his family only drove him more apart, and compelled him to live "by the well" (Gen. xlix. 22), and to strike his roots deeper into the life of God.

It may be that these words will be read by youths of seventeen who have passed through experiences not unlike Joseph's. They have lost sainted friends. They have been emptied from vessel to vessel. They feel lonely in the midst of their home. Let me solemnly ask them if they have entered into covenant with God. Have you avouched God to be your God? Have you put your hand into the hand of "the mighty God of Jacob"? It is an urgent question, for the answer to it may mark the crisis of your lives. Choose Christ, and, in choosing Him, choose life, and blessedness, and heaven. And when you have chosen Him, cleave close to Him, and send the rootlets of your existence deep down into the hidden wells of communion and fellowship.

II. The Experiences of his Home Life.—Joseph was endowed with very remarkable intelligence. It would almost seem as if he were chief shepherd (ver. 2), the sons of Bilhah and Zilpah acting as his subordinates and assistants. The Rabbis describe him as a wise son, endowed with knowledge beyond his years. It was this, combined with the sweetness of his disposition, and the memory of his mother, that won for him his father's peculiar love. "Israel loved Joseph more than all his children."

And this love provided the coat of many colours. We have been accustomed to think of this coat as a kind of patchwork quilt, and we have wondered that grown men should have been moved to so much passion at the sight of the peacock plumes of their younger brother. But further knowledge will correct these thoughts. The Hebrew word means simply a tunic reaching to the extremities, and describes a garment commonly worn in Egypt and the adjacent lands. Imagine a long white linen robe extending to the ankles and wrists, and embroidered with a narrow stripe of colour round the edge of the skirt and sleeves, and you will have a very fair conception of this famous coat.

Now, we can understand the envy of his brothers. This sort of robe was worn only by the opulent and noble, by kings' sons, and by those who had no need to toil for their living. All who had to win their bread by labour wore short, coloured garments that did not show stain or cramp the free movement of the limbs. Such was the lot of Jacob's sons, and such the garments they wore. They had to wade through morasses, to clamber up hills, to carry wandering sheep home on their shoulders, to fight with robbers and beasts of prey; and for such toils the flowing robe would have been quite unfit. But when Jacob gave such a robe to Joseph, he declared in effect that from such hardships and toils his favourite son should be exempt. Now, in those times, the father's will was law. When, therefore, they saw Joseph tricked out in his robe of state, the brethren felt that in all likelihood he would have the rich inheritance, while they must follow a life of toil. "And when his brethren saw that their father loved him more than all his brethren, they hated him, and could not speak peaceably unto him."

The case was aggravated by his plain speaking. "He brought unto his father their evil report." At first sight this does not seem a noble trait in his character. But it is sometimes the truest kindness, after due and repeated warning, to expose the evil deeds of those with whom we live and work. If they are permitted to go on in sin, apparently undetected, they will become hardened and emboldened, and eager to go to greater lengths. Moreover, Joseph was probably placed over them, and was responsible to his father for their behaviour. He was jealous for the family name, which they had already "made to stink among the inhabitants of the land." He was eager for the glory of God, whose name was continually blasphemed through their means. And, therefore, without attempting to conceal the evil, he told their father just how matters stood.

But this was enough to make them hate him. "Every one that doeth evil hateth the light." "I hate him," said the infuriated Ahab when speaking of Micaiah, "because he doth not prophesy good of me, but evil." "The world cannot hate you," our Lord said sadly; "but me it hateth, because I testify of it, that its works are evil." So will it be always: if the world loves us and speaks well of us, we may gravely question if we are salt, pure and stinging, amid its corruption, or lights in its midnight gloom. As soon as our lives become a strong contrast and reproof, we shall arouse its undying hate. "What evil have I done," said the ancient cynic, "to make all men speak well of me?"

But still further, Joseph dreamed that he should become the centre of the family life. All young people dream. Unless our lot has been peculiarly hard and untoward, we all, in the sunny days of youth, don Joseph's tunic, and dream—how great and successful we shall be!—how noble and heroic!—how much good we are to get and give! The heavens shall rain soft showers of benediction! The earth shall yield flowers for our feet and fruits to our taste! We shall surpass all who have preceded us; sitting on the throne of supremacy, whilst our detractors and foes do us obeisance! Alas! our raiment soon drips with blood, and we find ourselves down in the pit, or sold into captivity. But there was this in Joseph's dreams: they foretold not only his exaltation, but his brothers' humiliation. If he were the central sheaf, their sheaves must do obeisance, by falling to the earth around it. If he were on the throne, sun, moon, and stars must do him homage. This was more than the proud spirits of his brethren could brook, and "they hated him yet the more."

But the root of their enmity lay even deeper. In Eden, when addressing the serpent, God said: "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed." That is one of the profoundest sayings in the Bible. It is the key to Scripture. All that comes after only proves the virulence and the universality of the conflict between the children of God and the children of the devil. It broke out between Cain and Abel. It has embittered every family. It has rent every home. It shall yet convulse the universe. This was the secret of the conflict that raged around Joseph. I grant that the home was ill-organised; that all the evils incident to polygamy were there; that Jacob was incompetent to rule. But still I see there an instance of that conflict of which Christ spake: "I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother; . . . and a man's foes shall be they of his own household."

Do you know by sad experience what Joseph felt beneath those Syrian skies? Do the archers shoot at you? Are you lonesome and depressed, and ready to give up? Take heart!—see the trampled grass and the snapped twigs; others have gone this way before you. Christ your Lord suffered the same treatment from his own. Go on doing right, in nothing terrified by your adversaries. Be pitiful and gentle, forgiving and forbearing. Be specially careful not to take your case into your own hands; demanding redress in imperious and vindictive tones. If you are servants, forbear to answer back. Give your backs to the smiters, and your cheeks to them that pluck off the hair. Avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath. Put down your feet into the footprints of your Saviour, who left an example that we should follow Him. He did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth: and yet, when He was unjustly reviled, He reviled not again; when He suffered beneath undeserved contumely and reproach, He did not even remind the perpetrators of the righteous judgment of God, but was dumb as a lamb, and threatened not, and committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously.

And what was the result? Joseph was carried through the hatred and opposition of his foes; and his dreams were literally fulfilled in the golden days of prosperity, which came at length—just as Jesus was eventually seated at the right hand of God—as prince and saviour. And your time, sufferer, shall come at length, when God shall vindicate your character and avenge your sorrows. "Trust in the Lord, and do good; fret not thyself in any wise to do evil; for evil-doers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth. He shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noonday" (Ps. xxxiv.).

The Church of Popular Opinion.

An Address delivered at Keswick Convention,

BY REV. C. A. FOX.

I DIRECT your attention to Rev. iii. 14: "And unto the angel of the church of the Laodiceans write: These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God." This is the last church addressed by our blessed Lord Jesus in these brief epistles, and the precise meaning in the Greek is "the Church of Popular Opinion." It should be exceedingly interesting to learn what Christ feels that the Church of Popular Opinion should hear from him.

This letter was written between two earthquakes. There was an earthquake a year or two previously, and one very soon afterwards, when the whole place was swept away. It is an epistle out of the earthquakes, and has an earth-shaking tone about it. Christ speaks some plain words to the Church of Popular Opinion, which, I need not tell you, has been moved from Laodicea, and is now planted in England.

There are three things that this church needs. It needs first of all to learn what the Great Master is Himself. "These things saith the Amen." I am the end of every prayer that you offer to God, and is received: "Amen"—so let it be! I am the end and the beginning of every promise which God hath made to you. All the promises of God are Yea and Amen in Christ Jesus. Oh, that we would sometimes pause when saying our prayers, and let Christ say the Amen; and that we would sometimes pause when grasping a promise, and let Christ be the Amen right through it; we would soon find that what we have been grasping shall be true. There is no uncertainty about Him. The Church of Popular Opinion is in but the Master of the Church is Amen—it must be and shall be for ever! He is the faithful and true Witness.

He has come from heaven to witness what God is—to give us the whole unveiling of the heart of God. By a spring of water He comes to any poor woman and shows her what she is. He is as true to the poor defiled woman as to the Father in Heaven. He is the faithful and true Witness—the genuine witness, and there is no mistake about it.

At this conference Christ has been a witness of Himself to his people, to the glory of God. He is "the beginning of the creation of God"—the beginning of everything. You know that the philosophers of these days are looking for the primal germ; and if any of you have it, give it up! Christ says in this passage: "I am the primal germ of the creation of God; I am the beginning of all things of the creation of God, whether in the universe visible, or in the soul of man invisible." We learn, then, that He is the faithful and true Witness and the primal germ, the beginning of everything; and He is also the close of everything, to the glory of God.

The next point is: This Church of Popular Opinion needs to learn what she does. "I know thy works." People are saying that their creed is that which "tendeth to righteousness." Another man says: "Think of humanity." Yet another says: "Think of the Unknowable." That is what one of our very great philosophers says. It is a hard task; but a philosopher bids us do it! The Lord can bring us not only to the Unknowable, but to "the unknown God," and show us, not only what He is, but what we should be to Him. He is exceedingly practical, and says, "I know thy works."

What is this work that He specially knows in the Church of Popular Opinion? It is "that thou art neither cold nor hot." That is a strange work;

EVERYTHING IS LUKEWARM.

The Lord says: "I would thou wert cold or hot; so because thou art lukewarm, I will spue thee out of my mouth." Do you see what it is that the Lord hates? It is lukewarmness; He hates men who are avoiding extremes. He says, "I hate it; you must be extreme for Me—out and out for Me." I prefer the expression, "down and down for Jesus"; down deeper and deeper—no lukewarmness, no nebulous negations, as we are having them by the thousand. Let us have clear, decisive truth and practical reality, and a glorious life lived out for the blessed Master.

So thoroughly does the Lord hate this Church of Popular Opinion that He says He will cast it from Him. Neither cold nor hot, this fashionable Christianity—one thing to-day and another to-morrow, a current of every moving opinion of the day, and at the mercy of every wind of doctrine—the Lord hates it, and He says, "I will spue thee out of my mouth." That is plain speaking. More than that, He tells this church what it says as well as what it is. He is listening all the time. "Thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing." There is much self-complacency in the Church of Popular Opinion. There is need of a convention everywhere, to confer, not with flesh and blood, but with the Lord, until the whole heart is united to do and to be for the glory of God. "I have need of nothing." We are coming to materialism. We are getting on so well that luxury is leading to unbelief. We are so exceedingly well off that we can do without God!

Again, this Church of Popular Opinion requires to learn what she is. "Thou knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." You do not know what you are. You have made your own looking-glass, and, of course, it gives back a very pleasant reflection.

What is the remedy for the condition of things described? "I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayest see." Notice the thou mayest be rich, mayest be clothed, mayest see. The Church of Popular Opinion, that He would spue out of his mouth, yet may be made rich, and clothed with white raiment, and made to see into the mysteries of God. What a Gospel! Could there be any beside this?

Lord, "counsel" us to-day! We want to be "buying" now. Thou wondrous traveller; we see, we claim Thee to-day. We are needy and poor to the very last penny. Thou hast told us "Thou art a wretched and miserable one, and poor, and blind, and naked," and we come to the counter of Calvary, and we see thee with all the blessed wares of heaven, the gifts of God which Thou dost counsel us to buy. Is not the "gold tried in the fire" the grace which Thou hadst in such abundance, the fulness of the indwelling God, that Thou couldst pass through the furnace of Calvary, and, fulfilling Job's prophecy, couldst come forth as gold from the trial? Thou wert in a seven-fold heated furnace, and the atoning blood has put out the most awful fire, and the grace of the gold of God which has been through the fire is now supplied to us poor sinners unable to pay for it!

Yet, to say "I counsel thee to buy" when we have nothing to pay with! We are empty, and Thou sayest "Buy," as if Thou wouldst mock our penury. How can we buy? There are two parties to such a transaction—the one asks for an article which the other sells. One gives material in exchange for the other's money. In this marvellous transaction with the Lord, the buyer gives Himself, and receives gold tried in the fire, that he may be rich. I think this is one of the most sobering passages in all Holy Scripture. It has often been to me a source of infinite comfort. Then "white raiment that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear." The Lord would hide the shame that his children have brought upon themselves. He feels not only the reproach upon his glory, and the tarnishing of his holy name; but He also feels for the reproach of his poor child. May we have transfiguration raiment such as the Lord has, white as no fuller on earth can white it.

WE PUT THEE ON AGAIN

to-day, Lord Jesus, in all the freshness of first intention, and all the freshness of youth of soul. Clothe us in the white raiment, washed in the blood of the Lamb. So not only has the Church a great Lord, the Lord our Righteousness; but the Lord looks upon the Church, and saith to her, "Thou shalt be called My Bride."

There is one thing more "That thou mayest see." What is the wonderful eyesalve, the Lord pleads with us, urges us to buy? The man who said "whereas I was blind, now I see," bought some of that salve. What is it? It is the Holy Ghost. What did the Lord for his disciples at Pentecost? Did He teach them new truth? Did He bring to them anything fresh, or add to their marvellous stores of grace? Not at all, He simply illuminated them with the Holy Ghost. He filled them full of the Holy Ghost, which was invisible before, but became visible then, to his Church.

I have read of a great German musican who, after working hard, was so very tired that he went out for a little walk. From a cottage he heard someone playing one of his pieces, and when the player ceased, he knocked at the door and said, "May I see the player?" The person who had been playing opened the door; she was entirely blind. The composer said, "I was much interested in your playing; would you continue it?" She did so, and afterwards he thanked her cordially, whereupon she said, "Do you play? I would be so pleased if you would go through a little piece for me." The musician began, and soon forgot himself and his blind listener, as his whole soul went forth, and he launched out into some mysterious dream of harmony. When he ceased, he turned to the young woman, whose sightless eyes were streaming with tears. She said, "Sir, thou who couldst play like that did ask me to play!" She asked him who he was, and he told her. "What! you the author of all those pieces?" "Yes."

So you are blindly playing on the poor keys of humanity, and your poor weak faculties respond but feebly and faintly to the blind touch, with which you can play, under a certain amount of teaching and knowledge of the Gospel. But cease, and let the Master sit and play Himself; and oh! the triumph of harmony! And then you sit silent, with your once, but not now, sightless eyes streaming with tears, for it is the glorious Lord Himself that is playing on those strings of poor broken humanity, and bringing from them a harmony that would hush even the harmonies of heaven.

There is a power in God that can bring out of you such music, blessedness, purity, and power, as that, if you will only let Him. Thou mayest be like the very Christ Himself transfigured, and thou mayest see. Then you will open your Bible, and and, indeed, every book is Revelation. I find in every passage—even the dryest—such cargoes of God's holy wares, that I have not time to unload them, and I long for the hands, and the power, and the skill to bring them into my use, and for the glory of my Master.

What follows? "As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten"—or I convict and educate. The Lord does that. "I will," He says, "send you the Comforter, who shall reprove you." That is strange comfort! He will convict of sin, force into confession, bring thee to thy knees. Thou shalt be a thousand times broken, and brought to the feet of the Lord. People have said that such meetings as this "make Christians so high in their own eyes." But if they get blessed, Christians will be down lower and lower. Let the Lord do what He will with his own. If it is a cross, bear it. Some of us know what it is to bear a life-long cross for the Master. Let Him convict and educate you. "Be zealous, therefore," because He has broken you in pieces; "and repent," again, as you have already repented.

What is the eyesalve for? "Behold I stand at the door and knock." He has long been there, but you did not see Him. That eye-salve has given you new sight. "If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with Me." The Holy Ghost opens our eyes to see the indwelling Lord. The power of the Holy Ghost is to glorify Jesus dwelling in the heart of the poor, humble, broken believer. Was there ever such a Gospel as this? It is "the expulsive power of a new affection;" indeed, better than that, the expulsive power of

THE NEW INHABITANT.

He not only makes me rich, but gives me Himself. O Lord, I love Thee better than thy gifts. Will you let the Lord into your whole life now? Let Him into every corner and recess of your being. Will you wait upon Him assiduously, day by day, hour by hour, to watch his orders? "I will guide thee with mine eye." He will supplant you altogether. Blessed, wondrous work when self is supplanted and dislodged; and it is so with some Christians in a very marvellous way. I could tell you of some whom I know intimately, of whom this is obviously true. It may be said of them "'the Lord is there'; self is cast out." You say—What is the gift of the Holy Ghost for? I reply, that you may be nothing, but that God may be all in all: that you may be, not only thrust into God's service, but be in the power of the Holiest.

There is one thing God cannot give away—his holiness, and yet He gives it to us. He takes the head of the house; He takes the place of the man, so that it is no longer I that live, but Christ liveth in me. Jacob is Israel henceforth, and the tables are turned to the Lord, so that the Lord alone is exalted in that day. Now listen to the promise. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne." This spued-out one has got all things in Christ. "To sit with Me?" "Yes." "At Thy feet?" "No, in my throne." "Can I sit down there, Lord?" "Yes, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." We may well say "He that hath an ear, let him hear" in the power of the Holy Ghost.

My dreamings are as boundless as the illimitable Sea.
Alas! can such vain longings in this atom's schemings be?

The sea is pre-eminently the cradle of sensation. Eye and ear and touch are all affected; and, not only affected, but enchained. The romance of the sea lies in its sense-enthrallment. The host of particulars on the land is forgotten—lost in one grand monotone. The soul is merged as if in a kind of universal sense.

To an overwrought brain what can equal a holiday by the sea? In our judgment, nothing; unless, indeed, it be a voyage on the sea itself. As a solvent of thought the sea is unequalled. There is a soul-subduing power in the mere sight of the sea. And if those feel this who repair for a season to its shores, what is to be said of those who live habitually upon the sea, and who are familiar with all its moods and tenses; to whom the sea is everywhere, filling the ear with its murmur or its roar, while the vessel, as if swayed by some giant hand, pitches and rolls like a thing that lives?

It is a philosophic axiom that as sensation rises, thought sinks. Their action seems to be equal and opposite. As the soul is sensible of the one, it becomes insensible to the other. The legal adviser is, as a rule, cold as an icicle, because so much more developed on the side of reflection than on that of sensation. So with the man of ideas, he lives so far away from the rudimentary life of sense, that he is in danger of becoming either abstracted or cynical. The sea's influence lies at the opposite pole from this. The sea is at once the narcotic of thought and the stimulant of the senses. The omnipresence of the sea lulls and numbs the reflective powers of the soul until it seems to sink to vacancy; and, then, there is the lengthened pause of the spirit when man appears to live the mere automatic life of the element with which he is associated.

"What are the wild waves saying?" It is a mystic question, yet the voice is not altogether inarticulate. The wild waves tell of the fight between the flesh and the spirit—how the wing of sense is preternaturally forced and at last the spirit can do no other than quail before the general sense-exhaustion. They tell of the conflict that is being waged between nature and nature's monarch, man; how unequal the conflict seems, and how hard it is for him to plant his feet firmly on the slippery deck.

The sailor's path is one which we ought to follow with sympathy.

not simply because between him and death is a step constant and very narrow, but because the draft upon mere sense-force is greatly in excess of what the spirit can well spare. The outward is so pressing; the call to take the outward into account so interminable; the sea so much of a great external monster, anon relaxing its hold and anon gathering up its strength for a grand onslaught, that the tendency in seafaring traffic is to become resolved into bone and sinew and muscular daring until spirit-life resembles more the echo of a kind of pre-existence than the pulsation of a present being.

We cannot on any other principle explain the utter abandon of the sailor in the moment. No type on earth is so liable to extreme alternations of feeling. A case which occurred in Emmanuel Chapel, Falmouth, some twelve years ago, lives in memory still. We think we see that seafaring friend now, bowed down, as it seemed to us, by the mere sight of that beautiful sanctuary, in abject penitence or remorse. His story, broken by sobs, he recited to us at the close of the service. On the voyage, which had been attended by much damage and danger, he had flaunted his profligacy in the Creator's face, his daring rising with the violence of the storm, and his blasphemy becoming the more raging as one after another of his mates was swept away or crushed amidships. Taken, however, out of the crash of the elements, and placed in the calm serene of God's house, where the hidden soul could peer out and ask, What is the meaning of it all? the lawlessness of the man, for the time being at least, fell into abeyance, and on bended knee, with strong crying and tears, he gives worship to God.

How often we hear it said that man is a contradictory animal! That may be, but that is not the key to the knowledge of him. Man is composite; "a coin that bears the double stamp of nature and spirit." Man must be harmonised, or else he will vibrate wildly. The magnetic needle of his spirit must be fixed on God, and his senses controlled by the touch of Omnipotence, otherwise his career will be a mad one, a human image of the tossing, restless, lawless sea itself.

We cannot wonder that such a sphere of influence as the sea presents should leave upon our seamen the bold markings of her fingers. They are accustomed in their calling to grand exhibitions. They are brought face to face, not with nature's uniformity, but with nature's contrariety. They see exactly the opposite of what passes for scientific truth, and could never, even in their golden dreams, think of what scientists love to name the rigidity of natural operation. In literal fact, the more seamen know of the sea, the less are they able to trust it. It is a sphinx that can never be explained,

A RIDDLE THAT CAN NEVER BE TOLD.

Hence the superstition of seamen; and hence, too, their tendency to take things as they are, and without much regard to the past or concern about the future, to get what pleasure they can out of present opportunity. Horace says:—

"Carpe diem, quam nimium credula postero," which we may freely translate: Enjoy to-day nor reckon on to-morrow's host.

The words answer to the seaman's flag of all nations. The unsettlement into the midst of which seamen are thrown, the lack of fixity in the general aspect or tone of the work in which they are engaged, the mobility of all their surroundings, their calling so chequered, on the one side, so monotonous on the other, all conspire to throw them into a mould where conduct to the least possible extent is determined by a view of consequences.

And this unhappily is the imprint which widely meets the eye when a glance is taken at our seafaring population. As upon the sea they cannot argue from the past, or to any appreciable extent prognosticate the future from the present; as, for the most part, in the exigencies of their calling they live and move and have their being in flux, not knowing what the moods and tenses of the sea will be, or how far the winds and waves will agree in keeping house together; so in their general outlook on land also, yea, and on life as a whole, sailors are apt to give place to the principle of abandon in reckless fashion, not caring ought about the reckoning if only the body of impulse can quaff its cup of present good cheer.

"There's something in me that reproves my fault
But such a headstrong potent fault it is,
That it but mocks reproof."

It is on such facts, doubtless, as the foregoing that the ease with which Jack is imposed upon, hoaxed, and cruelly victimised is based. With him first come, first served. He believes in love at first sight. The paint upon the harlot's cheek, the ribald song of the drinking saloon, the crimp's bait, the abandonment of the rein of self-control, all tell what a sinner Jack is, and what a sinner Jack is not. Can you not see, Christian reader, in connection with such a character the call to be up and doing? May you not hopefully fish in maritime waters? Does it not strike you how much of the spirit within that mass of carnality is virgin soil? Bethink you, Jack's sins are sins of the flesh rather than sins of the spirit; and it may be that the Master's words will stir your soul—"Launch out into the deep, and let down your net for a draught."

THE PRINCE OF PREACHERS.*

IMPORTANT EVENTS IN MR. SPURGEON'S EARLY CAREER.

A bare mention need only be made of the grievous catastrophe which attended the first service held in the Surrey Gardens Music Hall, whereby seven persons were killed and twenty-eight injured. The alarm which resulted in this deplorable calamity was caused by the cry of "Fire!" wantonly raised by some evil-disposed persons acting in concert. At the time Mr. Spurgeon was leading in prayer, and that with such power that many were melted to tears. From the alarm raised a scene of tumultuous excitement ensued. which, though moderated for the moment by the appeals of the pastor and his helpers, broke out again into a fresh paroxysm of fear and panic.

The preacher was so wrought upon by the scene, that he had to desist from the attempt he made to continue the service. Thought was dissolved into sensation, and for weeks he was prostrated by the shock to his nervous system. There are events which leave their mark for life, as, for instance, Jacob's wrestling with the angel. The catastrophe in Surrey Gardens was to Mr. Spurgeon such an event; his nervous system became abnormally sensitive to disturbance from that hour. From time to time one has had occasion to remark this. The wonder is that, notwithstanding it all, Mr. Spurgeon's regret should have been unfeigned that he did not happen to have been at Mentone when, in recent years, the terrible earthquakes occurred. Why he should have had such a wish can only be accounted for by the fact that in some men at least there is something even stronger than nerves.

An incident which he loved to speak of, and which of its kind was the most striking in his career, took place on the day set apart for national humiliation and prayer, in connection with the Indian Mutiny, when he preached to the largest congregation he ever had, an audience of 23,654 persons. The service was held in the Crystal Palace, on a Wednesday morning in October, 1857, about a year after the calamity recorded above. We have heard him say that after this service, on reaching home, he took to bed and slept—his exhaustion being so great—the longest sleep of his life. Unless our memory deceives us, and we think, on the whole, it does not, the duration of this sleep was twenty-four hours.

Mr. Spurgeon's text, on the occasion of this memorable gathering, was one befitting the circumstances: "Hear ye the rod, and who hath appointed it" (Micah vi. 9). In the sermon Mr. Spurgeon took up the high ground, among other things, that the British Government "should never for a moment have tolerated the vile religion of the Hindoos, which was nothing more nor less than a mass of the vilest filth that the imagination could conceive." The sermon, as a whole, was one of denunciation of sin, and was a call to repentance and humiliation before God, grounded on a lengthened catalogue of sins, individual and national. At the close of the service, a collection, amounting to £675 16s. 11½d., was taken in behalf of the Indian Relief Fund, in which was included the sum of £200, contributed by the Crystal Palace Company. The Illustrated London News, in closing its report on the day's proceedings, says:—"Mr. Spurgeon's services were gratuitous on the occasion; but the directors gave £50 towards the fund for the place of worship which is about to be built for the reverend gentleman, as an expression of the sense of the value of his services, and of the disinterested manner in which he acted."

PRAYER FOR REVIVAL.

Revive, O Lord, revive!
Prayer riseth up to Thee,
All power is thine, revive, revive!
O grant thy people's plea.
Revive, O Lord, revive!
Our low affections raise;
Attune each soul with power to yield
The sacrifice of praise.
Our love, alas! how faint!
Our praise, alas! how low;
Revive each languid, drooping soul
With heaven's all quick'ning glow!
Let not a Christless world
So captivate and charm;
May its ensnaring, flattering smiles
Each quickened soul alarm.
Revive, O Lord, revive!
Thy Spirit's power display,
Speak from thy throne, and bless thy saints,
With Pentecostal day!

NORTHFIELD CONVENTION.

Northfield, August 10, 1892.

We had an almost unexampled passage across the Atlantic. In fact, the good ship Umbria, which brought us, beat the record of any previous Cunarder, accomplishing the voyage in five days twenty-two hours. The passengers were busy in trying to account for this on various hypotheses, but I felt that it was due to the good hand of the Lord, which, in answer to many prayers, was upon us for good.

We were therefore easily able to reach Northfield on Saturday evening, though we had only left Liverpool on the previous Saturday at noon. The last few hours of our journey were lit by an exquisite flood of moonlight, and the drive from the station to the little town was peculiarly beautiful. We were greeted at the station by Mr. Moody's able and energetic nephew, Albert Moody, in whose hands the direction of the practical matters of the convention almost entirely rests.

The town, we were glad to learn, was very full. Despite all gloomy prognostications to the contrary, that Mr. Moody's absence would be prejudicial to the attendance, the crowds have gathered from all parts in very large numbers, and the audiences, which I have had the pleasure of addressing, are fully equal to those of last year.

Better than all, there is a very deep sense of the presence of God, and of the blessing which He is giving. It is not for me to write of these things, but I am conscious of an attention, a quiet hush, an evident intensifying of the interest in the meetings, all of them signs that the Holy Spirit is beginning to fulfil his wonted and gracious offices. There is a great spirit of expectancy abroad, which in itself is a harbinger of coming blessing; and though the Conference is only young as yet, I cannot doubt that my next letter will tell of overflowing blessing.

Sunday morning was a day of almost perfect beauty. The air was balmy, the sunshine soft and not too intense, the landscape, with its reach of river, the wooded slopes of the hills, the far-distant range of mountains, presented an aspect of Sabbatic repose which recalled the words of the book of Deuteronomy which speak of the days of Heaven upon earth. The contrast between this lovely picture lying beneath the smile of God and the grime and squalor of certain of our great cities seemed almost infinite; and one could not wonder that the Creator became the Redeemer, and that this purpose, though it cost Him the cross and shame, cannot stay its course, until He has wiped out the blots which man's sin has introduced into his fair world, and He can speak from his throne, and say, "Behold, I make all things new." As with Keswick, so with Northfield, the picturesque beauty of the locality is a worthy setting for the Conference, and in close harmony with the devotional character of the meetings.

Dr. Gordon, who is presiding at the Conference in Mr. Moody's absence, preached to a crowded congregation in the spacious church, on the anointing oil (Ex. xxx.). He made three points, (1) that it was not to be put on a stranger, combating the idea that all men are equally the sons of God; (2) that no one was permitted to compound anything like it, dealing with the many devices employed to produce religious impressions by other than spiritual means; (3) that it was not to be poured on man's flesh—insisting that we must not seek to mingle flesh and spirit. Mr. Sankey and Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins led the singing and sang some beautiful duets. I gave the message with which I had been entrusted from the Keswick Convention. In the afternoon and evening we had great gatherings in the large Assembly Hall, which was crowded.

Day after day the meetings have been proceeding with deepening power, but the heat is rather considerable. Fans are in perpetual motion, and the Mount Hermon student who sells iced lemon water outside the hall will probably make money enough to carry him through his next college session.

This (Wednesday) is the great missionary day, and Dr. Pierson, who presides, is surrounded by a great galaxy of missionaries, who are giving most interesting details of work in various countries of the world. £100 has just been contributed to relieve the famine-stricken people of Northern Siam.

I cull two or three sentences which have struck me in the speeches I have heard.

"A great statesman said, I would give all I possess to blot out my ancestry; but Jesus has blotted out our ancestry from Adam, substituting lineage from Himself."

"General Hancocks, a stern soldier, is said to have wept only once. Riding over a battlefield, a little child came up to him and said, 'Father is dead, here's his gun.' Now, Jesus Christ is dead, here's his cross, take it up and follow Him."

"The man of the world is anchored down, the fluke of his anchor is in the soil. The man of God is anchored above, the fluke of his anchor is in the throne."

"As cattle, fifty miles out at sea, snuff the breezes of the clover on the land, and are refreshed, so the believer by faith anticipates his home and the glorious appearing of his Lord."

"Christ is leading a great exodus out of the present evil world into the Canaan of God's rest. And as his transfiguration was a brief realisation of that coming age, so should we be transformed into the likeness of that world to which we belong, and to which we are going through Him."

"Remember the doctrine of Imminence; certainty as to the fact, uncertainty as to the time."

"A statement was quoted of George Müller, that after careful computation he thought that there were not more than ten million really regenerated people on the earth."

My own line of teaching has been more distinctively in the direction of consecration, cleansing, and the filling of the Holy Spirit. There is a great field for such teaching, and the ministers, of whom there is a considerable number, are manifesting much interest in my endeavour to set forth truths which in this country have been associated with errors and extravagances that have brought them into discredit, but which are in themselves of the utmost value and importance. I cannot sufficiently thank God for the many testimonies being given to the value of the principles I tried to teach last year, and which seemed to have revolutionised many lives of ministries. To God be all the Glory!

REFUGEE JEWS IN PALESTINE.

Mr. R. Scott Moncrieff, who is still at work in Palestine, in connection with the Society for the relief of persecuted Jews, writes that the number of refugee Jewish immigrants has much increased since April. Many of them have suffered terribly at Jaffa, where they were only allowed to land late at night, having been carried backwards and forwards from steamer (two or three miles off), to shore in open boats under a burning sun till they had given up everything they had to the boatmen and others. Mr. Scott Moncrieff is having a shelter built for first reception of some of these unhappy people who "have not where to lay their heads."

Some of the destitute women, children, and aged men, are given a daily meal at the society's soup kitchen. "The sunken eyes and hollow cheeks" of hundreds more, bear painful testimony to the insufficiency of their earnings for their support. At Jerusalem, mercy has been shown to crowds of newly arrived refugees, famishing and desperate, "like hungry wolves." And since the summer heats have set in, the want of drinking water adds terribly to the sufferings of the Jews in the densely crowded houses.

The Jewish quarter has no water supply. Mr. Scott Moncrieff is giving away water bought from the native village water carriers, and he has paid for the repair and construction of two cisterns, which, however, cannot be filled till the rainfall in the autumn.

The most pressing question is how to give employment to the destitute thousands. During his recent tour of visitation to Jewish colonies throughout Palestine, Mr. Scott Moncrieff has inspected land in all parts, and has consulted the best authorities. The unanimous decision is that the only hope of maintenance of destitute Jews lies in agricultural settlements. There is land to be had in many suitable localities, and no time should be lost in taking the necessary steps. Unless measures are taken before the autumn, there will again be the necessity for feeding starving thousands, who could, if helped beforehand, be earning their bread.

These facts the Society earnestly commends to Christians who deplore the cruelties practised upon helpless Jews. The secretary is Mrs. E. A. Finn, 41, Parliament-street, S.W.

PRESBYTERIAN ALLIANCE.—The Fifth General Council of the "Alliance of the Reformed Churches throughout the World holding the Presbyterian System," will meet at Toronto, Canada, September 21, and will be opened with a sermon by Rev. Wm. Caven, D.D., Principal of Knox College.

American Notes.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

The Northfield Conference has opened most auspiciously. The first two days have proved the equal of the same period in other years. Dr. Gordon is on deck, in the absence of Captain Moody, holding the tiller with firm hand. Of course Mr. Moody is greatly missed, but the early announcement that he would not be there prepared for his absence. The friends have rallied with wonderful enthusiasm,

The speakers who have taken part so far are Drs. Gordon, Pierson, and Messrs. Gray and Needham. Messrs. Sankey and Stebbins lead in holy song Fresh topics have been presented, such as the Ministry of Angels, Plan of the Ages, &c. Dr. Pierson gave a scholarly address on Bible Inspiration, in which he conclusively proved that none but spiritual men are capable of understanding a divine revelation.

A new Gospel carriage has reached the Conference grounds. It is a marvel of construction, originally designed for small picnic parties going great distances. It is fitted within like a Pullman palace car, with sleeping berths, toilet rooms, kitchen, sitting, and dining rooms, racks, cupboards, receptacles for books, and convenient presses. It has an organ, a platform for speakers, and other devices unique in character. It was purchased by John C. Collins, secretary of the Bureau of Supplies (Religious Literature), New Haven, at a cost of £300.

This mechanical evangelist is called "The Messenger." Since the early part of July it has visited eleven cities and towns. Two evangelists, besides a driver, accompany it. These brethren have preached the Gospel in about five weeks to more than seventeen thousand persons, chiefly of the non-church-going kind.

We live in an age when Christians must utilise every practical method in order to evangelise on a larger scale than that of church limitations. We now have a Gospel chapel floating down the Mississippi, visiting river towns which are shockingly demoralised; we have a Gospel car carried by locomotive power throughout the West over the railroads, with preachers who are organising Sunday-schools and establishing churches in the new towns which spring up so rapidly; and we have several Gospel wagons going through the country scattering the word of life. No doubt other agencies will spring into existence as business men use their inventiveness for missionary enterprises.

The great strike of amalgamated ironworkers, to which I referred my last budget, has continued to this day. There have been many tragedies resulting from it. The Anarchists have been awakened from their period of quiet, and, like hungry wolves, are greedy for the prey. Mr. Frick, chairman of the Carnegie Company, well-nigh lost his life through a mad attack made upon him by a young Russian. With pistol and stiletto, the Anarchist fell upon his unsuspecting victim, but the wounds have not proved fatal, and a valuable life is spared. The end of the strike is not yet, Soldiers are on guard, lawsuits increase, arrests are common, and confusion reigns.

Preachers of the sensational order have been airing their political advice. One of them preaches to a congregation of the common people, before whom he denounces themonopolist, and encourages rebellion against employers; another addresses his rich parishioners, siding with them in their greed for gain. And so men who claim to have been set apart for the ministry of the Word and to preach righteousness, play the fool.

The Niagara Conference for Bible study was eminently successful this year. The committee are hoping to establish a branch of this school of the prophets at some convenient seaside locality as a permanent institution.

THE PASTOR'S COLLEGE.—Many young workers may be glad to know that, for the sake of helping such, evening classes are being held at the Pastor's College to provide Christian workers with training in Theology, Latin, Greek, Shorthand, Mental Science, History, and Literature. The new term began on Tuesday, August 23. Those desirous of becoming students are requested to make application to the Secretary of Evening Classes, Pastor's College, Temple-street, Newington Butts, enclosing stamped envelope for reply.

THE PARIS DEACONESS' INSTITUTION is an organisation exercising a truly blessed though limited influence, although it has not yet realised the expectations of Sister Malvesin, who for twenty-six years directed the Paris Home. That devoted soul hoped to see a deaconess at the service of every church. There are but sixty deaconesses at work in connection with the evangelical churches of France. The Institution, which has now passed its fiftieth anniversary, has workers in twelve Parisian centres, and in seventeen provincial districts. The churches are at present being urged to demonstrate their vitality by fostering the deaconess agency.

THE SCOTCH COACHMAN.

BY EDITH E. METCALF.

It was just tired time at the end of the Mission meeting when the workers are shaking hands in sympathy and stealing away.

It did not seem right to pass a certain face without a word. He had been there often before. An honest, aged man, who always sat in perfect quiet during the hour, as if trying to think out something for himself. "Have you a Bible?" I said.

"I have a little Testament; but half the time they talk about things that aren't in it. I want a Bible."

"I will bring you one next Tuesday night, and would you like then to talk about being a Christian?" "Yes." "Then I shall pray God your heart may be prepared," and I said good-night.

Very often such friends disappoint us; but I relied upon his thoughtful face. On Tuesday evening he was there.

When the leader asked who would be prayed for he raised his hand—slowly—not with the slowness of hesitation but of deliberation. He had made up his mind to that step, at least, that he wanted the prayers of those people he had sat amongst for many evenings. while he communed with his own mind.

When, afterward, I asked him if his heart were prepared, he seemed a little surprised at the question. "Didn't I show you it was when I held up my hand for the people to pray for me?" he replied, almost gruffly.

What an easy conquest for the Lord! God gives some workers all the easy errands, I thought. Yet, after all, he was not ready for surrender, "I am not quite sure yet that I can stick to it. I'm thinking it over."

Every line of his face evidenced that he would be very slow to promise anything to man or God, but bound to keep it if he promised.

"Well, now what shall I do to be saved?"

"Why, that's just the question the jailer asked." His Testament was quickly opened to the story of Paul, the prisoner, releasing the jailer from his fetters of sin, and I read slowly, that he might take it all in.

This plain story with his own question in it seemed exactly to suit his slow-working, matter-of-fact mind.

"Yes, that makes it plain. I see it. And how did you say I was to be kept? 'by the power of God?' Yes, Miss, I'll do just as the jailer did."

Would he kneel down? "Oh, yes," and he whispered, "I ain't been on these knees for ten years and it feels queer;" but he prayed such an honest, contrite prayer of utter surrender, I could but think of the angels in heaven rejoicing over this quiet soul, which at last had thought it all out and so earnestly given himself to God.

He was not one of the testifying kind. For many nights after this I watched him sitting there silent, just as he used, except for a serene shining in his face, which spoke of entire peace, a witness of inner peace, and wondered of what he was thinking. Would his strong conscience at last compel him to break his natural stern reserve and confess his Lord?

Night after night I was disappointed. He gave up chewing tobacco, which he bravely decided was a hindrance to his Christian life; his growth in grace, like his conversion, was slow and solid; his face shone more and more, but still he did not speak.

I waited, knowing that the Lord would teach him that he must.

Finally it came! with great effort, as if at last something in his heart had burst and let the words come forth.

"It's no difference to you people what my past life has been; that's a matter between my God and me. I only want to say: I believe on the Lord Jesus Christ!"

The words that had saved him, that was all. The solemn emphasis he put upon them showed how his mind had worked over that story of the jailer until it had become the central theme of his life. They stirred the room more than many a lengthy recital of sin and wonderful reformation.

He looked around, later, surprised to see I was there, and I told him I would not for anything have missed hearing just that word from him,

I need worry over him no longer. The Son of Man will not be ashamed of him before our Father.

I am thankful for many lessons learned of this new friend.

What a good sturdy answer of his, when asked the other night in his turn by the leader why he became a Christian: "I studied my Testament, and I thought it was best."

Another time he told me that what set him to thinking it over was that he kept his eyes open and couldn't help seeing how man after man came in there and somehow got made over; he couldn't deny that something did it, and he liked to investigate facts.

He is half the time out of work, but always cheery and trustful — far more even in his Christian life than many who receive the word with rejoicing.

Oh, for a few more of these common-sense Christians among our "spiritual children."

Religion is not a dream for the visionary, but a practical thing for plain men, and in our work with many, to find such an one is an oasis of delight.

CHRIST OUR LEADER.

"Enoch walked with God" (Gen. v. 24). Enoch had no outward vision of God any more than we have. He saw Him by faith, as Moses did many years after (Heb. xi. 27). Enoch knew Christ to be the true God, as John did (1 John v. 20). Christ was his Saviour, his Teacher, his Guide, the source of all his life and service. Enoch was wholly consecrated to the Lord, and allowed no other to lead him.

Those who follow their own dark intellect, or the reasoning of men, suffer loss. Jehoshaphat was a man who feared God, but he was not wholly consecrated to Him; he failed again and again to walk with God. In 2 Chron. xviii. 31 we see how near he was to death through uniting himself with Ahab, a professedly religious man, but one known to be walking contrary to the Lord and his clearly-revealed will. Though the Lord saved Jehoshaphat, He was angry with him, as Jehu said to him, "Shouldest thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord? Therefore is wrath upon thee from before the Lord" (2 Chron. xix. 2).

Be it written to his praise that Jehoshaphat humbled himself, and repented of his folly and sin. "And after this did Jehoshaphat King of Judah join himself with Ahaziah King of Israel who did very wickedly: and he joined himself with him to make ships to go to Tarshish; and they made the ships in Ezion-gaber. Then Eliezer the son of Dodavah of Mareshah prophesied against Jehoshaphat, saying, Because thou has joined thyself with Ahaziah, the Lord hath broken thy works. And the ships were broken, that they were not able to go to Tarshish" (2 Chron. xx. 35 to 37). "Then said Ahaziah, the son of Ahab, unto Jehoshaphat, Let my servants go with thy servants in the ships, but Jehoshaphat would not" (1 Kings xxii. 48, 49). Here we see that Jehoshaphat again repented of his inconsistent conduct, and, therefore, objected to continue to associate with the ungodly Ahaziah, even in what some men might call a good and profitable service.

Surely these words of Scripture are "written for our admonition upon whom the ends of the world are come" (1 Cor. x. 2). We must not presume to be wiser than God.

We should be very careful how we associate with those whom we know to hold doctrines contrary to the clear teaching of Scripture, and most certainly we should never unite ourselves in so-called "Christian work" with those who are prominent leaders in false doctrine. Any one who would encourage a false leader and bid him "God-speed" is partaker of his evil deeds (2 John 11). Let no man, or any assembly of men, ever be put before God and his Word.

If Christ be not seen in any leader, nor the voice of the Lord heard through him, but, on the other hand, his teaching and his conduct be contrary to the truth, that one must be rejected, just as "Zerubbabel, and Jeshua, and the rest of the fathers of Israel" rejected the false professors of their days (Ezra iv. 2, 3; see also Psa. i. 1; cxxxix. 21; 2 Cor. vi. 14 to 18; Eph. v. 11; James iv. 4; and other similar portions of Scripture)

The blind may lead the blind, but let no child of the light have fellowship with such. Only one thing is needful (Luke x. 42), that is, to sit at the feet of Jesus, and learn of Him how to be one with God. Therefore, let us always turn from the carnal mind, and at all times devoutly mind the Spirit (Rom. viii. 6, and Psa. xxv. 14).

REV. N. A. MORJICKIAN.

The following statement by Mr. Morjickian has been forwarded to us by Rev. Dr. Brown, of the Turkish Missions Aid Society:—

"I was born in 1863, under the shadow of the historic Mount Ararat. When eight years of age I was taken to Broussa, where my father, being in business, came in contact with the Congregational missionaries, and was converted through and through. Without my knowledge, my father had dedicated me to the Lord, and spent many midnight hours asking our Heavenly Father to accept me. It was through one of these earnest pleadings that I abandoned the shoemaker's bench and went to the Mission High School in Bardezag in 1878, to seek an education for future usefulness among my own people. All these years the bitter persecutions which my father underwent made Protestantism somewhat repulsive to me. However, while pursuing my studies in Bardezag, I was saved with a full salvation, my soul was satisfied, I had peace which passeth all understanding, and I lost all fear of persecution.

"The storm began, and trials and temptations appeared on every side. The storm is not over yet, but thank God I have a good anchorage in Jesus. In the summer of 1879 I was employed by the missionaries as teacher and preacher in Edingik, an out-station in the Broussa field. There I met the stern realities of life. A mere boy, yet the shepherd of a flock, I had not only to endure persecution against myself, I had to defend my people at the same time. Well, it was there I became firmly established on the 'Rock.' I have some bright trophies there. In 1881 I found myself on an English steamer, not knowing where she would land me, but I hoped, in America, as that is the country I had chosen for a higher education. The steamer came to Antwerp, and working my way from one vessel to another, I finally reached America. There I fought my way through college, completed a classical course in Ohio Wesleyan University, and took a special course in Boston University School of Theology. In 1890 I returned to Constantinople, and for the last two years I have been labouring in Armenia and Western Turkey.

"My present station is Banderma, a beautiful city on the south-west shore of the Sea of Marmora. I have been labouring there since last December, and the Lord has abundantly blessed our city. Last winter we had fifteen converts, all of whom applied for membership and were accepted. Many more are ready to fall in line. We have nearly 160 people attending our meetings, and if we had a larger chapel three or four hundred people would come to hear the preaching of the Gospel. The missionaries have made a generous offer of £400, but we need £250 more for the building. Our people are poor, and they are trying to have the church self-supporting.

"At present they do not receive any aid for the support of their pastor, and if they could have a church I am pretty sure that in the course of three or four years they will be able to comfortably support a pastor. God bless my people, and raise large-hearted friends for them to build the very needed church! My people are liberal and industrious, but they are reduced to the severest poverty by the Turkish government. In fact, they live and labour for government. I hope and pray that by God's gracious providence we may soon be freed from the iron yoke of the Turk, and then, instead of asking the help of others, we will help those about us."

Rev. Dr. Brown will be glad to hear from friends who desire to help in providing a place of worship at Banderma. His address is 32, The Avenue, Bedford Park, W. Mr. Morjickian, who is an exceptionally able and earnest young man, can only remain a few weeks in London, He will be glad to address meetings while here. His address is 4, Vincent-terrace, Colebrooke-row, Islington, N.

UNION HALL MISSION.—The work of this mission, conducted in five halls in very poor districts, continues, on the whole, prosperous; while in several of them it has been greatly owned of God. The open-air services have also been seasons of blessing to large numbers who gather from time to time in the different localities to hear the word of life. Tent meetings are being held nightly at Greenhill, Harrow, and the Lord is owning and blessing his Word there. Another tent has been erected at Willesden, and Gospel services are being conducted there every night. In a recent letter the director, Mr. Robert Bilke, says: "Our funds are at the lowest possible ebb. We trust that, in answer to many prayers, the Lord will now incline the hearts of his people to send us liberal help, that our work for Him, which has been so richly prospered during the past thirty-two years, may not be allowed to fail for lack of support." Mr. Bilke's address is, "Abergeldie," Greenhill-road, Harlesden, N.W.

For the Young.

THE CHILDREN OF THE CONGO.

Miss Reed, of Launceston, Tasmania, gives the following beautiful letter to children, written by a lady missionary, in the "Little One's Corner" in the Pioneer. We feel sure our young friends will be delighted to read it:—

My dear little friends over the sea,—

My thoughts oftentimes turn towards you; so different are you in so many ways to our little ones here in Balolo country! I am not forgetful of you indeed—some have blue eyes, some black, and some brown; then there are bright faces and sad ones, rosy cheeks and pale ones, fair hair and dark. Some are fond of romps, some quiet and fond of books, dolls, and pictures. Yes, I could write pages and pages of all I know about you, but now we are to meet for a chat about some other children—your black sisters and brothers here at Lulongo.

Do you think you could find me a pair of blue eyes among their number?

No; eyes all black, skin all black, hair all black—black and woolly, a mass of tiny, wee curls except when the mother plasters it together with a thickened oil, to make it pretty (as they think), plaited in different fashions, according to taste.

How dirty, you will say. Yes, but as a rule their bodies too are oiled, especially the babies; so dirty are their faces sometimes that it seems difficult for them to open and close their eyes. The little girls wear kirtles of dried grass, very pretty and cleverly made, just like a deep fringe. This, too, is all the dress worn by their mothers.

Are they happy, do you think, with no toys, no dolls, no pretty frocks?

Yes, as happy as the day is long. They gambol in the water like so many ducks at play, and many have little fishing-baskets, in which, close by the water's edge, they catch tiny fish. Then they have games among the plantains—hide and seek, etc. They love the hot sun, whose scorching rays would very soon kill us, had we no protection for our heads. At times they have play-fights—it is most amusing to see the little black boys, fancying themselves warriors, dancing about with their long sticks in imitation of their fathers with spears. But, I am sorry to say, the sham battle often ends in a real fight, for fight our little boys can, and do, with no ordinary amount of rout and noise.

What do they eat? you ask.

Well, they eat different things at different seasons—maize, pumpkins, mandioca, and fish. Some of the men hunt wild pigs in the forests, and at times they get elephant's flesh. This is a very great treat. The elephant is cut up into small pieces, and after being smoked or dried, the pieces are sold for one brass rod each. They have also palm-nuts, and with the oil from these the women pound leaves, boil them and make banganju. We often buy banganju and use it for a vegetable,

For months I have had school among these boys and girls; but they do not come to me, I go to them. Our school-house is simply a roof of palm leaves erected on poles, called a ngomba; but very often we have school under two wide-spreading trees. The children squat round me on the ground. They are fond of school. On reaching the first house in the town my own two little girls begin ringing their bells, which they continue to do until we reach our destination. As soon as the tinkling is heard a shout is raised—and out from among the grass appear one or two black figures, these joined by others all along the way.

The general greeting is "Mam' o'ya" (Mama, you've come!), and the little merry sprites dance and frisk and play the most amusing somersaults, pushing and jostling each other in a way I cannot describe. In the narrow path with high grass on each side they pass on in single file; then on reaching an opening (particularly when our big trees are in sight), they scamper off pell-mell, each one to choose the best place.

Oh, what a bobbing of heads and pattering feet and a flying of dust! Until I reach the assembled crowd, then there is a general scramble. Once seated and quiet, they fold their arms; but at first they did not like this and the imposed silence. They learn texts and hymns; I talk to them; then there is the A B C and syllables to be gone through.

Like home children some learn quickly, some very slowly. They are very fond of writing, but before the war time I had only ten slates for over fifty children—that in one school, in the other none. Will you, if you can, help a little?—slates and pencils, penny exercise books and penny lead pencils would be most welcome. Then, too, if some of you have coloured pictures of the parables and other Bible stories, will you not spare a few and send them out to us away here? Our children here have no idea of the people and things of other lands, and are most interested when they have something to look at. I know, dear children, that many of you give your dolls and other toys unselfishly to poor suffering little ones, in hospitals and other homes—and Jesus sees, and is pleased. Well, suppose you ask some other boys and girls, who have not thought of sharing their pleasures, to think of our heathen little ones. Hundreds, thousands in Balolo land live and die with no thought of anything save their mandioca and fish.

Dear children, you who love Jesus, begin to work for him now. As little ones you cannot leave your homes in order to work for Him, but you can do much, and you can pray to Him to send teachers to tell the dark people of Balolo of his love and salvation. I am often surprised by the strange questions put to me about Jesus, and about heaven; both old and young are curious to know if there is plenty of food there. They are very fond of hymn-singing, and learn quickly. If you have such pictures as "The Good Shepherd carrying the lamb," the "Sower," the "Ten Virgins," etc., and can spare them for my little ones, dear to Jesus, I think you will know where to send them.

If any of you bigger boys and girls would like to know more about the Balolo children, or people, I shall be glad to reply to any letter; happy to hear from any of the "children."

Affectionately your friend,

Maggie A. Dalgarno.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Reports from Workers.

PENMAENMAWR.

The attendance at the first beach meeting was very good, and subsequent ones have shown no falling off. Being short-handed, we did not attempt more than the two morning meetings until this week. We were obliged to hold the meeting on Sunday afternoon in the Presbyterian Church, on account of the rain, and a very small number attended. Wet weather also kept the Monday morning meeting small, and by hindering its due advertising, prevented all but a faithful few from being present at our first boys' meeting that evening. The daily Bible readings are held this year as usual, with an average number of between twenty and thirty, mostly ladies.

RHYL.

Sunday, August 7, being very wet we were compelled to have our afternoon service in the new Grand Pavilion, a splendid building capable of seating 1,000 people. It was very well filled, On Tuesday evening we had a Penny Service. This was our largest week evening meeting. On the whole, the services this year are larger than ever. On Wednesday we had athletic sports. There were a large number of events, and many entries for each. Then we had a tea and meeting for schoolboys in our rooms at 6 o'clock, a good number coming, and finished up an intensely busy but very happy day with football on the foreshore. Sunday, August 14, was a red-letter-day. In the afternoon, we had quite the largest service we have ever seen here. It was estimated that more than 2,000 were present. In the evening we held a temperance meeting in the Town Hall, which was crowded. Twenty-six new pledges were taken, and £14 collected for the work.

EASTBOURNE.

We began here on Thursday, August 4, and were favoured with lovely weather throughout the week; the attendances have been very good, sometimes over 300 children present and some 400 adults. St. Paul's Church was crowded on Sunday afternoon, and the parents' meeting in the evening was capitally attended and felt to be a very solemn time. The prayer meeting has been taken on two occasions by the Rev. G. Harford Battersby, and this morning an old friend was present. Rev. T. Hamilton, of Trinity College, Cambridge. The lady workers are doing their utmost, and have been much encouraged, although the field of labour here is very great, and there are many counter attractions on the beach. But we are full of praise, and expecting to see greater things than these.

BRIDLINGTON QUAY.

We began work here on Monday, which was a "pouring" wet day, but notwithstanding this, the Wycliffe Rooms were well filled with children at the 11 o'clock meeting. The prayer meeting was also very well attended, and we had a nice talk upon our motto for this year's work, "There they dwelt with the King for his work," 1 Chron. iv. 23, and "I will surely go forth with you Myself also," 2 Sam. xviii. 2. Tuesday morning was cloudy, and we thought to be indoors again, but just at close of prayer meeting it cleared up, and we had a capital meeting in the children's corner; we gave out 1,200 hymn sheets, and the people "received us gladly." Wednesday was a lovely morning, and we had a splendid gathering of fully 1,500 and the deepest attention.

WORTHING.

We commenced our work here on Sunday afternoon, July 31, with a bright and happy gathering in the Assembly Rooms. The attendance and interest shown by both young and old, at the meetings on the beach, is most encouraging, and at the Lantern service the crowd was very big, and all were most attentive. Although but short notice was given, seventy-two lanterns were brought, and an address given on "Shining for Jesus." Indoor meetings for boys and girls, separately, are being held, and in this way we are enabled to get into closer touch with the children, and have already been cheered with encouraging results.

SOUTHEND.

We have had large gatherings of children and friends, sometimes numbering between three and four hundred, since the holidays began. Many have expressed their great thankfulness for the benefits received at such services, and we have had very happy times with the dear children, so that it is earnestly hoped the meetings may be continued for a week or two longer. I am prepared to go on so long as I have strength enough to speak.

LLANDUDNO.

The seaside services here began on Saturday evening, August 6. The next day, Sunday, proving very wet, the first children's service was held in the Presbyterian Church, where a good number of old friends and new assembled, and much enjoyed the happy service. Monday morning was also wet, and consequently nothing could be done out of doors, except that a hymn was sung on the beach, which served to gather the young people together, and a procession was then formed to the schoolroom, which was well filled. On Tuesday morning the weather proved beautifully fine, and after the prayer meeting it was possible, for the first time, to hold the morning gathering on the beach. The rest of the week has gone in the same way. A notable feature of the work is the great number of boys who come round.

SEASIDE SERVICES, 1892.

Lights and Shadows of Mission Work.

No. VI.

If he is really about his Master's business, the Missioner finds opportunities for service, even in his hours of recreation, the results of which, in a coming day, will probably be found to tell as much to the glory of God as those which have followed from the pulpit exhortation.

My young fellow-missioner and I had gone to B—— with our "Gospel Tent." The weather was windy, and awfully cold. The site chosen for the tent (no other could be had) was far from a good one. The congregations were not so large as had been expected, and the Mission began under gloomy auspices. All we had to cheer us for the first night or two was the earnest sympathy of the vicar and his wife, together with the prayers of a believing people.

"We must seek to do a little work between times, M——," said I; so the next day we went off for our walk with our eyes open for what might present itself. We were soon passed by a worthy gentleman, who seemed, like ourselves, to be out for a "breather." Catching him up again, I made an inquiry about some public works we were nearing.

"Are you strangers in the town?" he asked.

"We have come down with that 'Gospel Tent' over there."

"Oh, you are the men, then, who go about making people mad."

"A blessed madness, sir, is the madness of salvation."

"Money, sir, money."

"You are rather out of it there, my friend, as we never take anything beyond what we are actually out of pocket. But may I give you a bit of information? I have been knocking about the world for more than forty years in all kinds of company, and yet I have never found a man more ready to insult unoffending strangers than yourself. You lack the power, or you have the will to burn the servants of Christ at the stake, as your fathers (for I know now what you are) burnt ours in Henry's and Mary's days."

"I lack the power, do I? I suppose I am physically stronger than either of you." It became evident that he wanted to wrest my words for a personal quarrel.

"Don't make any mistake in the matter, sir. I am physically stronger than you, and my friend here, an old Cambridge athlete, is perhaps stronger than either of us."

He gave a glance towards my companion, and so far believed my words that he dropped the physical strength question from that moment. Still, he showed no disposition to leave us, but went on to tell us that he knew what men like ourselves would teach.

"You will tell people," said he, "that they MUST be born AGAIN, unsettling their faith and minds alike. Of course, we are born again in holy baptism."

"The baptism birth of Simon Magus was not worth very much to him, was it, though he was baptized by the hands of Philip? It gave him no part or lot in Christ, but left him in the gall of bitterness and the bond of iniquity, if Simon Peter has told us the truth."

He shirked further discussion on that subject, and went on to the doctrine of justification by faith. It had never been heard of till the days of Luther.

"But I thought that 'The Gospel of John,' 'The Acts of the Apostles,' and 'The Epistle to the Romans,' were received as canonical by your 'Church of Rome'; and surely THEY were written before the days of Luther." I quoted John iii. 16, Acts xiii. 39, and the striking words of Rom. iv. 5: "To him that worketh not, but believeth on Him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness."

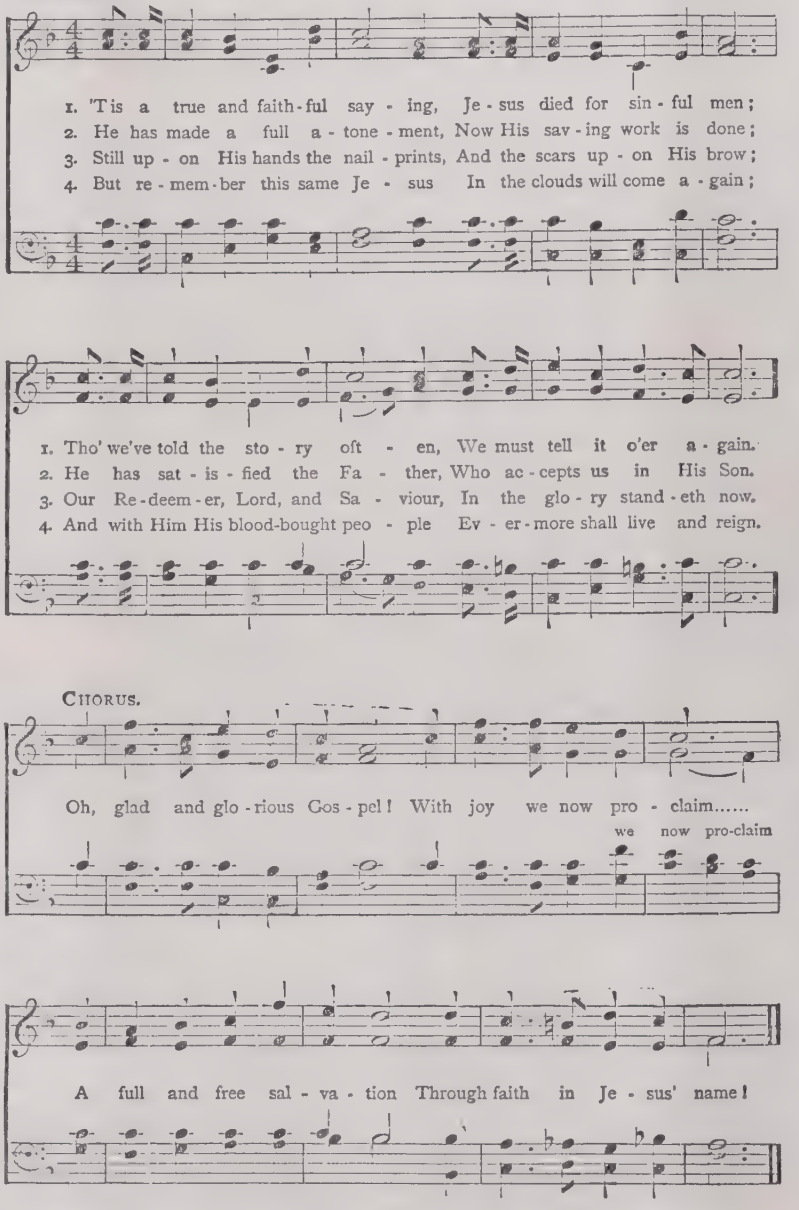
His whole manner changed. He saw that we noticed it, and begged us to set aside the idea that we had shaken him in his views. But I felt the time had now come to apologise for any manifestation of temper I had shown. "You couldn't, friend," said I, "have touched me on a more tender point than when you hinted at physical violence. It was like stepping on an old bull-dog's toes; and there was a time in my life when the game you would have started might have been a dangerous one to yourself. However, I sinned, for 'the servant of Christ must not strive,' and I acknowledge my fault."

"It is from me an apology is due; not from you to me. You must allow me to subscribe to the expenses of this Mission." And, with the words, he drew from his pocket both gold and silver. Of course, we could not take it, though he persisted in offering it with much earnestness. Seeing that we were firm, he gave each of us a cordial shake of the hand, and, with the words "God bless you both," went on his way.

We made our way to to the vicarage, and, together with our friends there, besought God to send him to the night service. Would he come? I was on the look-out for him, and caught sight of him sidling down towards the tent. He reached the end, peered in through the canvas, and in another minute was listening to the dear Gospel my fellow-missioner was preaching.

The next day, encouraged by the measure of success God had attached to our efforts, we sought to draw into conversation a very venerable-looking gentleman we met while taking the same walk. We found him as cordial as the other had been quarrelsome; but we had not interchanged many sentences before he calmly informed us that he was "a philosophical atheist." This was nothing to us, as we both knew that all unconverted souls were alike dead, and that God could just as easily give life to one as to another. I had been an infidel, too, myself, and it was a rather pleasurable exercise to go over the points raised in argument. Thus we talked on till we reached a rail fence, where I proposed that we should stop and have a word of prayer. This rather riled him. He was no hypocrite, he told us. Neither were we; and so I prayed, my friend prayed, and then we resumed our conversation. "Well," said the old man at last, "you would scarcely believe it, but you have before you a man who has often preached what you call the Gospel, both at Oxford and Cambridge, and you are almost the only Christian men from whom I have had a kindly word since my change of views. I thank you both from my heart." "Nay, friend," I replied, "don't thank us; read Isaiah xliv. 22, mark the end of the verse, and act accordingly." I felt no more was to be said, and we turned on our way.

We had now met a Romanist and a "Philosophical Atheist." It was our turn, next, to meet an "Anglo-Israelite," in the same riverside path. But with him we could do nothing, and the remembrance of our conversation makes me plead with those who hold this theory, as believers in New Testament teaching, to be most careful lest, in advancing their views among the illiterate, they may leave men and women with a belief that they are Israelites, but with no belief in Christ as a needed Saviour. Whoever had wrought the mischief, some one in that neighbourhood had been sowing the pernicious notions held by this poor man so plentifully that we afterwards found there were numbers substituting for the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ what they called "The Gospel of Identity."



To finish this paper, I may say that God afterwards gave great blessings with "The Tent Services," and I heard but last year of five in one family who had been brought to Christ through them. One incident I shall never forget. From one part of the tent an old woman prayed, "Lord, for Christ's sake, save my son." From another, a young woman besought God to save her poor brother. On one of the Friday nights of the mission, I noticed a very happy trio seated near our preaching platform. There was an old woman, a young woman, and a young man. Prayer had been answered to the full. It was the mother, the sister, the son and brother.

The "Rob Roy" Holiday Home.

ANOTHER new seaside holiday home has been opened by the Council of the Ragged School Union, and in memoriam of the late Mr. John MacGregor, whose lifelong labours on behalf of ragged schools we sketch on another page, the name of "Rob Roy" has been given to it. This new home is situate on the Margate-road, Ramsgate, and is described as admirably adapted for the accommodation of forty boys or girls, who will form the parties entertained within its shelter. The house is well built and airy, there is a fine playground and orchard, and altogether seems most suitable for its new purpose.

On Wednesday week it was opened, the Mayor of Ramsgate (Alderman Blackman) presiding at the meeting and speaking words of welcome and sympathy. Many of the local clergy and ministers were also present.

Interesting details were given of the work of the Ragged School Union and of the Holiday Home Movement by Mr. C. Steinitz, while Revs. J. B. Whiting, J. Benson Evans, and J. Bailey spoke.

Mrs. Hannah Knight having declared the Home open, Mrs. Watts and Mrs. Jonathan Lynn added a few earnest words explanatory of the operations of the Ragged School Union Holiday Homes.

THE LATE

MR. JOHN MACGREGOR, M.A.

"ROB ROY:" THE RAGGED SCHOOL AND OPEN-AIR PIONEER.

AS in the North, men mark with deepening interest the calling home one by one of the few remaining "pre-Disruption worthies," so in recent years have we in the South sorrowfully noted how the pioneers of home missions, the noble spirits who rallied round the great Earl of Shaftesbury, in his labours on behalf of the poor and perishing, the survivors of the memorable Revivals of 1859-60, are one after another passing to rest in the presence of the King. To this goodly company the distinguished traveller, author, and Christian worker who forms the subject of our present sketch belonged.

JOHN MACGREGOR, whose family came of a famous Scottish clan, was born at Gravesend, on January 24th, 1825. His father, General Sir Duncan MacGregor, was at that time, Major in the 31st Regiment, and was then under orders for India. Within a few weeks of his birth, his parents, taking the infant with them, embarked in the Kent for the East. How that ship caught fire in the Bay of Biscay, and how 577 were saved out of the 642 persons on board, has often been told. Before the Cambria, the rescuing vessel, hove in sight, the following last message had been written by the father and placed in a bottle, ready to drift ashore:—

> The ship the Kent, Indiaman, is on fire. Elizabeth, Joanna, and myself commit our spirits into the hands of our blessed Redeemer. His grace enables us to be quite composed in the awful prospect of entering eternity.

Instead of being thrown into the sea, the bottle in which the paper was placed was left in the cabin, and more than a year and a half later it was picked up off the Barbados, between three and four thousand miles away. The infant John MacGregor was the first to be taken on board the Cambria, which, as a little craft of 200 tons, had some difficulty in finding room for an accession to its company of 577 terrified people. One by one, as the fire reached them, the loaded guns went off, and soon after the captain, the last man to quit the deck of the Kent, had left, the powder magazine blew up with a deafening report.

Within two months of this escape, the baby boy came under the notice of the venerable Hannah More, who presented a pair of shoes of her own knitting, with the verse:

> Sweet babe! twice rescued from the yawning grave,
> The flames tremendous and the furious wave;
> May a third life thy spirit meet,
> Even life eternal at thy Saviour's feet.

The bottle with the paper, the shawl in which his mother wrapped him on that eventful day, and the pair of shoes knitted for him by Hannah More, were among the collection of relics treasured to the last by Mr. MacGregor.

In the following year, in command of the 93rd Highlanders, Colonel MacGregor was stationed in Nova Scotia; and the influence which the Christian soldier was able to exercise over his men was as gratifying as it was striking. All attended divine worship, each possessed a Bible, and a copy of the Scotch version of the Psalms; and as many as 700 of the company might have been seen at one time partaking of the Lord's Supper. In the year 1838, the Colonel became Inspector-General of the Irish Constabulary, and his son, who had been at school at Canterbury, spent some time at Trinity College, Dublin, whence he removed to Trinity College, Cambridge. At the English University, he won two first classes, and was a wrangler. He took his degree of M.A., and became a member of the Inner Temple, being called to the Bar in 1851. Even while at Cambridge he developed the same combination of high Christian character, with energetic participation in every manly pursuit for which he was all through life distinguished. A diligent teacher in the Jesus Lane Sunday School, never ashamed to be known as a decidedly Christian man, and ever seeking to influence others for good, he yet entered keenly into athletics, and, taking up boating with a wonderful zest, won his reputation as oarsman, and rowed in the First Trinity Eight. He visited Paris during the Revolution of 1848, and in the following year made a long tour in Europe, the Levant, and the Holy land. A little book under the title of Three Days in the East was the outcome of this, and was intended to illustrate Scripture customs and allusions.

In 1847 MacGregor threw himself heartily into the Ragged School enterprise, then but three years old, and became one of Lord Ashley's right-hand men. Engaging in the work of teaching, the new recruit caught the full spirit of the movement, and soon learned to use his pen effectively and well on its behalf. He remained on the council of the Ragged School Union to the last, although in recent and feebler years unable to take active part, and rendered for forty years most valuable and self-denying service to this great cause.

Besides, as one who knew him well records, there was one branch which he made peculiarly his own. The history of the origin and progress of the Ragged School Shoeblack Society is detailed by MacGregor's vigorous and humorous pen in the Ragged School Union Quarterly Record of October, 1878, and those whose privilege it was to be associated with him in its formation recall with interest those evening gatherings of the few young lawyers who, in the early part of 1851, used to meet in a small alley at the back of Coutts' Bank to assist in carrying out his scheme. The idea had suggested itself to MacGregor by his having noticed in foreign towns that persons were in the habit of getting their shoes blacked in the streets; he thought that foreigners coming over to the Great Exhibition of 1851 would require this want supplied, and that this might furnish an opening for boys frequenting ragged schools. As the result, in that year above thirty of these boys, each of whose histories had been carefully gone into, marched through the Great Exhibition in those red jackets with which we are now so familiar at various stations in the metropolis. The movement grew and prospered, and has been one of increasing success. The boys themselves were and are trained in habits of religion and thrift, and very many of them, after saving sufficient from their earnings, have from year to year emigrated to America or our own Colonies and afterwards risen to occupy responsible and useful positions.

The story of Mr. MacGregor's early labours in the open air, of his share in founding the Open-air Mission, and of his subsequent association with the devoted Gawin Kirkham, form also a deeply-interesting chapter in his life. His famous plea for open-air preaching, "Go out quickly," has been widely circulated by tens of thousands, and has done much to encourage Gospel testimony under the open canopy of heaven. It is noted by a writer in The Record that :—

In the course of his open-air discussions he came to be in friendly relations with one notorious infidel lecturer, and afterwards visited him in his own home when laid aside by an apparently fatal malady. Who shall say what may have resulted from such Christ-like sympathy? He always made a conscience of preparing very carefully for his addresses in the open air, and especially with reference to infidel arguments, feeling extremely the importance of doing so, and of conducting all such discussions and controversy in a spirit of candour, fairness, and accuracy.

Further, Mr. MacGregor was practically the founder of the Pure Literature Society, which has done good service in diffusing sound, wholesome literature, and in forming working men's libraries. While health permitted, he was also an active member on the committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society; he showed similar interest in the work of the Reformatory and Refuge Union, while he was also honorary secretary of the Protestant Alliance. In short, he was just the kind of colleague whom Lord Shaftesbury most highly prized, utterly unselfish, hard working, and open-handed in giving to a degree which made him an example to all.

So far we have confined ourselves to Mr. MacGregor's Christian service, but his familiar cognomen, "Rob Roy," was earned in another fashion, and this interesting phase of his life must be mentioned. He was, as many are aware, an adventurous canoeist, loving to traverse alone the rivers of our own and other lands. The experiences thus gained he published in a series of "Rob Roy" volumes, which attracted considerable attention, while he afterwards gave "Rob Roy" lectures, the profits of which were set apart for Christian work. In all his voyages he was never satisfied unless even his recreation was made to redound to the glory of God. When enjoying an excursion on lake, river, or sea, he always embraced the opportunity to circulate evangelical publications from which the people might learn the Gospel. Apart from this, it is almost impossible to over-estimate the enjoyment he derived from excursions which were often attended with perils such as would have cowed the hearts of less hardy adventurers. In a letter to Mr. G. Kirkham in January, 1869, he wrote :—

Just think, for instance, of my first day on this lovely Lake of Gennesareth. I sat in my Rob Roy in the centre of the northern part of the lake. The hills on shore were about three miles off on either hand. The air was balmy, like the finest June day in England. The sun shone, but veiled by a delicate contour of fleecy clouds. The water was blue, and without a ripple. The sounds of sheep bleating and streamlets gurgling were the only music; and there I read in my Testament John vi., following every incident by actually looking at the places mentioned. Finally, I went to the spot where the Apostles started in their boat, and I rowed the "twenty-five or thirty furlongs," which they had toiled through in the direction of Capernaum.

He had visited Greece and the empire of the Sultan when he was twenty-six years of age; he ascended Mont Blanc, and travelled through Canada and the United States. He appears to have also written interesting accounts of all his adventures, and while in America he gave a number of addresses. He worked well both with pen and pencil, and the proceeds of his work were given to philanthropic objects. Thousands of pounds were also realised for various Christian institutions by the "Rob Roy" lectures. The profits of one of his books relating to a voyage along the coasts of France and England were given to a fund which provides prizes for boys leaving various training-ships.

"Rob Roy" in one of his works boldly defends his practice of distributing evangelical literature and tracts. So far from foreigners resenting such gifts, they accepted them as kindly gifts which won their good opinion. Apart from his Christian character and zeal, he made his mark in literary and scientific pursuits of a more general kind. Occasionally he read papers before the British Association and the Society of Arts; and he made some extensive researches in reference to the history of the steam engine. It is, however, as a friend of poor children, and of the poor generally, that "Rob Roy" will be remembered. When he became a member of the first School Board for London he gave up his law practice in order the more thoroughly to do what was needed. Who will supply his place at the Council Board of the Ragged School Union, Open Air Mission, and other institutions with which he was associated?

Some years ago Mr. MacGregor married a daughter of Vice-Admiral Sir J. Crawford Caffin, who survives her husband.

Rev. W. T. McCormick, of Brighton, writes as follows, summing up his career :—

His life was a remarkable one, in some respects perfectly unique. He was a distinguished traveller, a self-denying philanthropist, a hard worker, and a devoted Christian. As a man of iron will, firmness, and intrepidity, he was able to accomplish much that other men would not even face. He was a fascinating companion, and an attractive public speaker and lecturer. His able discussions with infidels and others were well known some thirty years ago. I have heard him discuss in the open air with the secretary and also with the treasurer of the "Secularists' Society" Sunday after Sunday, until both infidels were driven from the field. I have also listened to his able and successful debate, which lasted nine months, with a learned Roman Catholic of great power and distinguished parts. I well remember his taking me to visit an infidel—a writer, of no mean pretensions—who, in a serious illness, had been forsaken by his atheist companions, but whom "Rob Roy" had supplied with necessaries during his long affliction. This man afterwards became a true disciple of Christ. The amount of good that Mr. Macgregor was permitted to accomplish in public and in private during his life eternity alone can reveal.

We have before us, as we write, Miss MacGregor's letter to Mr. Kirk, penned within a few hours of her father's death. Although not written for publication, the following touching words may be quoted :—"Our precious father went home to glory yesterday evening." After three days' delirium followed by unconsciousness, "a gleam of consciousness returned, and he smiled so sweetly to us, and when mother spoke to him of going to be with the Lord, he said, 'I'll go to see Him.' . . . What a blessed exchange it is for him. Though the blank is so terrible to us, we would not wish him back for a moment."

THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR SOCIETY.

The Christian Endeavour Society, at Wellhouses, Mirfield, was started in September, 1891, among the working classes of the West Riding. For eighteen months there had been a steady stream of addition to the church (Moravian). The want was greatly felt of some organisation which should bind the young Christians more closely together, and be the means of helping them in the living of the Christian life amid the many temptations, moral and spiritual trials, and dangers which they meet with in their work.

When the principles of the Christian Endeavour Society were first explained to them, many were afraid of it, but now the testimony of all is that just those things which they specially dreaded have been the most helpful. It has taught them to pray not only in secret, but in public; and not for themselves only, but for others. It has taught them, as they often say, not to be content with reading their Bibles, but to study them, "comparing Scripture with Scripture"; and so a real love for the Word has developed itself, and during the dinner hour in the mills they meet to find texts and to discuss the topic for the next meeting. It has had a perceptible influence upon the strong ruggedness of the Yorkshire character, and brought more of the gentleness of Christ into many a life.

The willingness for work and self-sacrifice is beautiful. On Christmas day they gathered the old and poor and lonely together, and provided them with a tea and an evening's entertainment of sacred songs, etc. Saturday afternoons are their only holiday, yet they willingly give up the evenings of that day to going to hold cottage meetings with the sick or aged, sometimes at a distance of one or two miles. The Society has broadened their interests, not only as regards the immediate neighbourhood, but as to God's Kingdom generally, embracing support for the Bible Society and many special appeals from the Foreign Mission field. Of course, it is not much in itself that can be done, for we are all poor people, but if the Church generally gave in the same proportion as the Christian Endeavourers there would be no lack of means for every good work.

A very striking result has been that the love for entertainments of a loud and sometimes questionable character has disappeared. In place of this there is a genuine love for the C.E. meetings. One of the members wrote lately: "I have scarcely patience to wait for the next meeting," and another: "It is the happiest hour in the week, and I look forward to it with pleasure."

Before the Society was started the Church was a very self-contained and self-centred body, with but little actual influence upon the neighbourhood, except through the Sunday School. The C.E. Society has begun temperance work and cottage meetings, many of its members are engaged in tract distribution, and the flower committee is beginning to brighten many a sick room. The meetings themselves are a real stimulus, and as a minister I find it a positive refreshment to attend them, and to listen to the simple prayers of the young Christians, and to see how real and happy a thing the Christian life has become to them. I do not know of anything which has been a greater help to me in my work, or which is more likely to have an influence for good upon the Church in the future.

It accustoms the young people to mutual Bible study and united prayer, and thus paves the way for family prayers when they are married. It is teaching them that they must "work while it is day," and the response to the Master's call brings with it the joy of Service. The monthly consecration meeting is indeed a power and a help to many. What the society has been the means of doing here may be accomplished in every place, especially in the manufacturing districts, and our experience would be repeated that where it is put upon a high spiritual level and carried on with much prayer and in entire dependence upon the Spirit of God, there it will be an unmixed blessing both to the Church and the Sunday School, the ministry, and the members themselves.

THE HOSPITAL MISSION SHIP "QUEEN VICTORIA," belonging to the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, may be expected to visit Dover to-day (Thursday) and to-morrow, August 25 and 26. Friends interested in the mission should not lose this opportunity of going over one of the finest of its vessels. Mr. Hutchinson, editor of "Toilers of the Deep," &c., will gladly welcome visitors on board where a selection of useful articles, for sale for the benefit of the mission, may be inspected. The "Queen Victoria," it is hoped, will also visit Folkestone, Portsmouth, Weymouth, Torquay, Dartmouth, and Plymouth, before returning to the North Sea,

VISIT TO CHILLINGHAM.

Monday the 15th inst. was a day to be remembered at Chillingham Castle. Some months ago, a petition, signed by about 2,000 persons, of those living over a wide surrounding district, had been sent to Mr. Moody asking him to come to Chillingham and address the people there. Lord and Lady Tankerville were most earnest and hearty in their efforts to make the petition successful, and though the difficulties in the way seemed great, Mr. Moody was at length able and glad to say, Yes.

Much prayer and expectation preceded the day fixed for the meetings, and when Mr. Moody arrived from Newcastle, there was the prospect of an excellent day. Tents had been erected on the beautiful lawn in front of the castle, near the flower garden with its wealth of many-coloured blooms and sheltered by grand old trees, the growth of many generations. The view stretched away to the Cheviots on the one side, and on the other to the wooded slopes where are the famous wild cattle of which Chillingham is justly proud, as the only pure herd left in this country. The largest tent was for the meetings and there was another for refreshments, kindly supplied to the visitors between the afternoon and evening services.

A refreshing breeze, with sunshine, continued till about the hour of the afternoon meeting, and the people gathered in large numbers, filling the tent to its utmost capacity, and leaving many standing or sitting outside its open front. Mr. Moody, on his way from the railway station some miles off, was doubtful from the comparatively few houses he noticed on the way, whether there were people enough to make a meeting, but the crowd gathered from the neighbourhood as well as from Wooler, Alnwick, Newcastle, and even across the Scotch border as far as Kelso, quite dissipated his doubts. The farmyard near the castle was an interesting sight, with its vehicles of all descriptions, from the aristocratic carriage and brake to the humble plebeian long cart with its plank boards for seats, arranged over the open space. The horses and ponies stood in rows under cover of stables and sheds.

Just as the service was commencing, it seemed as if the day was to be spoiled. Dark thunderclouds gathered and the rain fell in heavy showers, making those outside the tent flee to the castle and the trees for shelter. Singing was begun, however, followed by prayer, and soon after Mr. Moody began his address the rain passed off, and the sun shone forth again. Mr. Moody spoke at length, and with much power, from the words, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God," His address was listened to with rapt attention, and produced a deep impression.

Many of the visitors left immediately after the meeting, having considerable distances to go, but there were still at the evening meeting enough to crowd the tent, and leave some with only standing room outside. After singing and prayer, Mr. Moody, who seemed as fresh as ever, delivered a most solemn and touching address, starting from the words of Mark vi., 20: "And when he heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly." The denunciation of Herod's sin, and of the sin of any present who might be like Herod, or in any way holding out to sin, and thus shutting themselves out of heaven, was very striking, and the earnest appeals which followed, copiously enforced by telling incidents in Mr. Moody's experience, must have gone straight to many a heart. At the close of the meeting, when the names and addresses of those seeking Salvation, or, at least, desirous of knowing more of the way of life, were taken down, Mr. Moody promising to send them a book he has prepared for such, it was evident that not a few were deeply affected. The Great Day will doubtless show that some were born again of the Spirit to eternal life.

Those who belonged to the Castle and its immediate neighbourhood had a rich treat on the following morning, when a number met again in the tent for praise and prayer. Mr. Moody read the ciii. Psalm, and commented specially on the first five verses, emphasising the words forgiveth, healeth, redeemeth, crowneth, and satisfieth.

At all the meetings, solos were sung with much pathos and clearness of utterance by Mr. Burke, who also led the singing, accompanied at the harmonium by Lord Bennet. Soon after the meeting, Mr. Moody left for Sunderland, where he had to speak in the afternoon. W. G.

THE SUNDERLAND MEETINGS.

The two days' visit paid by Mr. Moody last week to this busy trading port proved fruitful in interest in many ways. The services were held in the Victoria Hall, and at the first gathering, on Tuesday afternoon, Mr. Moody made special reference to the fact that some nineteen years ago, on his first visit to England, he began his work in Sunderland, where Mr. A. A. Rees gave him the warmest of welcomes.

In the evening an enormous gathering assembled in the hall, which was densely crowded long before the hour fixed for commencement. The choir, organised by the Y.M.C.A., led the service of song admirably, while Mr. J. H. Burke sang several beautiful solos.

Mr. Moody addressed the assembly from Gal. vi. 7, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked. Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." He began by saying there was a class of people who thought because they did not believe a thing that thing was false; but truth would stand, although people did not want to believe it. Referring to the traffic in strong drink, he said that if they planted public-houses they would have drunkards. He would challenge any man who had sold whisky for twenty years whether he had not got a skeleton in his own family. He loved the publicans, but he hated their business with a righteous hatred, because it was destructive of soul and body. It was making the homes of England like hells. He again challenged anyone who had been in the business twenty years whether he had not got a drunken son, or son-in-law, or relative of some sort. If there were any publicans there that night he advised them to get an axe when they got home, smash the casks, and run the iniquitous stuff down a sewer. He would sooner starve than go to meet his God with the blood of souls upon him. Property-owners who let their property for the sale of whisky were as bad as the whisky sellers. If such people were church members let them either get out of the church or out of the business.

Mr. Moody gave his address on "Prayer" to a large audience on Wednesday morning, while in the afternoon and evening of Wednesday great Gospel meetings were held. Inquiry meetings, largely attended, were held in Bethesda Chapel hard by. The feeling of those engaged in the work is that God has used this short mission to the conversion of many sinners, and the restoration of wanderers.

THE SOUTHAMPTON CAMPAIGN.

Mr. Moody left Sunderland on Wednesday night, spent Thursday with his family in London, and travelled down with them to Southampton by the 5 o'clock express. His secretary was a little concerned on going to the Southampton West Station at 7 o'clock to find no Moody in the train. From inquiries of the guard, however, it appeared that he had gone on to the Docks Station, and when 7.30 arrived and there was no sign of him either at the hotel or at the Skating Rink, where the audience were waiting, it looked as if he was going to break his record. The meeting was advertised for 8 o'clock, and it was pouring "cats and dogs." At last, however, Mr. Moody appeared at the hotel, and sent word asking Lord Radstock to give out the opening hymn, and call on Rev. Mr. Jacobs (vicar) to engage in prayer. Before the clock had finished striking the hour Mr. Moody was seen ascending the platform.

It is quite proverbial how seldom he fails to be "on time," considering the number of trains on which he is dependent. Happily on this occasion his hotel was not more than 200 yards distant, for the rain was coming down in sheets, and it is an open secret that an umbrella is not one of the articles included in the evangelist's wardrobe.

The meeting was, of course, small compared with what it would have been had the weather been favourable. Those who did come were amply rewarded. Mr. Moody himself says he always likes to meet an audience that will come out on such a night. They must be in earnest. His address was to Christians, "The work of the Spirit."

In giving out the notices, Mr. Moody remarked, "Some will be surprised at there being no service on Friday night. Well, that's the last night my wife and family will be in England, and I am going to spend it with them." Mrs. Moody and the family left on Saturday by the Augusta Victoria for New York. C. F. D.

Our Special Correspondent writes:—As soon as it became known that Mrs. Moody, with her daughter and younger son, were to sail for New York by the Hamburg-American line, on the 20th inst., and that in all probability Mr. Moody would visit the town to see them off, a committee was hurriedly called, and a warm invitation despatched asking him, if possible, to prolong his stay sufficiently to conduct a mission, however brief.

Accordingly four days were promised, and, although the notice was very short, the arrangements were carried through with considerable efficiency.

The building selected was the Skating Rink, on account of its size, as it was capable of seating over 3,000 persons. Its only drawback was its glass roof, through which on one occasion the lightning vividly played, and on others, especially on Sunday, the rays of the sun penetrated with such intensity that parasols, etc., had to be called into requisition! It was, however, well lighted and well ventilated, and, except in one or two portions, its acoustic properties were good.

A very excellent choir was in attendance, and the rich-toned singing of Mr. A. J. Mayers, of Wandsworth, who voiced the Gospel message in song, rang out with deep effect. On the platform were Lord Radstock, Major Evered Poole, and ministers of various churches in the town, as well as, on some occasions, Canon Barker, who was paying a brief visit to Southampton.

The audiences fluctuated somewhat, but were at all times very large. Some had expressed a conviction that the time of year and the shortness of the notice would make it impracticable to hold a mission at all. But the visit of the evangelist to our shores has demonstrated again and again during these months that the people are as willing, yea, anxious, to listen to the Gospel as ever, and will come out in crowds whatever be the weather or the time of year. And here they did listen as Mr. Moody preached with all the power that God gave him. Fearlessly he denounced sin in all its forms; faithfully he set forth the way of salvation; lovingly he held up to view the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world, as the only source by which deliverance can come.

Two meetings were held on Thursday, one Friday, one Saturday (owing to Mrs. Moody's departure), and four (with two "second" meetings) on Sunday. One of the most striking addresses was given at the early Sunday morning gathering, when the children of God were urged to acquaint themselves with the "Sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." Dealing with various sceptical objections to the authenticity of the Book, he ridiculed with fine sarcasm the impracticability of acting in everyday life upon the principle of "not believing what one cannot see nor understand." He drew special attention to the literal fulfilment of the prophecies uttered against Babylon, Tyre, Egypt, and claimed that the Book must have come from God.

But time and space prevent even a mention of the hundreds of good things he said. Suffice to say there was ample evidence that they found a lodging-place in many and many a heart; the full results will be made manifest "before the throne." He uttered the words, but God was the speaker.

One thing was noticeable. In exhorting the children of God how to live and work for Christ, he touched the secret spring of his own power—communion with God. The man is lost in the message; the ambassador is but the voice of the king. "As long as God can use me I will do his bidding; when He can use me no more I pray that He will lay me aside and put another in my place, that the work may go on." So he spake, so; we believe, he felt. Oh, that all workers were similarly pliant in spirit to the finger of God. G.

THE IRISH CAMPAIGN.

This week Mr. Moody begins a month's evangelistic work in Ireland. When he decided upon entering on the present campaign in Great Britain, it was his greatly cherished desire to revisit Ireland, where in past years his labours in the Gospel have been so richly blessed. The late general election intervened, and decisive arrangements had to be postponed. Now that the political stir has in a measure subsided, the Irish committees in Dublin and Belfast have brought matters to a point, and a month's services have been fixed; this is the limit of the time that Mr. Moody can give, as he has other appointments in England to fulfil before he returns to America.

The meetings held at Southampton are noticed above. The sands of the Sabbath had not long run out, when Mr. Moody was journeying up to London, in order to catch the Monday morning mail from Euston to Dublin, where he had a consultation with the Evangelistic Committee. Proceeding afterwards to Belfast, he took counsel with the committee there, which is arranging the meetings to be held in Ulster. The fixtures for the present week, commencing on Tuesday evening, are Londonderry, Strabane, Portrush, Coleraine, Ballymoney, and Ballymena. On Sabbath next the Belfast meetings will commence, and will continue through the week. The friends there have succeeded in securing the gigantic auditorium used for the great Ulster convention of politicians, held on the eve of the recent elections. The building, of which we furnish an engraving as it appeared at that time of the convention, is constructed to hold 12,000 persons. A serious drawback in connection with bygone visits to the Ulster capital has been the lack of a place for mass meetings. That obstacle will be thoroughly removed on this occasion. It is expected that a widespread interest will be awakened by the meetings in outlying places this week, and that great crowds will flock to the Convention Hall next week, not only from Belfast itself, but from the country districts around. The Irish Christians appear to be heartily united, and earnest in seeking to bring the people within the sound of the Gospel. We need scarcely urge on our readers everywhere to send up a wave of believing and importunate prayer to God that He would set the seal of success on this special effort, and so order the results that they should leave an enduring mark for good on the religious history of the sister isle.

We purpose giving detailed and special reports of the Irish meetings, and our readers may help us by circulating copies of the paper among those who are interested in the welfare of that distressful country. Nobody who heard the accounts of the Irish evangelism, given the other day at the Keswick Convention, can doubt that there is now a wonderful readiness in the minds of the Irish people, Roman Catholics not excluded, to the reception of the Gospel message.

We have heard that some English and Scotch Christians are to visit Ireland at this time for their vacation and give a helping hand to the evangelist and his fellow workers. That is an example worthy of imitation.

Mr. J. H. Burke, himself an Irishman, will accompany Mr. Moody and sing the Gospel, in the absence of Mr. Sankey. Mr. Wm. Moody, the elder son, accompanies his father in Ireland.

A large gathering of ministers and workers met in the Christian Union Building, Dublin, on Monday evening, and gave Mr. Moody a cordial greeting. Mr. David Drummond presided, and expressed, on behalf of Dublin friends, a strong desire that Mr. Moody should conduct a mission in the city. Mr. Fowler, Rev. Charles Inwood, Dr. Fletcher, and others pressed the same request. The evangelist consented to take a week's mission about the middle of September, if a large enough building could be obtained. It was resolved to take steps in this direction, and much satisfaction is felt at the prospect of the mission.

From Romanism to Christ.

A late Oratorian monk, Mr. Clement Maitland, thus describes his recent emancipation from the fetters of Romanism:—

I have just left the Church of Rome, and become through the power of God a Christian and a Protestant. My experience may be of interest to your readers, and perhaps be the means of awakening a slumbering Church, besides exposing the horrors and wickedness of Popery.

My father was a well-known Ritualistic clergyman of the Church of England, and rector of a pretty country village in Kent. In 1866, when I was about one year old, he resigned his living and joined the Church of Rome. Of course, I was received into the Church at the same time. Shortly afterwards my father became a Romish priest, and joined the Order of the Oblates of St. Charles at Bayswater, where he resided until his death, which occurred when I was five years old. At this time I was an inmate of a large Dominican Convent School in Staffordshire, and it was at this convent that my acquaintance with Romanism began. A Protestant relative of mine, an aunt, came to visit me occasionally, but as her visits were not liked by the nuns, a lie was resorted to, and she was told that I did not want to see her, and thus intercourse with my Protestant relations and the outside world was stopped.

At the age of fourteen I was transferred to the Oratory at Brompton, to commence my studies for the priesthood. I may observe that the Oratorian Order is the richest, the most powerful and zealous, and at the same time the most dangerous in England. Its special work is the perversion of England to the Papacy. Its ranks are made up from among the Ritualistic clergy and members of the Church of England, and no efforts are spared and no means neglected to bring about the end in view. Judging from results, its efforts are successful, for every week several perverts are received at the Oratory into the Romish Church. My daily work consisted of theological studies and a routine of religious services. My religious views were those of a bigoted Romanist. I implicitly believed everything the Church taught, and thought that those who were out of the Church were outside the pale of salvation.

At the age of seventeen I took (after serving a noviciate) life vows of obedience, poverty, and chastity, and became an Oratorian monk. All went on well until two years ago. I was about to be ordained priest (I had previously been admitted to the sub-diaconate) when I began to have doubts about the truth of my religion. I thought that in a few days I should be made priest—that I should, in fact, have the power to make my God and to forgive the sins of my fellow-creatures. The more I thought upon this wonderful power, the more I questioned its reality. My confessor told me that my doubts were from the devil, and at that time I honestly believed they were. I was much distressed in mind, and became more zealous in my religious duties and did severe penances. But all to no purpose, for my doubts increased, and I saw what a sham and a fraud the Romish Church was. I could believe nothing the Church taught, and so I became an atheist. Although in this state of mind for eighteen months, I had to go through a daily round of religious services, masses, litanies, offices, and other religious duties.

Last March, my superiors, in order to settle my doubts, and also to get me out of the way for a time, sent me in company with three priests on a pilgrimage to Rome and the Holy Land. For two months I was in the Franciscan Monastery in Jerusalem under surveillance. I need scarcely say that as I had found Romanism in England a corrupt, wicked, and superstitious system, I found it a hundred times more so in Jerusalem. For instance, a regular traffic, conducted on business lines, by which large sums of money are made, is done in the alleged holy places. After crawling on my hands and knees, and kissing various pieces of marble, wood, iron, and o[illegible] bones, said to be holy relics, I received a parchment, signed and sealed by the Latin Patriarch, giving me an indulgence and a pardon for all my sins for many years to come! I found the monasteries to be shockingly corrupt — laziness, drunkenness, immorality abounded. Although the monasteries in England were bad enough, yet in Jerusalem such immoral things were said and proposed to me that I was disgusted. I found the monasteries to be veritable Sodoms!

In the month of May I was taken to Nazareth en route for Mount Carmel, where I was to be put in retreat for a time. At Nazareth I found the whole city, with the exception of a handful of Protestants, given up to the worship of Mary. The cry of the Nazarenes was: "Great is Mary of Nazareth." Little or nothing was said about God or Christ. Some of the frauds that were done in order to impose upon the credulity of the people were shameful. For instance, the image of Mary near the alleged place of the Annunciation had two little lamps put into the head to make the Virgin's eyes appear to be alive. I was appointed to assist the brother whose duty it was to trim the lamps.

While at Nazareth I resolved to escape. I had clung to Romanism in the vain hope that some day my doubts would all vanish. But now I was determined to get rid of the intolerable system. I was beginning to lose my self-respect, and having to belong to a system that I did not believe in was hateful slavery. Therefore, one Sunday evening, instead of going to my cell, I secretly went to the Protestant (Church Missionary Society) native pastor at Nazareth. After a long talk with him I returned to the monastery, and remained there until Tuesday morning, when I went to see him again. He then gave me the address of an English clergyman of the Church Missionary Society at Acca, and advised me to see him. On going into the street I found that the priests had discovered my where abouts, and had set the Arabs against me. They were all very angry and very excited, and seemed as though they would carry me back by force to the monastery. However, I just made a run for life and liberty, and in due time arrived, feeling like a runaway slave, at Acca.

The missionary received me kindly, and at once directed my attention to the Bible, which had hitherto been a closed book to me. I told him that I was an atheist, and would have nothing to do with his religion. However, God by his Spirit led me to read the Bible, and then I saw Jesus as the only Way, the only Truth, and the only Life. I saw that the religion of Christ was something very different from the religion of the Pope. I was convinced of the truth of Christianity. I believed the Word of God, and to-day I am rejoicing in "the truth as it is in Jesus"—a new creature in Christ Jesus, a slave made free. Yes, free indeed, because the Son has made me free—made me "free to serve."

May 25, 1892, at Acca, was a happy day for me: for it was there I found rest, and peace, and joy in a personal, living Christ. Not a mere emotional feeling, but a joy-giving, blessed reality — something Romanism could not give me, simply because it knows nothing of it.

I ask you to praise God with me for having delivered me out of the power of unholy Rome, and bringing me to a knowledge of the glorious light and liberty and truth of the Gospel. I have had much persecution to put up with from the priests; but God is with me, and by his grace I am enabled to witness a good confession before men.

POOR IN CHICAGO.—Major Joseph Kirkland, the author of "Zury," in writing of the poor in Chicago, says: "The city has no locality given over to great hives of helplessness. . . . The tenement-house evil, as it is known in New York and London, shows almost no trace. . . . There is no Sailors' Quarter. . . . For depth of shadow in Chicago low-life one must look to the foreign elements, the persons who are not only of alien birth, but of unrelated blood—the Mongolian, the African, the Slav, the semi-tropic Latin."

The Troubles in Africa.

BISHOP TUCKER ON UGANDA TROUBLES.

Rev. H. E. Fox, of Durham, sends the following extract from a letter received from Bishop Tucker, dated Zanzibar, July 12, 1892:—"I send with this a letter which I have received from Sembera Mackay. It was the last letter which he wrote previous to his being killed in the battle of January 24. . . . The loss of Sembera Mackay is a great one. Humanly speaking, it seems irreparable. He was one of our wisest counsellors; a true-hearted servant of God, and a faithful friend. I grieve for him as for a dear friend. Mr. Ashe thus describes his death: 'Sembera died like a true-hearted valiant soldier, bidding his followers leave him to go to the assistance of their other friends. This they did, and he died alone. You will understand what his loss means to the Uganda Church.' In another account I am told that as he lay upon the ground, with his friends around him, he exhorted them to leave him and go to the assistance of their hard-pressed brethren. He added: 'God is taking my spirit.' These were his last words. May God raise up many such earnest souls for the liberation of heathen Africa!

"I have received letters from Uganda describing the events of January 24. They all go to show that Captains Lugard and Williams acted entirely in self-defence. It was apparent that the supreme moment had come. A decision had to be made whether England, represented by the Company and Captain Lugard, or the forces of misrule and superstition, were to prevail. It was evident that a life-or-death struggle was to take place. The question Captain Lugard had to decide was whether he was to allow himself and the English missionaries to be wiped out, or whether he was to fight when attacked with the strongest force at his disposal. Like a wise man he chose the latter alternative, and, in view of the impending battle, he served out to the native Protestant party a quantity of arms and ammunition. The attack was made by the Roman Catholic party on Sunday, January 24, with the result with which you are already acquainted. It seems to me from all I can gather from my letters that Captain Lugard had been patient in the extreme. Effort after effort was made to keep the peace, and when hostilities were on the point of breaking out, he seems to have done his utmost to protect the French priests. That these men should be permitted for two years to plot against the authority of England and the Company in Uganda is to my mind a scandal, and throws reproach on our forbearance. It would not have been tolerated by any other nation under the sun."

The following is a translation of a letter from Sembera Mackay to Bishop Tucker, dated from Namilembe, January 20, 1892:—

"My dear Sir, Bwana Mkubwa (Great Master)—I, your attached friend, who every day remember you, have written you this letter in order to send you my compliments. I am staying in the town of Mengo with all my Christian brethren. We are engaged in the work of our Lord in his Church, and have many people here whom we are teaching. But, Bwana Mkubwa, my friend, it is books that are not enough for the Uganda people who are being instructed here. However, I and all the Christians are praying to God for you that should you obtain his permission to come here to Uganda you would arrange matters with our brethren the Christians who are in Europe, and bring books, that many people may be able to read. Such are the compliments of me, your friend, "Sembera Mackay."

THE BATTLE OF MOCHI.

Rev. R. A. Steggall, of Mochi, Chagga country, who has been accused by the Germans of stirring up the natives against them, gives, in a letter published in the Times, a clear account of the Battle of Mochi, and of the events which led up to it. His statement fully vindicates him from the charges made. His whole and anxious care was attendance on the wounded and dying—both German and native. He sadly anticipates the renewal later on of the attack by the Germans, and laments the ruin of a Mission which has hitherto been greatly prospered.

The missionary's father, Rev. F. Steggall, gives the following explanation of the position of affairs:—"The state of that part of Eastern Equatorial Africa, under the German protectorate, appeared to be very unsettled; but my son hoped that any serious conflict with the natives might be avoided. Having resided nearly three years in Mochi, and having acquired during that time three of the African dialects spoken in those parts, his knowledge of and influence over the natives has been of the most satisfactory character, and, with only a few of his African boys, he has not been afraid to penetrate places, inhabited by natives, forty miles distant from his home, where a white man had never been seen. During the whole of the time that he has been in Africa, my son has never been in danger, as far as he knows, from any African native. No doubt, the simple medical and surgical aid which he has also been enabled to render, as well as a very gentle and winning manner, has done much to win their friendliness, or, indeed, more properly speaking, their affection. When my son received the official letter from Count von Bülow, without in any wise interfering, even in the slightest degree, in a manner that could by any stretch of imagination be deemed political, or even interfering, he called at the small German fort, manned by a few German officers and Nubian soldiers, and did all he could to remove suspicions which he felt were most unjustly harboured against the natives, and, indeed, against himself, from the fact that he was held in the greatest regard by the African chiefs and their escorts of the district. All the representations and the advice of my son, rendered to the Germans in a most loyal spirit as regards Germany, were in vain, and the sequel will be found in the account which follows this letter. The battle described has already been notified by telegrams in various newspapers, and various details have been copied from foreign sources. That my son, who was the only missionary then living in the district, furnished the natives with ammunition, or in any wise advised or aided them in the conflict with the Germans, is, I believe, wholly untrue. I regret that what appears to be only jealousy and suspicion should have brought about a crisis so detrimental to African civilisation; and that a work, so full of promise and so fraught with blessings, moral and physical, to thousands of poor Africans, should be threatened with extinction by the expulsion of the English missionaries from lands under the German protectorate."

NEW ZEALAND NOTES.

The friends who have been meeting each Monday at 186, Aldersgate-street, London, to pray for a Revival will be encouraged to learn that in distant Wellington a small band assembles each Friday to cry to God for the same blessing. The articles that have appeared in The Christian on this subject have greatly cheered and encouraged us.

Our dear old chairman, Mr. D. W. Virtue, went to Dunedin for a holiday, and the friends there arranged for him to conduct a mission. He writes:—"The first meeting on Sunday was largely attended, about 600 being present. At the next meeting the Lord was manifestly working, and about 200 remained to the after meeting—some of whom confessed Christ. We had a wonderful meeting last night, never before had anything like it, the hall being full; between twenty and thirty were anxious; there did not appear to be sufficient workers to speak to them all; over thirty young men remained behind to thank God for the great blessings; about 300 remained to the after prayer meeting; they seemed loath to leave."

There is much spiritual life and activity here; I attended two midday prayer meetings, conducted by a young clergyman, when a number of young men gave thanks for blessing received on the preceding day. There is a young men's mission here, numbering about fifty members, belonging to all the denominations. These meet on Saturday night for prayer, reading the Word; on Sunday they go everywhere preaching, distributing tracts, etc. They hold Gospel meetings in a large hall, and many have been led to confess Christ.

A fine work is also being done through Mr. Falconer (the seamen's missionary) and his associates of the Sailors' Rest. Numbers of sailors are every week brought in. There is quite a bundle of letters lying before me, as I write, from converted sailors thanking the friends and blessing God for what He has done for them.

Messrs. Rowland Edwards and Edward Klein have been delivering Gospel addresses throughout New Zealand, using their Gospel tent in the large towns; their labours have been greatly blessed in the conversion of many souls. They left for Sydney last week.

A BIBLE TOUR IN SPAIN.

I recently completed a long evangelistic and Bible tour, visiting every assembly in the four provinces of Galicia. We had the joy of seeing fellow-labourers in Carril, Sta. Eugenia, Marin, and Vigo. Some of these joined us in walking many a league selling Scriptures and speaking the Gospel.

Much persecution is being experienced. Rome has overshadowed the land with her agencies, and has wonderful skill in concentrating her power on any given spot where she hears of a farmer or fisherman who dares to receive us or our books. The Sta. Eugenia persecutions prove that, as of old, "He that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey." These dark surroundings but serve to make more manifest the light of the Gospel. A godly sister has just fallen asleep in Coruña who for sixteen years has been a light for God. Her "empty place" will be noted not only in the assembly, but also in the market, where her closed shop on Lord's Day spoke eloquently for so many years of her faith and self-denial. One remarked, "She has left a sweet savour behind her."

On Monday, July 25, I joined four colporteurs and Mr. White, of Marin, at the great feasts at Santiago. The authorities prohibited the sale, but we stood on the various roads well outside the city, and while the crowds of peasants and pilgrims passed by offered the Scriptures for sale. In this way 400 portions were circulated. After the feasts the colporteurs scattered, while Mr. White and I continued our tour, selling 140 Scriptures and visiting Monforte and San Clodio. Geo. J. Florence Medical Mission.

The first report of this work shows that the poor of the fair Italian city have highly appreciated the kindness shown them in the dispensary. Dr. Henderson writes:—"Our evangelistic services must be looked upon as a work of preparation, for hardly any of our patients have ever entered an evangelical church, and first hear the Gospel preached on coming to us. One patient, who needs only to come once a week, yet turns up on both days in order to attend the service.

"With feelings of deep gratitude we bear testimony to the valuable aid which has been so cheerfully and devotedly afforded us by Misses Flora Cox and Mabel Gurney. To their skill and never failing kindliness we owe in a large measure the success of our surgical department. We have secured the services, as district nurse, of an evangelical convert, an Italian, and a thoroughly sterling woman, who is entirely in sympathy with our work. The poor people like and trust her, for she has been one of themselves and understands their ways."

The address of the dispensary is Borgo Stella, 9, Florence. Mrs. W. J. Ford, 17, Grosvenor-crescent, Edinburgh, receives donations in Great Britain.

Congo Training Institute.

At a committee meeting held recently of the Congo Training Institute, Colwyn Bay, presided over by Alderman R. Cory, of Cardiff, it was resolved that an Industrial and Educational Institution, similar to the Lovedale Institution of the Free Church of Scotland, in South Africa, be established as early as possible on the borders of Zululand, and that Rev. H. T. Cousins, who has had thirteen years' experience in South Africa, be appointed superintendent of this branch of the Congo Institute, together with Rev. L. Ion Evans, of Cadoxton, Barry, Cardiff.

Mr. Cousins has accepted the appointment, and will shortly visit the larger cities and towns of Great Britain for the purpose of making known more widely the important work which is being done at Colwyn Bay under the direction of Rev. W. Hughes, also describing the plan of working in future in South Africa.

Increasing interest is being manifested in this missionary enterprise, and numerous friends are coming forward with donations to enable the committee to begin in good earnest this aggressive work amongst the heathen.

Gospel Literature on Troopships.—Rev. Francis Flynn, chaplain in the Royal Navy, writes:—"The Indian trooping season for 1892-3 will soon begin. Our ship starts September 24th on her first voyage, and during the six voyages of the season—three out to and three home from Bombay—we expect to have at least 9,000 souls, men, women, and children, on board. We are anxious this year, as in the past, to supply these 9,000 souls with sound Gospel literature, whereby not only to relieve the monotony of a tedious voyage, but also, by God's blessing, to sow the seed of life in hearts when more than ordinarily receptive. We shall be most grateful for such periodicals as The Christian, The Herald of Mercy, Sunday at Home, Leisure Hour, Good Words, British Evangelist, British Workman, and Gospel Trumpet. Leaflets are not so useful as booklets. Old books and controversial matter should not be sent. Parcels, prepaid, may be addressed to me as follows:—Rev. F. Flynn, H.M.S. Euphrates, Portsmouth."

Letters to the Editor.

THE SUPERSCRIPTIONS ON THE CROSS.

Dear Sir,—In your paper of Aug. 11 you refer to the the different versions given in the Gospels of the superscriptions on the Cross. Without in the slightest wishing to detract from the value of the line of defence so ably set up by the writer in your columns, may I be permitted to present another, which effectually disposes of the whole difficulty?

There are three apparently divergent versions, not four, for that of Mark xv. 25 is identical with that of St. Luke, xxiii. 38, "the King of the Jews." The one word added in St. Luke (Houtos, "this is") is really no part of the title, but is a mere finger, so to say, pointing to the Sufferer beneath.

(2) There were not only three languages used, but in all probability three different writers were engaged to transcribe the title into the several languages. In St. Mark and St. Luke we have probably the Latin version. Pilate jotted down Rex Judæorum ("The King of the Jews"); for the word "King" was the head and front of his offending—high treason against Cæsar. Then the soldier got the curt order —I, miles, expedi crucem (Go, soldier, make ready the cross), and two others of the different nationalities made free translations of the Latin.

(3). In St. Matthew xxvii. 37, we have probably the Greek version (Jesus, the King of the Jews). His personal name was added, and the flexibility of the Greek language gives a meaning to the name—Saviour or Healer (Iaomai, as the Hebrew Joshua also means).

(4). In St. John, xix. 19, we see the trace of Jewish malice in the insertion of "the Nazarene"—the obscure and ignoble impostor. Pilate would not allow the Jews to alter his original by inserting "that He said, I am King of the Jews." Accordingly in writing a version which few, if any, but themselves could understand, they added a word whose sting was apparent only to people of that nationality "the Nazarene."

In the three versions, we have thus the three titles in the different languages, varied by the three hands through which the title passed, but all three containing the original words insisted on by Pilate, "the King of the Jews."

So far from the plenary inspiration and absolute inerrancy of the Scriptures being affected injuriously by such variations, I contend strenuously that their authority is placed on a stronger and more immovable foundation. There were not only three languages used, but three different writers engaged, and the Evangelists with conspicuous accuracy have preserved faithful records of the three titles.

This solution first appeared in the writer's "Classical Revision of the Greek New Testament," Williams and Norgate. W. Millar Nicolson.

OPEN-AIR PREACHING.

Dear Sir,—In these days, when so many churches and chapels are being built, doubtless with the best of objects, I should like to draw the attention of your readers to the fact that there are many thousands of our fellow-citizens who attend neither church, chapel, nor mission hall, nor have they the remotest intention of so doing. Now, if this be true, may we not wisely question ourselves as to whether this state of things is sufficiently considered by the Christian public.

The Open Air Mission has this year sustained the loss of Mr. John MacGregor (Rob Roy), and Mr. Gawin Kirkham, the former the founder, and the latter one of the best beloved and ablest directors any society could be blessed with. Is there not, then, an important demand (marked, as it were, very specially by these and other serious losses during this year of our Lord) made upon Christians the wide world over to hold the Gospel banner high?

Literally, the forces that now take the field against our Lord and his anointed increase in these last days, both in rage and in volume.

For several years Mr. Bird, of the O. A. Mission, in conjunction with the Finsbury Park Y.M.C.A., has held very successful services on Sunday mornings outside the Manor House Tavern (a famous site), but on reaching this station in the spring our friend found the Socialist flag planted on the ground his company had previously alone occupied. We have been moved about by the police, who, by the way, have behaved exceedingly well under exceptional circumstances; but in consequence of increased excitement, as we were not inclined to leave the Socialists sole possessors of the spot, assemblies are now forbidden there, and thus a very desirable station has had to be surrendered.

An open-air service is now held in Finsbury Park on Sunday forenoons, where helpers are always welcomed. Satan's forces muster strongly here, and the Bible is most furiously assailed by an infidel every Lord's Day.

Perhaps the greatest centre for popular gatherings in this England of ours is Hyde Park. There Mr. Charles Cook, the well-known visitor of home and foreign prisons, has preached the Gospel with the most encouraging results for the past twenty-one years.

Standing upon Mr. Cook's platform and looking beyond the vast congregation by which we are begirt, who can describe the view, the outlying scene presents on a Sunday evening?

Here are to be found reciters, Socialist lecturers, Materialists, Gnostics, Secularists, and Spiritualists, dark fierce men of foreign mien, together with people in masked garb—infidels of all shades, Republicanists and Royalists, Rationalists and Reformers, Anarchists and Revolutionists, men and women of all ranks and many nations. As to processions, their name is Legion, and perhaps the most pronounced banner ever seen in the Park was the one in black letters on plain white ground, "We have no Master, neither God nor man." The harvest truly is great—may we not say far greater in our day, than when the cry was raised, "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by"?

Surely, there never was a time more than the present one, demanding that every one who considers himself to be a soldier of the heavenly King should use his best endeavours to keep the Gospel standard at the main.

It is most encouraging to discern that, amidst all the uproar and excitement as detailed above, the old, old story not only holds its own, but outrivals all others. The stones of science, or reform, which are offered to the people, never so eloquently by their varied advocates, are not in it when the Bread of Life is announced without money and without price.

The name of our Conquering Captain is still "Jesus, the name high over all."

May I, in concluding my perhaps too long letter, make an appeal to your readers for consideration and help, by prayer and support, as God may lay it on the hearts of his people, both as it concerns our great Open-Air Mission work in general, as also Mr. Chas. Cook's highly important work in Hyde Park?—I am, yours faithfully, B. Barry Wake.

CHRISTIANS AND CIRCUMSTANCES.

Dear Sir,—In your issue of the 4th, Mr. Grubb is reported as having said at Keswick:—"I know of no more dangerous downfall to a soul than to be guided by circumstances. The first thing is to get God's will on the subject," and to have made other remarks of a similar nature. Will he tell us who controls "circumstances" for the Christian, whether God, or the devil, or chance? And if it is God, as we surely are taught when we are told "all things work together for good to them that love God," why should God's control of circumstances be put into sharp contrast to his "will"? There is a distinction certainly between the worldly man being guided by circumstances, and a Christian definitely looking to God to guide him through circumstances; but Mr. Grubb does not point it out, and his utterances are, therefore, likely to cause stumbling to weak consciences. If it is such a "dangerous downfall" as Mr. Grubb says, then he himself experienced it when he waited at Gibraltar for the chain to stop the propeller before he felt sure that it was God's will for him to go on shore and hold a meeting.

Again, he tells us that we may "distinguish the voice of God from the voice of Satan" by doing as his friends did at Colombo, when they themselves chose beforehand the circumstances through which they wished God to guide them, and then asked Him to produce those precise circumstances and no other! I should not call this a "dangerous downfall," but certainly "dangerous presumption."

The first thing certainly is "to get God's will," and I heartily agree with Mr. Grubb in the conviction that we are to expect our living Master to give us directions by his "voice." The question is, How are we to recognise that voice for a certainty? I have just returned from one of the countries visited by Mr. Grubb, and I there found many very earnest young Christians—thank God—but some of them in the habit of defending an exercise of zeal without tact or discretion, which offended instead of winning outsiders, by the invariable remark "God told me to." Wild and terrible things have been in past ages done by those who thought they heard the voice of God commanding them, and if Mr. Grubb's teaching—as reported in The Christian—became widespread, would certainly be done again, human nature being what it is.

Is it not our duty to test intuition which we believe to be the voice of God to us, first by ascertaining whether it is in harmony with our Lord's recorded teachings; secondly, by seeing whether God opens out the way by the course of circumstances; and, thirdly, with great circumspection, putting it to the test of that reason which God has given us, I believe, just for this very purpose?

Dr. Elder Cumming's address appeared to me to be a very necessary supplement to Mr. Grubb's, for till Christians have learnt to obey our Lord's recorded words about "laying up treasure on earth," which is, in modern phraseology, "saving and investing," and other plain unmistakable commands, which it is the almost universal habit to explain away and render meaningless, I cannot see how they can expect any other "voice of God" to reach them at all. If the sheep will not follow the plain, loud call of the Shepherd, are they likely to be near enough to Him to hear his whispers?

I write this in thankful acknowledgment to God of the great blessing which has, through Mr. Grubb's preaching, fallen, and fallen lastingly, on many souls in one of our colonies, as I can testify from personal observation.—Yours obediently, Henry Bazett.

NEGLECTED PLACES.

Dear Sir,—Last October, you were kind enough to insert a letter from me entitled, "Neglected Places." This called forth the sympathy and interest of some friends, and a "Prayer and Information Union" was formed, having for its object to pray for and correspond with lonely and isolated workers in the foreign mission field.

We have now thirty members, but I feel sure that if the Union were better known, many other earnest Christians would join us. All the missionaries who have written to us appreciate it very heartily. The Secretary, Miss Mourant, West-street, Alresford, Hants, or myself, will be pleased to answer any inquiries. Yours sincerely,

E. D. Nicol, President.

INSTRUCTING THE YOUNG.

Dear Sir,—I read with much interest "A General Officer's" letter in your last issue. Some splendid catechisms have been published lately called "Definite Teaching for Old or Young." The series embraces the five following subjects:—"What is a Priest?" "What is an Altar?" "What is a sacrifice?" "What is the Church?" "What is Confession?" The first are sent post free, 6d. for twelve copies; the other four, 4d. for twelve. To be obtained from L. Liesching, Esq., 1, Queen's Park Gardens, Streatham Common, S.W. Another good handbook with a number of Bible references is "A Protestant Catechism," by Rev. B. Richings, M.A. This is published by Hunt, Barnard and Co., 20, Blandford-street, Baker-street, W.

Many parents, and those interested in the young, will hail with delight the Girls' Protestant Union, just started by Mrs. Arbuthnot, of Plawhatch, East Grinstead, Sussex. It is a branch of the Women's Protestant Union, and divided into two sections. Section A includes girls from ten to fifteen years old, section B those from fifteen to eighteen. Monthly letters are sent to members of both sections. The subscription is 6d. a year, and a card of membership is sent to each member. Trusting that many will be stirred up to put heart and soul into definite evangelical teaching to the young of all classes, believe me, yours truly,

A Member of the
"Women's Protestant Union."

Sir,—I am about to publish a little book to meet the need specified by a "General Officer" in your last issue. I have often been asked to prepare such a book. I have a very strong feeling, based on long experiences of Romanism, that the closer we keep to Scripture in our controversy the better. This has been my great object. "It is written," or "It is not written," is my guide.

I wish Christian friends who may read this letter would write to me, so that I could give them some information, which I cannot give publicly, about what I am trying to do for the conversion of Romanists. Surely it is a supreme duty to be up and doing. The Romanist papers this week are jubilant at their success in having the Pallium given in England, and have large bills out headed, "England is now a Catholic country." May God help the coming generation, and may the present generation save themselves from complicity through indifference, if not in act, with the powers of darkness.

M. F. Cusack.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

BY REV. F. B. MEYER.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 28.—NUMBERS XIV.

It is not easy to withstand a whole people. Only they can do it who are fully devoted to the Lord, as Caleb and Joshua were. But when once a man has really seen the face of God, he cannot be daunted by the opposition or frown of men. We would not fear their fear, or be troubled by their threats, if once we had learnt to sanctify Christ in your hearts as Lord. How apt we all are to wish that the success of the Lord's work might in some way be identified with ourselves, with our name and fame. There is a kind of satisfaction when the river of God's fulness runs down the channel of our cutting, even though the cause of God as a whole suffered by it. But there was no trace of this in Moses. He felt that there could be no joy or satisfaction in becoming the progenitor of a great nation, if God's honour were in the slightest degree tarnished. At all costs that must be conserved, and he would rather be consigned to oblivion himself than that one jewel of God's glory should be imperilled. Oh, blessed absorption in the will and cause of God! And that intercession, how like to Christ's! God's suggestion only brought out the loyalty that lay hidden in that noble heart, perhaps many a trial is permitted to come to us for no other reason than to bring out what He sees to be within. Let us take heed lest unbelief in God, in his ability to save and keep us, have the same effect as in the case of Israel, shutting us out of the blessed heritage of rest.

MONDAY, AUGUST 29.—NUMBERS XV.

In the midst of the history of Israel this chapter is interposed, so full of practical direction as to their devotional life, as if to remind us that there must be an equal attention given to the altar as to the camp, to the life of the soul as to the incidents of daily business, to the mountain oratory, as to the work for man in the valley. Meat and wine were to accompany the burnt sacrifices, as if there were a foreshadowing of the thought that each act of self-denial is only possible in proportion as we eat the flesh and drink the blood of the Son of Man; and the more we feast on these, the more we can offer and present ourselves a living and acceptable sacrifice. It is very sweet to notice the provision made for sins of ignorance. There must always be so many things left undone which we ought to do, that we are gladly reminded that there is a provision made for the forgiveness and putting away of sins like these in our great Sacrifice. But the distinction is wide and ineffaceable between these and presumptuous sins, the unwitting sinners and those that sin with a high hand. Stone everything that would infringe on the rest of heart; and ask the blessed Holy Spirit, whose special promise it is to bring to our remembrance the Lord Jesus, that He would do for us that which the cord of blue was meant to do for Israel, namely, to keep us in mind of the Lord, and of our obligation to be holy unto Him.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 30.—NUMBERS XVI.

"Blessed is the man whom Thou choosest, and causest to approach unto Thee, that he may dwell in thy courts." Oh, that the Lord would so put his Holy Spirit upon us as to show that we are his, and that we are welcome to approach into his inner shrine. That which these conspirators demanded from a mere spirit of jealous rivalry, we ask because the love of our heart craves for nearness. How wise it was on the part of Moses to pass the controversy off himself and Aaron, and on to God. They that sin against God's servants do in reality sin against the Master, and He will vindicate them and avenge their wrongs. It becomes us to separate ourselves from those who notoriously sin against the Lord, that we be not involved in their sin and fate. The message is a perpetual one, "Come ye out from among them, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing." "Come forth, my people, out of her, that ye have no fellowship with her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." But oh, wonderful picture of the risen Lord, standing there with the memorials of his precious death, and warding off the plagues which must otherwise visit us. Where He comes there is a cordon of protection established, so that the avenging judgment is arrested at that barrier, and cannot pass. The plague struck Him, was, so to speak, absorbed into his person, and can, therefore, never come over to us.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 31.—NUMBERS XVII.

"The man whom I shall choose, his rod shall bud." This is an eternal principle. There is an indissoluble bond of union between God's election and our fruitfulness. "I have chosen you and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit." He who lives near God must be fruitful, and the fruitful soul is welcome to the secret place of the Most High. But how can dry rods like we are ever bear blossom or fruit? There is no other way than by being grafted into the rod of the stem of Jesse, which seemed to be too dry and unlikely to bear fruit again, but which in that wondrous scion, our blessed Lord, has borne blossom and fruit, filling the world with its produce. Hear Him saying to all who are grafted into Him by a living faith, "From Me is thy fruit found," "My grace is sufficient for thee." Oh, think of that wondrous cross, made of what was once a young fresh sapling. It was dry enough when He hung there to die, but it has become the tree of life, which bears twelve manner of fruits, of which the overcomers eat, whilst its leaves are for the healing of the nations.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 1.—NUMBERS XVIII.

How wonderfully God's curse can be transmuted into blessing when we meekly bend beneath it. It was Levi's doom to be scattered in Israel, owing to the fierce cruelty of their ancestor; but, though scattered, they were called to the most solemn and sacred work of assisting the High Priest, and their maintenance was also fully provided for. It was an anticipation of the Master's principle that all needful things are added to the man who seeks first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. What a wonderful glimpse this is into the blue depths of God's love, to hear Him say to our soul, Thou needest no portion as others, because I am thy portion and thine inheritance. Ah! my soul, bethink thee what it is to be an heir of God, to have come into the heritage which consists of the unsearchable riches of Christ; see to it that thou art a very spendthrift in the prodigality of thine expenditure. There is a sense in which thou mayest say, The Lord is my portion, I have much goods stored up for many years, I will take my ease, eat, drink, and be merry. Notice that the Levite, though his sustenance consisted in the gifts of the people to the service of God, was not absolved from the duty and privilege of contributing to the service of God; he too must offer a tithe of a tithe, which went to the maintenance of the priest. Thus are we members one of another, and are linked in the holy bonds of service to one another.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 2.—NUMBERS XIX.

"The ashes of an heifer for sprinkling the unclean" glow yet with sacred fires, at which our hearts may light their torches. That heifer bespeaks the Lord. No spot or blemish was there in Him. Never a yoke came on Him save that which He bore of his own free choice. Slain "without the camp." Counted an unclean thing for sins imputed to Him, but not his own. But the effect was permanent. It was easy to contract in those days ceremonial pollution. To touch death or the grave was sufficient. In some such way our consciences become defiled by contact with dead works or wicked men. Almost unknowingly we contract defilement amid the rush of daily life, as a soldier may receive a wound in the battle-field and be unconscious of it till the fight is over. For all such there is a merciful provision. The ashes of the heifer, mingled with running water, and sprinkled on the flesh of the unclean, are an emblem of the efficacy of the Redeemer's sacrifice, brought to us by the ever-fresh grace of the Holy Spirit, cleansing us from sin, ridding our robes of all stain, and fitting us again to enter the most holy presence of God. He who has thus been cleansed ceases to pollute others, and indeed becomes a fountain of purifying influence.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 3.—NUMBERS XX.

Oh, fatal fall! How ever did it happen that Moses, who had been so particular in his obedience, failed so egregiously in this which had been his strongest point, striking the rock instead of speaking to it? Perhaps he thought that speech was not strong enough to unlock the treasures of the rock-cistern, forgetting that neither speech nor rod wrought the deed, but the power of God working through him. He spoilt the type, for our Rock was smitten but once; he dishonoured God; he lost Canaan by that one small act. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." It is altogether a sad chapter. Brother and sister dying, Moses failing so disastrously, the passage through Edom refused. But chapters of this kind only make up a small fraction in the record of our lives; there are more bright ones than sad ones. And there were yet to come songs and counsels and noble outbursts of blessed ascription communicated by the death on Pisgah. "He will not keep his anger for ever. He delighteth in mercy." The dying priest reminds us of Him who is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by Him, because He ever liveth.

THEATRICAL TEA MEETING.—Recently Mr. William Forbes had 150 theatrical employés for a day at Epping Forest, and on Friday last he had a tea-meeting for women and girls engaged in the theatres. After tea addresses were given by Mr. William Saunders, M.P., and Mr. [illegible] Smith, L.C.C.

PHILIP PREACHING AT SAMARIA.

Acts viii. 5-25.

GOLDEN TEXT: Verse 8.

PHILIP is mentioned second in the list of deacons (vi. 5). Next to Stephen he was one of the most prominent and useful of the seven. As belonging to the same company it is not strange that the persecution which followed Stephen's martyrdom should have affected him. It is to that cruel persecution that we are indebted for his work in Samaria (i. 4). God overruled the work of his enemies, and made it the means of converting the Jerusalem Church into a great missionary agency. The scattered members were not apostles (1); even the deacons were not appointed to any work of teaching. Yet when scattered abroad they regarded evangelisation as their work. Should not every believer be a witness for Christ to others?

It is impossible to determine to what city of Samaria Philip went. Shechem, though not the capital city, was the more important place, and the chief seat of the Samaritans. Our Lord's visit to that region (Jno. iv.), and the effect of that visit upon the whole country, may have disposed the Samaritans the more readily to receive the Gospel. Philip reaped where Jesus had sown (Jno. iv. 36-38). From Philip's readiness to preach to the Samaritans we may conclude that he was free from those prejudices which the apostles were so slow to lose (Luke ix. 54).

The theme of Philip's preaching was Christ (5). If the words of the Samaritan woman (Jno. iv. 25) expressed the hope of her people, this would be a welcome theme. For men of every country Christ as Saviour and Lord is the great need. Philip did not alter the theme when preaching to the Ethiopian (viii. 35). His preaching was attested by works (7). The power to work miracles was not confined to the apostles, but was possessed both by Stephen and Philip (vi. 8). These were the Holy Ghost's witness to the preaching (Heb. ii. 4).

The Samaritans "heard and saw" (6). The connection is important. Our scholars see as well as hear; and what they see disposes them either to receive or to reject what they hear. The life we live and the works we do are an important part of our Christian testimony. Because Philip's works were in keeping with his words, the Samaritans "gave heed" (6), then they "believed," and "were baptized" (12). That is the order which should still be observed, "faith cometh by hearing," but heedless hearers will not be likely to believe. Great joy (8) always follows true faith (see Rom. xiv. 17).

In following Christ the Samaritans were deserting one who had formerly exercised great influence over them. Simon was either a magician, or was actually in league with the powers of darkness, and had bewitched the people by the real or seeming wonders he had wrought (9, 10). The difference between Simon and Philip was very marked. The miracles which Philip performed gave health to the sick, life to the dying, and opened springs of gladness in sorrowing hearts. There had been nothing of the same beneficent character about the miracles of Simon.

The news of the Samaritan revival must have been surprising to the Church at Jerusalem (14), for Samaritans were regarded as midway between Jews and heathens. Peter and John were sent because being the two most prominent apostles, they were regarded with greatest confidence. Had not the Samaritans already received the Holy Ghost? Undoubtedly; but his extraordinary gifts were communicated only through the apostles themselves The gift was imparted not in any magical way, merely through the laying on of hands (17), but in answer to prayer (15). That some display of miraculous power followed the gift is evident from what ollows concerning Simon. He "saw" (18), and coveted the power to impart the same gift (19) as a means to gratifying his ambitious ends. His request proves how ignorant he was of the true spirit of the Gospel he had professed to receive.

In Peter's reply, note how indignation against the sin (20), is followed by faithful testimony as to Simon's condition (21), then by a solemn call to repent (22), with only a doubtful promise of forgiveness "if perhaps, etc.," and this by a further terrible description of Simon's true character (23). Bitterness and bondage, such is the almost fixed condition to which Simon's life of sin has brought him. What is the value of Simon's request (24)? Looked at carefully, it is an instance of imperfect repentance, for (1) he dreads the punishment more than the sin; and (2) he depends on the prayers of Peter, rather than pray for himself. Yet for a brief season he was humbled, and perhaps was never so near to the kingdom as just then. If tradition as to his subsequent history is to be believed, there is no reason for regarding this repentance as sincere.

EAST-ENDERS AT POTTER'S BAR.

For more than a quarter of a century Mrs. Marriage Allen has been engaged in a noble work in Shoreditch and Hoxton, with marked and very cheering results. No one can see the faces and demeanour of those who gather around her and her devoted lady helpers without being impressed with the influence of the Gospel on the numbers who attend. To those who live in the courts and alleys and amid the atmosphere of this part of our million-peopled city, "a day in the country" is indeed something to be prized and subsequently remembered with real pleasure, and this was peculiarly the case last week when 180, mostly mothers, and an endless number of babies, were carried under threatening skies to Potter's Bar Station, where they were met by vans, carriages, and smiling faces, and the weak, the halt, and the infirm were carried to Mr. Samuel Gurney Sheppard's beautiful grounds, and hospitality extended to all. A splendid dinner soon set everybody at ease, and wandering through the delightful gardens and parks, just according to everyone's "sweet will" in the glad sunshine, the hours passed quickly away. The tea bell seemed to sound all too soon, but the call was rapidly responded to, and Mr. Sheppard, who could not join us at dinner, had a kind word for everybody. Healthy recreation followed tea, and by and by a meeting on the lawn was announced. Then the host in earnest loving words pleaded for Christ, and thanked those who had responded to his invitation, contrasting their conduct with that of many who believe not the invitations of eternal love. Other earnest words were also spoken. "A bouquet for everybody and a cabbage for each widow," vehicles to carry the weakest, and parting thanks and good wishes brought a splendid day's outing to a close. Two days later fifty-two mothers and twenty-one babies, who could not leave home for the outing, were lovingly entertained at the Mission House in Charles-square, Hoxton. There, too, the good influence of the Shoreditch Christian Mission was abundantly manifest. That such work is maintained in the heart of London from year to year is matter for which to "thank God and take courage" alike in the interests of truth and of our country. W. H.

Work amongst the London Postmen.

"Is it something that I can do?" How often, when any fresh field of work is discussed, that question is asked by young ladies with plenty of aspirations to do good, with a fair amount of ability, and with abundance of leisure—but with the restrictions of social and home life and surroundings. I feel that the work which I and others want to develop this autumn and winter, amongst the London postmen, is exactly fitted to the possibilities and powers of such.

For some time we have proved that a valuable field of influence, in connection with our Postal and Telegraph Christian Association, is to be formed in educational classes, conducted, as at Mildmay Night School, on a spiritual basis. The studies are French, German, and English subjects, the last fifteen minutes of each class being given to the reading of English, French, and German New Testament, and a directly spiritual effort. In the City, for which I specially plead, such classes are held in the afternoon between 2 and 4.30, and, under the continual and personal superintendence of one or two of us older ladies and more experienced workers, who would be willing to meet and start home, by underground railway or omnibus, any young ladies willing to assist in the work.

As an incentive to continuing intellectual studies, as a use for such powers as a training ground for wider and deeper spiritual work, as a place of contact with experienced workers in the field, this undertaking is surely worthy of consideration.

Classes of this kind will be started in the the middle of September, on Monday afternoons, in the City Reading Room, 11, Little Britain (close to Aldersgate-street Station), 2 to 4.30, and at the West Central and East Central Post-office Rooms on Thursdays, 2 to 4.30 p.m., as well as at other places. Will those who are able to respond apply to me?

NEW ZEALAND: AN OPENING.—Mrs. Gordon Forlong writes from Wanganui, New Zealand:—"I wish some well taught Christians would come here, the land is fair and the climate beautiful. Dr. Maberly's teaching is much missed. May the Lord guide some of his well taught saints to settle here! There is much work to be done in a loving quiet way by those who have studied the Word."

LONDON SHOP-GIRLS.

The bright sunshine is luring out the roving Englishman by the thousand, while the ladies are busy with sea-side wraps and costumes, gala tents, little spades and pails, and all other sea-side or country luxuries. Very light-hearted and very kind-hearted are many of these tourists, and in the midst of their festive occupations they cast a sad glance at the drooping figures and yearning looks of the pale shop-girls or weary sempstresses who assist them in their preparations; but who themselves are without a hope of seeing one field of clover, with its hedge of roses and honeysuckle, or of breathing for one day the delicious air which comes only on the sunny waves. Very willingly would these good people add a little to their travelling expenses if only that poor child or this exhausted-looking woman could have a few days of entire rest and pleasure too.

It is to such that I write telling them that a home on the borders of Epping forest has been established for just this class; but the ladies who set it up are now at a loss how to fill it this summer for want of funds, and earnestly ask those interested in the failing London shop-girls to assist a little in the good work. Ten years ago these ladies felt the necessity for such a place of refuge, and, although the first donation which they received was only 2s., they went on with their scheme until a cottage home was well established. During these few years they have entertained nearly 2,000 women and girls. There are many regular subscribers, but, owing to a large number of almost penniless girls having been admitted, and many of the same destitute class having entreated a similar favour for this summer, Miss Reynolds (the present superintendent) is compelled to make the matter known. Visitors will be very welcome at the cottage to see the delight of the girls enjoying the simple home life, good food, and forest air and scenery. Communications should be addressed Miss Reynolds, Epping New-road, Buckhurst-hill.

Rev. W. J. Mayers and Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

Having returned from his fifteen months' tour of the Australasian colonies, during which he delivered 180 lectures and preached 150 sermons, Mr. Mayers is preparing to resume in this country his advocacy and descriptive accounts of Dr. Barnardo's work amongst poor orphans and the children of the slums, in his capacity as one of the deputation secretaries of the Homes.

Mr. Mayers will be happy to occupy the pulpits of ministers of any evangelical denomination to address Sunday-schools, or to lecture in halls or schoolrooms placed at his disposal. During the next few weeks Mr. Mayers hopes that some kind friends of the work will arrange for garden meetings, and specially urges pastors of churches in watering places frequented by visitors to invite him to give one of his illustrated addresses on some week evening.

No expense will be incurred by societies or friends wishing for Mr. Mayers' services, and doubtless much spiritual good would result from them, as well as substantial help to the work he represents. Communications should be addressed, Rev. W. J. Mayers, Dr. Barnardo's Homes, Stepney-causeway, E.

Colportage in Jamaica.

For many years I have been engaged in Christian work as a missionary pastor among the black people of Jamaica, West Indies. Among other forms of service, I have, since 1880, done a good deal in the circulation of Bibles, and various kinds of Christian literature by means of colporteurs, who, with packs of books on their heads, and the love of Christ in their hearts, visit the homes of the people in many an out-of-the-way place, and attend the public markets in different directions as far as twenty miles from my residence at Clarksonville.

I have long felt the desirability of having a small Bible Carriage, which would enable the colporteur to carry a far larger supply of books than is possible at present. Such a vehicle as I judge would suit the conditions of the country and work, could be had for £20, including a donkey to draw it. The sum of £5 has already been given, so that only £15 is now needed. The advance of education in Jamaica makes it of urgent importance to flood the island with wholesome reading.

I am now in England for a short season of rest, and should be very thankful to hear from any of your readers interested in colportage work. Mr. Finlay Gibson, 15, Willoughby-road, Hampstead, has kindly consented to receive contributions for this object; or they may be sent to me. Wm. Head.

CHRIST'S FELLOWSHIP.

The final reference in Scripture to Christ's fellowship with his disciples is this: "I will not drink henceforth of the fruit of the vine until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's Kingdom." Thus the joy of the marriage feast at Cana reaches forward in thought to the joy of heaven—

Where Jesus gives the portion,
Those blessed souls to fill,
The insatiate, yet satisfied,
The full, yet craving still.

—J. Hutchison, D.D.

"FEAR NOT!"

Would our King tell us again and again "Fear not!" if there were any reason at all to fear? Only give half an hour to seeking out the reasons He gives why we are not to fear, and the all-inclusive circumstances in which He says we are not to fear; see how we are to fear nothing, and no one, and never, and nowhere; see how He Himself is in every case the foundation and the grand reason of his command, his presence and his power always behind it; and then shall we hesitate to say "I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me?" Shall we even fancy there is any answer to those grand and for ever unanswered questions, "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?"

A SONG OF TRIUMPH.

"If God be for us, who can be against us?"
Upon my lips He puts a conqueror's song,
Uplifts the veil betwixt me and his glory,
And bids me see a bright celestial throng.
"I can do all things," is the song of triumph,
Of Faith's glad household in their service free,
My feeble hands have clasped Omnipotence:
"I can do all in Christ which strengtheneth me."

THE HOPE OF HIS CALLING.

There is an object beyond experience, above imagination, without example, for which the creation wants a comparison, we an apprehension, and the Word of God itself a sufficient revelation. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be." God hath called us to his eternal kingdom and glory. Let us seek to walk in the light of "the hope of his calling."

—Dr. Maclaren.

JUSTIFICATION AND SANCTIFICATION.

God justifies the sinner by absolving him from the guilt to which all mankind is subject. For what purpose? To sanctify him—that is, to set him apart for God's worship and service. Everyone thus set apart is called a saint or a holy one.

Sanctification is not only an act of God, just as justification is; it is also what justification never is, a divine process. God sets the justified person apart for worship and service by entering into his heart through his Spirit, as into his abode (Eph. ii. 22). He forms in us holy habits of worship and service, and deepens in us the spirit of adoration and obedience. Sanctification as a divine act is due to the entrance of the Spirit in us; and sanctification as a divine process is due to the indwelling of the Spirit in us. Peter calls our sanctification the sanctification of the Spirit (1 Pet. i. 2).

Bockenheim, Germany.

From August 12 to 15 a Conference for Christian students from different German universities was held at Bockenheim, Frankfort-on-the-Main, in the hall of the Falkenhof, the vicarage of Christ Church. There were present representatives from nine universities of the German empire. The principal subject treated at the Conference was: "The immeasurable value of conversion in early life."

Long before the Conference took place, continued and fervent prayer was made by a circle of Christian friends, that the Lord would work through his Holy Spirit in the hearts of those who would attend the meetings. And God did beyond that we asked and thought. The meetings for discussion turned to prayer meetings, and many of the young men yielded themselves entirely to the Lord, some of them for his service amongst the heathen.

Our faith has been mightily strengthened to expect great things of the Lord for our German universities, and we desire to continue, through his grace, to work, to pray, and to believe; and we earnestly beg our brethren in England to assist us with their prayers.

Temperance Notes.

A temperance association was on Thursday formed at Gravesend for the promotion of the cause in the borough.

The Methodist Conference of Nova Scotia adopted a very strong report on the subject of temperance and the prohibition of the drink traffic.

A recent number of the Toronto Mail reports that the local option of prohibition is increasing in Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec, and Prince Edward's Island.

A tribe of Araucanos, or roving Indians, on the southern borders of Chili, recently cut off the ears of a pedlar, whom they caught selling brandy to their squaws.

It is stated that intemperance is so prevalent among the Dutch railway servants that women have been employed to work the switches, and that no accident has occurred since the women took over their new posts.

A suggestive piece of news comes from Zanzibar. The German Government, and indeed the Powers generally, have recognised the right of England under the protectorate to regulate the sale of liquors. But "the French consul alone persists in demanding the unrestricted sale of spirits by French subjects."

That the progress of temperance principles among the Congregational ministry is very marked may be inferred from the fact that out of 2,747 pastors in England and Wales all but 685 are total abstainers and that a quarter of a century ago the total number of known abstainers in the denomination was only 632.

The number of deaths of "overlain" children has, says the Registrar-General, "been steadily increasing in recent years." The proportion of such cases is more than twice as high on Saturday night as on any other night of the week; the explanation of this fact is that the amount of intoxication is greater on Saturday than on any other day.

In connection with the Hampstead branch of the British Women's Temperance Association, drawing-room meetings, followed by garden teas, have been held during the summer months for hospital and visiting nurses, and for Board school teachers. Addresses were delivered by Miss Orme, of the London Temperance Hospital; Dr. Cook, Miss Fowler, and other friends.

The consumption of intoxicants on board of the large ocean steamers plying between New York and European ports reaches a large aggregate. The N.Y. Sun gives from the record of the steward's department of the Cunard fleet for a year the following figures of the quantities of wines and liquors used:—"8,030 quarts and 17,613 pints of champagne, 13,941 quarts and 7,310 pints of claret, 9,200 quarts of other wines, 489,344 pints of ale and porter, 174,921 quarts of mineral waters, and 34,400 quarts of spirituous liquors."

Mr. Lloyd George, speaking last week at a temperance demonstration in connection with the Baptist Union meetings in Carnarvon, said that at the present time there was a life and death struggle between sobriety and drunkenness. He rejoiced to think that the temperance society under the auspices of which that meeting was held had among its numbers 300 Welsh Baptist ministers; but, on the other hand, he regretted to find that there were yet many ministers who had not become members. It behoved all Christian ministers to ally themselves with temperance societies, and once they did this, and exerted themselves on behalf of temperance, no power could possibly withstand them.

The official organ of the Swiss Confederation, says Le Bien Social, publishes the figures given by the Statistical Bureau in an article entitled "Alcoholism and Mortality in the Fifteen most Populous Towns of Switzerland during the year 1891." Out of 6,885 deaths during the year in those towns, 123 had alcoholism for their primary and immediate cause; in 302 other cases alcoholism was a concomitant, that is to say, it accompanied, and consequently aggravated, another disease, and thus contributed to a fatal issue, making a total of 425 deaths (366 men and 59 women) caused or hastened by alcoholism.

Rev. Samuel Chadwick, of Leeds Central Wesleyan Mission, tells the following sad story of a family that twenty-five years ago used to drive to chapel in a carriage and pair, but is now living in a dirty hovel. The woman on the morning of her marriage received as a wedding present from her father £50,000. Mr. Chadwick found some time ago that her husband had just died in a common lodging-house without a shirt on his back, and there was the widow in that little hovel without furniture—the only remnant of the old days being a carriage lamp that had once lit the way for their carriage. In one corner of the place lay a daughter dying of consumption. In the other corner was a daughter ill with typhoid fever. They had not a bite of bread or a copper at their command; and the third daughter had gone out into the streets to provide for the starving ones at home. The home had been wrecked through drink.

Personalia.

Mr. and Mrs. Hilton, of the Stepney Crèche, have removed from Langeld House, Bow, to Shore House, 18, Shore-road, South Hackney, N.E.

Dr. James Stewart, of Lovedale, has been appointed to the chair of Evangelistic Theology in Edinburgh, vacant through the death of Dr. Thomas Smith.

Mr. H. T. Wills, of Bristol, who has given himself for mission work in India, has been appointed by the L.M.S. to the Trevandrum Mission. He is to start at the end of October.

Mrs. Baeyertz hopes to commence, on September 4, a mission in Westbourne Grove Baptist Chapel. At the end of September she expects to begin a series of missions in Scotland in connection with the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A.

Rev. Alfred Clifford, C.M.S., secretary at Calcutta, has been appointed Bishop of Lucknow. Many will be thankful that one of full sympathy with, and actual experience in, missionary work should have been chosen for such a post.

The Countess of Carlisle has for some years invited annually about 2,000 children from the slums of Leeds to spend a fortnight's holiday in farmhouses and cottages in Cumberland. The loving and kindly work has been carried on vigorously this summer.

Pastor Chiniquy celebrated a few days ago his eighty-third birthday. A great gathering was held in the Presbyterian Church, St. Anne, Ill., when addresses were delivered by various pastors, and the venerable evangelist gave some account of God's dealings in his life and labours,

Lady Radstock's strength has, we are informed, rather increased, though there is no change as yet in the original cause of her illness. She has been and is still kept in the most perfect restfulness and brightness, spite of weakness and great discomfort.

Dr. Greig, with Rev. W. H. Gillespie, M.A., returns to China on the 25th inst. His health is now completely restored, and he goes out in the high hope of being even more successful in his work than he was before the series of troubles which obliged him to abandon his work for a time came upon the Mission.

LAXEY, ISLE OF MAN.

Laxey, one of the most picturesque villages in the Isle of Man, is a charming place to spend a summer holiday, situated as it is in a lovely glen with Snaefell (Mona's highest mountain) at the top and Laxey Bay at the bottom. In August last year a two days' convention was held, which was felt to be so helpful that Rev. J. M. Spicer, of Christ Church, Laxey, arranged for a similar gathering this year. This was held on Monday, August 15, in the National Schools.

A prayer meeting was held on the Sunday evening, when the room was well filled, and an address was given by Captain Kelly, of the Church Army. On Monday an early morning prayer meeting was a season of great refreshing. In the afternoon the convention proper began, Rev. J. M. Spicer presiding.

Rev. F. J. Horsefield gave a helpful address on the subject of little failings and sins which tend to mar the Christian life, and how to overcome them, basing his remarks on Ecl. x. 1. Rev. E. W. Kissack showed in a thoughtful and telling address how the Prayer Book as a commentary on the Bible, enforced the teaching of Christian holiness. Col. Oldham made the higher Christian life seem more practicable by a reference to his own conversion, consecration, and Christian development. At the evening meeting, Rev. Norman King spoke on 1 Kings xviii., as typical of Christian decision and consecration, and Mrs. Morris, of Ramsey, followed with some earnest words based on two petitions in "Morning Prayer," "O God, make clean our hearts within us," and "Take not Thy Holy Spirit from us." Rev. R. B. Baron, gave a thoughtful exposition of Phil. i., and Rev. T. C. Chapman, spoke of the value of private prayer as an aid to a higher Christian life. Col. Oldham spoke from the words "Go in peace," setting before his hearers the importance and joy of being at peace with God, and urging the acceptance of it from God through Christ upon all who did not already possess it.

Rev. F. J. Horsefield sought to bring the whole to a practical issue by impressing on all present that Christian life and service was a matter which concerned them as individuals, and spoke of the fulness and sufficiency of grace for every need. In order to bring the question home, he asked—whilst a most solemn and impressive stillness pervaded the whole gathering—that any who had not decided hitherto to take the Lord as their personal Saviour would do so then, and gave those who wished to do so an opportunity of expressing their desire by holding up their hand. This plan was also adopted in reference to those who desired to consecrate their life to the Lord's service, and a number did so, and were specially commended to the Lord in prayer.

Evangelistic Notes.

Gipsy Smith and his sister, after good services in Manchester, have sailed for some months' evangelistic labour in America.

Mr. Merton Smith is evangelising at Biggar, N.B. At first it seemed uphill work, there being some opposition, but now this has passed, and there are tokens of real blessing.

Bexhill.—On Sunday, Mr. J. Friend, the evangelist at Belle Hill Wesleyan Chapel, preached farewell sermons. Mr. Friend has laboured at Bexhill for fifteen months, and his ministry has been attended with much spiritual blessing.

Belmont, Surrey.—The special services held by George King here have been so much blessed, and the Bible Readings so greatly appreciated, that he has been asked, and has consented, to continue his labours a month longer.

Ireland.—During the past month very successful Gospel services have been held by Revs. Jas. Kirkwood, Henry Ball, and others, in the Methodist Mission Tent at Letterbreen, co. Fermanagh. The attendance night after night was very large, and several professed to have been led to decision for Christ.

Buckinghamshire.—The Catford Wesleyan Mission Band has just concluded a van mission tour through Buckinghamshire, and much spiritual blessing has resulted. In addition to distributing tracts and visiting 800 houses, the missioners held meetings, and everywhere they were joyfully received, and much encouragement was derived.

Southport.—God is blessing his own Word in connection with open-air work, and we thank Him for large crowds anxious to hear the Gospel. Last Lord's Day evening over twenty professed salvation, and confessed with the mouth before hundreds. May this encourage open-air workers to go on and preach "Christ and Him crucified" with the Holy Ghost and then believe for the salvation of souls.—H. P. R.

New Romney, Kent.—Mr. John Cooke, of the Evangelisation Society, has held here a three weeks' mission, which has been the means of blessing. At each meeting there seemed a deep spirit of conviction, which in some cases was very manifest. Some have confessed their conversion to God. It was very pleasing to see some coming to the tent night by night who usually never attend any religious service. —R. A.

Phœnix Park, Dublin.—Open-air services have been held lately on Tuesday evenings in this park, and a friend writes that he has been "much pleased with the attention paid to the singing and the Gospel. There was a very large number present, most of whom seemed to be Roman Catholics. The day seems to have come when the Gospel should be brought to these people in the open air. Mr. R. P. Froste, Y.M.C.A., Dublin, will be glad to hear of any willing to co-operate."

Rev. Thomas Cook is having great success in his South African mission. The latest news from East London says that the services on the last Sunday of the mission were very largely attended, many at the evening service being unable to find seats. The South African Methodist has an editorial article on Mr. Cook's mission, and from it we cull the following:—"The result may be said to have surpassed expectation, if not hopes. In the solemn influences which have been manifested during the services, and in the remarkable accessions which have been made to the rank of believers, this revival is fitly to be compared to the great work done by the instrumentality of Rev. W. Taylor many years ago. May it continue to spread and extend! It is matter of thankfulness that so large a number of hearers have been found in every town already convinced of the truth, and almost persuaded to become decidedly Christian."

GRINDELWALD.—On Thursday last a disastrous fire broke out in the Bär Hotel, which was being used as the principal resort of the members of the "Review of the Churches Reunion Conference." The railway station, telegraph office, and about fifty other buildings were destroyed. The numerous visitors were greatly inconvenienced, and a portion of the peasantry rendered homeless by the catastrophe. Ample accommodation in hotels and chalets was still available for the second conference, to be held next month, and Dr. Lunn has promptly made the necessary arrangements for the carrying out of his programme. A committee has been formed, consisting of Rev. Chas. Berry, Dr. Lunn, Mr. Percy Bunting and others, to receive subscriptions for the relief of the hundred families which have been rendered destitute by the fire. Donations may be sent to them at the Hotel du Grand Eiger, Grindelwald, or to Dr. Lunn, 5, Endsleigh-gardens, London, N.W.

Obituary.

MR. STEPHEN HERMITAGE.

This earnest Christian worker passed away at the residence of his son at Eastbourne on Saturday. He was well known in Wesleyan circles at Hastings as a local preacher, but more recently conducted a fruitful Gospel Mission in the Public Hall, which he had to relinquish, owing to ill-health.

DR. MANSFIELD COLLIER SOUTTER.

For some years, while carrying on his medical practice, Dr. Soutter laboured as minister of the Presbyterian Church at Stepney, and all who knew his devoted labours will mourn his death at the age of 49. In his ministerial position, Dr. Soutter exerted himself most perseveringly on behalf of the interests of his little flock; bestowing not only time and toil, but also giving of his own means to help on the work. Since he resigned his position, the congregation has ceased to exist; the circumstances of the locality being very unfavourable for its maintenance. In his earlier days, Dr. Soutter had been engaged in Protestant work. He was much esteemed by all who knew him.

CANON JACKSON, OF LEEDS.

The death of this esteemed labourer will be mourned by many as a heavy loss to the Church in the North. Rev. Edward Jackson, M.A., who was born in Leeds in the year 1812, was hon. canon of Ripon, and had been vicar of St. James's Church, Leeds, for a great number of years, died on Thursday, at his residence in Leeds, after a short illness. He was one of the best known and most highly respected clergymen in the whole county of York. He was educated at Fulneck, his mother being a Moravian. At the age of 21, he joined the Sunday School in St. James's parish, then one of the most squalid localities in Leeds, and in 1843, after two years' study, he became one of Dr. Hook's curates at the parish church. Close by that celebrated church was what had formerly been a chapel, and to this Mr. Jackson was promoted after 11 years' work in the same district. There was no stipend attached to the Church, but Mr. Jackson had private means, nearly all of which he expended in conducting the ministrations of his church and in various charitable purposes. It is said that at the outset of his clerical career he was much impressed by the Tractarian movement, but the appearance of Tract XC. caused him to recoil from a doctrinal and ritualistic system which seemed naturally to issue in Roman Catholicism. Through his many succeeding years of ministerial labour, he continued warmly attached to the Established Church, but with sympathies ever expanding towards all sincere Christians, and with a love ever increasing for simple evangelical principles, and reliance on their proclamation for the highest spiritual results. His work has been very greatly blessed, and his memory will long be cherished as that of a faithful and devoted servant of the Lord.

As a composer of many beautiful Christian lyrics, Canon Jackson was long and favourably known. The following are the first and last verses of one of his hymns, entitled "Love's return":—

Knowest thou souls are hanging on thee, brother,
Upon thy daily life, thy very breath;
A word, a look, a prayer may save another,
Some friend or foe from ruin, and from death!

"As I have loved you—so love each other;"
O blessed mandate which the Master gave;
Come let us live with glorious life, my brother;
His love in us will others also save!

The following extract from Mr. Jackson's ordination sermon at the consecration of the Bishop of Ripon shows the light in which he viewed the work of the Christian minister, and those who can look back over the long space of nearly forty years, and who have watched his labours, know how he has striven to act up to the high ideal. "But the duties of the Sanctuary are only a portion of those which devolve upon the Christian pastor. He has not only to invite his people to the House of God and to minister to them there, but he has also to carry the Church to the homes of all who are committed to his care. He is to know his flock, one by one, as the shepherd knows his sheep, and by his kindly and constant intercourse with them he is to convince them of his deep and affectionate concern for their welfare, both temporal and spiritual. He is to be ever ready to advise, console, reprove, restrain, as the case may require.

He is to instruct the ignorant, to admonish the vicious, to support the weak, to help to bring back the penitent wanderer, and to be patient and gentle to all. He is to be the special guide and instructor and guardian of the children of his flock, the friend of those more advanced in years, the frequent and sympathising visitor of the aged and the sick, and the assiduous watcher by the dying bed, ready to cheer the departing spirit with the sure promises and provisions of the Gospel, and to commend it to the covenanted mercy of God in Christ. In a word, he is to be at all times and on all occasions the true, faithful, affectionate, devoted pastor—a real though humble representative of the Good Shepherd, Jesus Christ Himself!"

New Editions.

Conditions of Success in Preaching Without Notes.—Mr. R. D. Dickinson has issued a second edition of Dr. Storrs' well-known series of lectures, delivered before the students of Union Theological Seminary, New York, in 1875. The pages are lucid and suggestive, and should prove of practical service to young men desirous of qualifying for evangelistic and ministerial work.

A Young Heart of Oak.—Memories of Harry Stuart Boldero, Lieutenant R.N. The second edition of this sketch of a bright Christian life has been published by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton (3s. 6d.). A portrait and several illustrations add to the animation of the volume, which cannot but have peculiar attractions for such as are interested in Christian testimony and effort in the public service of which the "Young Heart of Oak" was a true ornament.

The Life and Epistles of St. Paul.—A new edition of Conybeare and Howson's celebrated work has been included by Messrs. Longmans and Co. in their handy and attractive "Silver Library." There is no need to say a word as to the real value of this book, which is at once a biography of the Apostle and an exposition of his writings. That this work, with its 870 full pages and many illustrations, should be rendered accessible to students for the small outlay of three-and-sixpence, is a very noteworthy fact. Past editions have performed a great ministry of New Testament instruction. This cheap issue will assuredly add to the popularity and extend the usefulness of the work.

Tent Door Talks for Pilgrims To-Day. By Rev. H. J. Browne (Partridge & Co.). Eighteen brief but suggestive and helpful expositions of Scripture bearing on the spiritual life.

The premier place in a Friends' Shilling Biographical Series, to be issued by Mr. E. Hicks, 2, Amen Corner, has very properly been allotted to Elizabeth Fry, the London Quakeress of blessed memory. The leading facts and achievements of her life are here set forth in a most impressive and affecting way. May the record have thousands of readers among the young women of to-day.

Ten Reasons Why I Believe the Bible is the Word of God, by R. A. Torrey (3d. W. G. Wheeler). This is the reprint of an address by the superintendent of Mr. Moody's Bible Institute, Chicago. The reasons are very succinctly given, and in their totality make a strong argument, which is calculated to confirm the faith of believers, and give rest to the minds of those who are oppressed with doubts.

An admirable and delightful addition to the biographical memorials of the great Tabernacle Preacher is Mr. Manton Smith's account of The Essex Lad who became England's Greatest Preacher (1s. Passmore and Alabaster). As a presentation of the life of the late Mr. C. H. Spurgeon for the young, it ought to find its way into many English households. The facts may not be new, but the setting of them is what we might expect from the author's happy anecdotal style.

Garden Design and Architects' Gardens:—Two reviews, illustrated, to show by actual examples from British gardens that clipping and aligning trees, to make them "harmonize" with architecture, is barbarous, needless, and inartistic. By W. Robinson, F.L.S. (John Murray.) A valuable work from the pen of one who has made many contributions to fascinating departments of science. The illustrations of stately residences and garden scenes make the volume specially attractive.

The Temperance Worker is a very useful twopenny monthly, published by G. H. Graham, at Maidstone. Volume XXXI. (1s. 6d.) contains the parts for the first six months of the present year, and has a good frontispiece portrait of Dr. F. R. Lees, as well as other illustrations. Many of the contributions have a permanent value. The first volume of The Wide-Awake Temperance Reciter (1s. 3d.) has been issued from the same office. The contents are varied, so that boys and girls of different tastes will find suitable compositions for recitation.

The Christian in the World: his Path and his Course. Mr. Martin Hope Sutton's booklet is in its sixth edition. Originally an address to young men, it is singularly pointed and practical. It sets forth counsels for almost all circumstances of life, and cautions against many deadly snares. At the close there is an admirable selection of Scripture passages grouped as "Things Best Worth Knowing" (1s. Simpkin, Marshall, and Co.). Those who may wish to circulate by free distribution should secure terms from the author, Cintra Lodge, Reading.

Candidates-in-Waiting is the title of a manual of home preparation for foreign missionary work, issued by the Church Missionary Society. The chapters, nine in number, are admirably adapted to meet the needs of those to whom they are addressed. Indeed, in the language of Rev. F. E. Wigram, in the brief preface, "They are worthy of the perusal of all who recognise the Lord's claim on themselves for service, and who desire to render that service faithfully and effectually, in the place of his appointment, be it in the limited sphere of domestic life or in the energies of evangelistic work at home or abroad."

The Heart of the Gospel. By Dr. A. T. Pierson (3s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster). These twelve sermons were delivered at the Metropolitan Tabernacle during Dr. Pierson's recent occupancy of Mr. Spurgeon's pulpit. They are on high and transcendent Gospel themes, and are, we judge, good specimens of the doctor's pastoral preaching. He shows much ingenuity in sermon structure, though now and then his divisions and illustrations appear to be somewhat strained and mechanical. But the interest is well sustained, and in the general result the discourses are extremely practical; we can well believe the fact stated in the preface, that in their delivery God used them to convert sinners and confirm saints.

Recent issues from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, include a series of booklets entitled Summer Flowers, by William Luff. Packets of fifty, assorted, of these four-page poems, cost 6d.

Rev. E. Storrow's new booklet, The Case for Foreign Missions Stated, is worthy of a large circulation. The pages exhibit much thought, and glow with a true evangelistic fervour. (1d. Snow and Co., Ivy Lane, E.C.)

Plain Words on the Eight Hours' Day is a penny pamphlet by Alfred Hiley, M.A., published by J. W. Petty and Sons, Trinity-street, Leeds. Its object is to dissuade the advocates of the eight hours' day from attempting to carry out their object by legal enactment.

Jimie's Chum, by B. M'Call Barbour. (S. W. Partridge and Co. 1s. per dozen.) This capital telegraph messenger's story, which appeared in our own columns, has now been issued in neat booklet form. Many will welcome it as likely to be of much service for Gospel distribution.

Messrs. Lang Neil, and Co., 66, Chancery-lane, have added to their "How" series a capital little book entitled How to Keep House. "Law Books for the People" have been issued as follows:—Master and Servant, their rights and duties; and Husband and Wife, their mutual relations. Both series are well produced. A penny is the price.

Rev. G. T. Gillingham has written the story of The Old Baptist Meeting, Stevington, near Bedford. Founded in the days of the Commonwealth, this congregation of believers has had a chequered career. Some well-known names occur in the pages, which will have a special charm for those who estimate at its high worth the Puritan period of our country's history. (6d. Bedford: H. Burt, printer, Mill-street.)

JESUS NEAR AND KIND.

How near and free the Lord of Love,
Once seemed upon the earth to move!
So near, the blind could feel his touch;
So free, none ever asked too much.

A word sufficed to raise the dead,
Before a word harsh demons fled;
And loads of guilt and hearts of sin
His love removed, made pure within.

The weary soul, all rent by grief,
In his kind glance perceived relief,
Nor one in need applied in vain—
The lowest, poorest, met with gain.

Ah, Lord, Thou art for aye the same,
Nor throne nor years can change thy name,
Yet we, alas! in woe's sad hour
Are slow to reach thy healing power.

Oh, teach me how by faith to find
Thee still as near, and still as kind
To heal my soul, to quell my fears,
To mould my thought, to dry my tears.

Thy word engages Thee to keep,
Through all the ages, near thy sheep;
O Lord of Love, hereon I'll rest,
And living faith here finds its quest.

Indigestion

The Rev. E. CORNEILLE, writing from the Manse, Donegal, Ireland, says:—"I have derived wonderful benefit from the Guy's Tonic you sent me. After taking a first bottle I ordered a second, and since I have finished that bottle I have been free from indigestion. I have recommended it to several members of my congregation, and they have experienced great good from its use."

We are continually receiving enthusiastic testimonials in favour of Guy's Tonic treatment for cases of Indigestion, Nervousness, and for Weak and Languid Feeling. To everyone suffering from these distressing complaints we say—test the matter yourself, and you will immediately have the most convincing argument in favour of the Guy's Tonic treatment.

"34, Medland-street, Ratcliff, E.
"DEAR SIRS,—You must think me very ungrateful for not writing before this. I am very sorry for my neglect, for I am sure I can never thank you enough for what Guy's Tonic has done for my dear husband.
"I am very happy to say he is very much better. The night sweats have left him, the bowels are regular, and the cough very much better. The pains in the head and stomach are not so bad as they were, and I do believe that if he had not taken Guy's Tonic and Guy's Fruit Pills he would have been in his grave instead of being at his work as he now is. I am sure they are the best medicines he has ever taken.—I am, yours ever gratefully,
"W. BROWN."

Guy's Tonic is sold by all chemists at 2s. 9d. per bottle, and Guy's Fruit Pills at 1s. 1½d. box. They will be sent post paid at these prices by the Guy's Tonic Company, 4 Ludgate Circus, London, E.C.

Expository Volumes.

THE LIFE AND LIGHT OF MEN. 5th Thousand

Expositions of John I.—XII. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from The Congregational Magazine:—

"These Expositions are delightful reading. To be at home with John is our earnest ambition, and we gratefully welcome any helps of mind and heart in this direction. Mr. Meyer in this work affords both light to the mind and stimulus to the heart. Whoever would understand the vital force and practical bearings of John's Gospel would do well to procure this series of studies."

"TRIED BY FIRE." 10th Thousand.

Expositions of the First Epistle of Peter. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from The British Weekly:—

"The popularity of Mr. Meyer's Expositions is a good sign of the times. This, on the First Epistle of Peter, is one of the best, and is full of tender Christian wisdom. There are many unobtrusive signs of thought and culture throughout; but the chief charm of the book is its earnest simplicity."

Scripture Biographies.

ABRAHAM: 13th Thousand.

Or, The Obedience of Faith.

With Nine Original Illustrations.

Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from The Sunday School Chronicle:—

"Beautifully illustrated, and so tastefully bound as to be a most acceptable gift-book. But the contents are such that no Christian can rise from their perusal without feeling consciously strengthened of God, and inspired afresh for a godly life. Sunday-school teachers may learn from it how to draw out the spiritual lessons of the Sacred Word."

ISRAEL: 17th Thousand.

A Prince with God.

With Nine Original Illustrations.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from The Sword and Trowel:—

"Exceedingly good. Not only spiritual, as everything from our brother Mr. Meyer would be, but also thoughtful, fresh, suggestive, and thoroughly practical. Oh, that hundreds of our younger men gave signs of such real godliness, such true devotion, and such clear knowledge of the Gospel as we see in the author!"

JOSEPH: 8th Thousand.

Beloved—Hated—Exalted.

With Nine Original Illustrations.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from The Preachers' Magazine:—

"The great charm of this very beautiful monograph is its clear setting forth of the way in which the life of Joseph mirrors,—to use the author's own phrase, the life of Jesus. This idea is not at all unduly pressed, but it runs through the volume, and adds immensely to its homiletic and devotional value."

ELIJAH: 20th Thousand.

And the Secret of His Power.

With Nine Original Illustrations.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from Christian Progress:—

"Full of devout reflection, stimulating thought and most helpful instruction—all tending to lead up to a holier and more consecrated walk with God. This, in every sense of the word, is a helpful book; and we must cordially recommend it to all who desire to go forward and higher in their Christian life."

Devotional Volumes.

THE SHEPHERD PSALM. 30th Thousand.

Meditations on the 23rd Psalm. Cloth Boards, 1s.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 1s. 6d.

A Review from The Irish Congregational Magazine:—"We have never read anything so charming on the twenty-third Psalm as this volume from the pen of Mr. Meyer. The devout reader will find it one of the most comforting, cheering, and inspiring books he can read."

CHRISTIAN LIVING. 27th Thousand.

Cloth Boards, 1s.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 1s. 6d.

A Review from Footsteps of Truth:—"A choice book of nine chapters, into which is condensed a mass of helpful instructions and wise practical counsel on various topics relating to the Christian life."

THE PRESENT TENSES OF THE BLESSED LIFE. 28th Thousand.

Cloth Boards, 1s.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 1s. 6d.

A Review from The Record:—"An excellent little book, full of practical Christianity; a pocket companion which will be valued by those whose dearest aim it is to walk daily more closely with God."

THE PSALMS: 8th Thousand.

Notes and Readings. Crown 16mo size, for the pocket. Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.

A Review from The Cambridgeshire Congregational Magazine:—"A pocket commentary on the entire book of Hebrew song. The treatment of each Psalm is brief, plain, and well planned. The divisions are usefully suggestive for public addresses, and the fillings in are the pith and marrow of Gospel truth. For private devotional use also it is a little treasure."

The same Volume, in Demy 8vo size, forms one of

WORKS BY REV. DR. CULROSS.

John, whom Jesus Loved.

A SKETCH OF THE CHARACTER, WRITINGS, THEOLOGY, AND INFLUENCE OF THE BELOVED DISCIPLE. By Rev. James Culross, M.A., D.D. With Eight Chromo-Lithographic Views. Tinted covers, 2s.; cloth boards 2s. 6d.; Presentation Edition, Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON wrote in The Sword and Trowel:—"Preachers abound, but divines are few. The printing press pours forth a mass of matter, but a real book is a phenomenon. We count ourselves happy, for we have met with a divine in Dr. James Culross; and in his work entitled 'John, whom Jesus Loved,' we have found a book. Many writers are mere echoes of other men's voices—they imitate the good steward in bringing forth things old, but things new are quite out of their way. One of the excellences of Dr. Culross is the freshness of his thought. The dew is on his branch; he is no withered bough of the autumn forest. His mind allows young flowers to break through its soil after their own fashion, and to blossom in their own sweet way.

"It is altogether without reserve that we recommend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."

"Behold I Stand at the Door and Knock."

CHRIST'S MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH AT LAODICEA. By Rev. James Culross, M.A., D.D. With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece. Printed Covers, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.; Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 2s. 6d.

"Another 'gem of purest ray serene' from the deep waters of our brother's teeming mind. He possesses a ripeness of thought and a beauty of expression which, in our judgment, are scarcely equalled, and in not one instance surpassed, by those of any other living teacher known to us."—The Sword and Trowel.

CHRIST'S MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH OF EPHESUS. By Rev. James Culross, M.A., D.D. With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece. Tinted covers, 1s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 2s. 6d.

"We do not know higher-toned or healthier devotional literature, of the evangelical type, than is represented by this and Dr. Culross' previous works. They are instructive, suggestive, full of spiritual force, and at the same time strong and manly. We heartily commend the book for the refreshment of our busy teachers."

INTRODUCTION.

CHARLES HADDON SPURGEON was in no respect ordinary. He was great as a man; great as a theologian; great as a preacher; great in private with God; and great in public with his fellow-men. He was well versed in the three things which, according to Luther, make a minister: temptation, meditation, and prayer. The school of suffering was one in which he was deeply taught.

While a powerful loadstone to draw men, the attractive force in him was not selective, as in the case of the magnet; but miscellaneous and diffused, as in the case of the earth. John Ruskin could appeciate, while the common people heard him gladly. Large-souled though he was, he had a mind that was a meet associate; and, best of all, he knew the truth, and to the last upheld the banner of the Reformation.

The following chapters aim to supply an original Sketch and Portraiture of this distinguished servant of the Lord Jesus. The work is based, for the most part, on information obtained at first hand. For years the writer has had exceptional opportunities of converse with the great preacher; seen him under varying conditions; and heard him descant, at least scores of times, on matters of personal reminiscence, as well as upon numerous points of theological interest and inquiry. No apology, it is hoped, is needed for drawing upon sources that are personal and private. The seal of confidence is in no case broken. The Christian has nothing to conceal; and, in this case at least, what has been spoken in the ear may well be proclaimed from the housetop.

That this tribute of affectionate regard for the memory of Charles Haddon Spurgeon may bring glory to God, and be a means of grace to the reader, is the earnest prayer of

THE AUTHOR.

AN ADDRESS TO CHRISTIANS.

A REAL CHRIST.

By the late C. H. SPURGEON.

Price One Penny. Twelve Copies will be sent Post Free for 1s.

For Gratuitous Distribution, 1,000 Copies will be sent for £3 direct from the Publishers.

"I speak to those of you who are engaged in the Master's work. We live in an age when the errors we have to counteract are real, doubtless real. I believe errors do usually spring from the land of unreality. You find a man unsound in doctrine is usually some literary man, who is doing nothing for Christ. Send him into the New Cut, among the costermongers; give him a class to teach in the Sunday-school, gathered from the arabs of the street; and he will have to fall back on the old-fashioned gospel, that foolishness of preaching by which it pleases God to save them that believe. When we get into the real world around us, we want to have a real gospel and a real Christ; and oh, we who dwell in London, in times so practical, when sin is so intensely sinful, when 'life is real, life is earnest,' are we not compelled to fall back on the real truth, the real doctrines, and, above all, on the real person of the real Christ, and the real presence of that Christ in the midst of the Church, if we are to have anything like power to deal with the souls of men?"—Extract.

THE CURE OF
BRONCHITIS AND ASTHMA.
DR. ALABONE'S REMEDIES.

By the success of these remedies all barriers have been broken down, and it is now an acknowledged fact that CONSUMPTION, BRONCHITIS, and ASTHMA are curable by this specific treatment, many thousands of cases having been abandoned as hopeless.

THE WHOLE OF THE REMEDIES ARE NOW, FOR THE FIRST TIME, AVAILABLE TO THE PUBLIC, and can be obtained from any chemist. Agent: J. Howard, 21, Queenhithe, London, E.C.

Dr. CRONIN, M.D., writes:—"You have done wonders for my patient. I hardly thought he could have improved so much under the treatment."

Dr. FAIRBAIRN, M.D., L.R.C.S., writes:—"The success of your treatment of Consumption is simply marvellous. I have had no less than 60 CASES OF CURE."

"Your remedy for Consumption has PROVED A SUCCESS in my own case, after having been GIVEN UP BY SEVERAL EMINENT PHYSICIANS."—T. YOUNG, L.R.C.P., L.R.C.S., &c.

B. WATSON DAVIES, M.D., L.R.C.S., writes:—"I have great pleasure in stating that a near and dear relative of mine, who was in an ADVANCED STAGE OF CONSUMPTION when I commenced your treatment (several members of her family having died of that disease), is now wonderfully improved in all respects, and has entirely lost her cough."

Members of the medical and other professions are testifying to the extraordinary results obtained from the use of these remedies.

A TABULATED FORM FOR SELF-TREATMENT, POST FREE.

8th THOUSAND.

Old Margaret; OR, A SAINT AT LAST.

With Striking Portrait. Tinted Covers, 6d. Cloth Boards, 1s.

By REV. J. ELDER CUMMING, D.D.

"A narrative taken from real life, and given to us in a very felicitous manner by the descriptive pen of Dr. Elder Cumming, of Glasgow. Dr. Cumming is well known to the religious public as one of the most attractive speakers at the Keswick Convention; and he uses the incidents, here so thrillingly sketched, of the experiences in the heart and life of a very remarkable woman to set before his readers the nature of sanctification and complete consecration. The whole picture is drawn by the hand of a master, and cannot fail in many ways to give great interest to the reader."—Dublin Evening Mail.

"Our readers will find her story a remarkably stimulating one, and they will have the advantage of learning, from one who is well known as a spiritual teacher, what this 'higher life' teaching of which we hear much nowadays really is."—Perthshire Advertiser.

IMPORTANT WORK FOR TEACHERS OF THE YOUNG.

Children's Meetings:

AND HOW TO CONDUCT THEM.

By LUCY J. RIDER and NELLIE M. CARMAN.

220 Pages, Crown 8vo. Tinted Covers. 2s. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

CONTAINS
Sixty Outline Lessons for the Class,
Forty-three Diagrams for the Black-board,
Twenty-five attractive Children's Hymns.

"A thoroughly practical book, by teachers who have learned by experience the best methods. Teachers will find it most helpful, especially in black-board word-work. The Addresses are teachings—which very many Children's Addresses are not."
—The Teacher at Work.

"We do not remember meeting with any better book than this for help in Children's Meetings. It is first-rate. There are objects to be drawn on the black-board; but there are also capital lessons to go with them. Black-boards get very, very black; and the children are very bored, when it is all chalk and no sound sense. Many of these Addresses would make sermons of the first water—and what more can we say of Addresses?"
Rev. C. H. SPURGEON in The Sword and Trowel.

CHILDREN'S HOLIDAY HOME.
President—GEORGE WILLIAMS, Esq.

THIS Home at Foots Cray, Kent, has been opened for the benefit of poor sickly children connected with the several Mission Halls occupied by the Society, all in localities where the poorest classes reside, and who are totally unable to pay for a holiday, and yet most urgently in need of it. The Home provides accommodation for 18 children at a time. The cost of each child is 6s. per week. Last year over 300 poor little things received the benefit, who found it to be a real boon.

To continue this for the present year an earnest appeal is hereby made to sustain this truly charitable work. Help in any form will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY, as under; or by the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., at the Bank, 54, Lombard-street, London, E.C.; or by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Rev. Samuel Mateer, the L.M.S. Missionary whose labours have been so remarkably owned of God.

In accordance with the wish of Professor A. R. Simpson, his portrait and sketch, which had been announced to appear in this issue, are withheld for the present.

"This is the will of God, even your sanctification . . . that no man go beyond and defraud, oppress, or overreach his brother in his business, or in any matter; because the Lord is the Avenger of all such." It is good to remember that the defrauder and the defrauded, the oppressor and the oppressed, the overreacher and the overreached, will meet one another before the great white throne; or such as are numbered among the saints must be made manifest before the judgment seat of Christ. It will be a painful time for the wrong-doer, and the results of the wrong-doing will affect him through eternity.

It may be that the Divine Avenger marks the iniquity in this life, and many a "misfortune," many a loss, sorrow, bereavement, even the taking away of the fruitless branch, may thus be accounted for: "For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep."

The employer who pays his assistants, clerks, artisans, labourers, a wage not weighed out in the balance of the sanctuary; the mistress who oppresses her servant, or deals with her less kindly and considerately than she would expect her own daughter to be dealt with in like circumstances; and, on the other hand, the employed who serve with eye-service, and who do not give a fair day's work for a fair day's wage, will all be avenged upon, for "vengeance is mine: I will recompense," saith the Lord.

Even now the books are being written, which shall be opened by-and-bye. The watchers and the holy ones are taking notes of idle words and worthless deeds. Men's lives are being photographed and phonographed, and in the approaching day each word will be spoken from the house-top, and each scene of our action be delineated upon the sky. Yea, more; we shall ourselves be manifested, and the thoughts and intents of the heart, now naked and opened before the eyes of Him with whom we have to do, will receive their due award. Their guilt will have been atoned for in the case of those who have reasoned together with God, and whose scarlet and crimson sin have been made white as wool and snow. But considered as seed sown, our good or evil works will bear fruit in eternity.

Conduct forms character, no less than character produces conduct—another illustration of "the Almighty's everlasting circles"—and our conduct here is moulding our character, and so qualifying us for rule over few cities or many, and for shining as stars of first or of fourteenth magnitude. The deprivation or the diminution of some spiritual blessing through the eternal ages will be a costly price to pay for a questionable advantage gained through the hire of the labourers kept back by fraud, or through the rendering of half-hearted and grudging service to the masters who have paid for service done heartily and with good will.

1 Thess. iv. 3-6; 2 Cor. v. 10; 1 Cor. xi. 30; Heb. x. 30; Rev. xx. 12; Dan. iv. 13, 23; Matt. xii. 36; Heb. iv. 13; Isa. i. 18; Gal. vi. 7, 8; Luke xix. 11-27; Dan. xii. 3; James v. 4; Eph. vi. 7.

In the Boston Monday lecture published in Our Day for August, Mr. Joseph Cook continues his studies on the Bible and modern discoveries. Unbelieving critics are met at close quarters, and their suspicions and conjectures mercilessly reduced to nought. In conclusion, Mr. Cook well says:—

> Why is it that you toss about as orphans, and doubt almost anything you cannot see? The ages have been under Divine guidance, and all that has been aforetime was for our instruction, on whom the ends of the world have come.

The Christian's heritage is assurance, not doubt. If rational beings may recognise God in history, it is the Christian's additional privilege to know Him in grace. "This is life eternal—that they might know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent." This knowledge excludes all manner of doubt in regard to God's providence, whether in the past, the present, or the future.

Dr. A. T. Pierson has in the Missionary Review of the World a stirring article on "The Centenary Celebrations of Missions." As might be anticipated, he finds in the enthusiasm awakened at the various meetings much to inspire fresh hope for the future of missions. He concludes in the following weighty words, which may well be laid to heart by many who have sadly to confess that high resolutions and bold resolves have full often cooled down when the inspiration of some great occasion had passed away:—

> How much Christians need a ratchet in their machinery to hold the wheel at the point where the lever brings it, to prevent an unwinding when the cylinder with its springs is wound out, to make conviction and impression permanent and perpetual! Oh, for the grace of continuance! Great gatherings furnish a mighty leverage, a grand momentum, but how soon it is practically lost, unless at the time godly purposes are formed and new steps taken onward, upward, forward! God grant that those who see duty and privilege in a new light may, while the vision is clear, move; for Satan is a master optician, and knows how to embarrass our progress by his magnifying and diminishing lenses and coloured glasses, and how to veil and even blind our eyes to the true prospect. Let us have a new era of missions, as much beyond that which Carey introduced as that was beyond the epoch which preceded it!

Considerable pressure has been brought to bear on Mr. Moody, during his present visit to this country, to induce him to undertake a mission in London, but various difficulties have hitherto stood in the way. We are now, however, glad to announce that in October he will be for eight or ten days at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, which is the most suitable building available for the purpose. The mission is intended, not so much for the regular worshippers at the Tabernacle, as to be a means of reaching the central and southern portions of the metropolis. Prayer will, we trust, be offered that the Mission may be made a rich blessing.

Another appalling colliery disaster has carried into eternity a hundred and ten more of the breadwinners of South Wales. The explosion in the Park Slip Colliery at Aberkenfig was at first supposed to have killed more than a hundred and forty men and boys, but happily a number escaped. We are told by the correspondent of the Times that "the excitement was so great and the sympathy so intense as to be almost unparalleled." The patient endurance of the entombed and the noble courage of the rescuers on all such occasions are features for which we must be thankful to God. Few of us think of the hourly peril in which the coal is won, which is a primary necessity of life and comfort. The widows and families are left. The Lord Mayor, a Welshman, has communicated the following to Mr. Robson, the Government Inspector of Mines: "Have just read account of the terrible explosion, which has caused me the most profound sorrow. I shall be most willing to co-operate with you in assisting the survivors and widows and children of those who have so suddenly perished." Doubtless, not a few of our readers will do likewise.

Famine has full oft in the past proved the precursor of pestilence. Few, therefore, will marvel that the famine-stricken peasants of Russia should have fallen an easy prey to the cholera, that scourge of Asia. Grave anxiety, however, must be caused in many minds by its rapid westward progress, and serious development in Hamburg. There are many of us who well recall the anxious time during the last visitation of cholera in this land and in this great city. From a sanitary point, we are assured, matters are much improved. Nevertheless, many workers among the poor will probably feel right to adopt and advise precautionary measures—such as whitewashing, thorough scrubbing, and general cleanliness. Alarm may arise in the minds of some who have never learned to rest in the Lord; but happy at such a time are those who "know their God." For them as for the Psalmist (in Psalm xci. 5—7) there is no fear. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee; because he trusteth in Thee." (Psalm xxvi. 3.)

Rev. J. D. Kilburn calls serious attention to the harm done by those who, while professing the name of Christ, do in "Rome as Rome does," and follow, while on the Continent, Continental habits with regard to the Lord's Day. He adds:—

> Two Christian workers were spending the Sunday in a German city a short time ago. They spent the best part of it in driving about and in visiting picture galleries, etc. In this case, as in many, they were known and observed by more than they thought. One at least who met them on that Sabbath has been confirmed in his rejection of the Gospel by the way they spent it.
> A well-known preacher who spent a Sunday in another city visited in the morning one of the public gardens, in the evening a place of worldly gaiety. A minister, speaking to the writer of the way that Sabbath was spent, said, Dr. —— did more harm by his conduct that day than he can do good by 500 sermons.

These, unhappily, are but isolated instances of loose practices, calculated to do much injury, and yet but too prevalent among English Christians when travelling abroad.

We observe that the London Rowing Club has arranged a boat race with a Parisian club. To this there may be no objection, but many will feel greatly grieved by the announcement that the race is to be rowed on a Sunday. We are well aware that in France it is quite usual to fix such events for that day, but surely representatives of an English club ought to have felt it right to maintain the national character and avoid giving pain to thousands of their fellow countrymen, by declining to row the match on the Lord's Day.

A letter has reached us from an esteemed correspondent containing a suggestion which we believe many of our readers have already put into practice, and no doubt many others will act on the suggestion. Our correspondent has for some time past handed on his copy of The Christian, when done with, to an invalided Christian woman, who finds great comfort in reading it, and much appreciates the thoughtfulness of the friend who lends it to her. He suggests that this plan might be adopted by others, and that much good might be done in thus passing on the paper instead of laying it by or destroying it.

At a recent meeting of a large branch of the English Church Union it was recommended that that body should become an "English Congregation of the Propaganda" for the restoration of "Catholic Worship." The following were, among others, insisted upon as most vital principles of such worship—viz., the Holy Eucharist as the supreme act of worship, that fasting communion is "the Church's" rule, and that attendance at the "Holy Mysteries" is of obligation on every Sunday: the object of Divine service, moreover, was defined as being worship rather than edification.

What is all this but part of an organised movement to reintroduce the Mass in the place of the Lord's Supper, and to undo the work of that Reformation which the Ritualists are never tired of abusing. This disloyal section of the Church of England is fond of appealing to the practice of the early Church, but it is careful not to go further back than is convenient. To take one point only—evening communion, which they bitterly denounce, and which many of the bishops severely discountenance, was the practice of the true primitive Church of the Apostolic age—in Scripture we find no trace of any other hour, and, though it be allowable to alter it for the convenience of worshippers, to say that it is wrong to continue it at the hour when Christ ordained it, is an insult alike to Scripture and to common sense. All such limiting of Christ's grace and presence to special times, or days, or places belongs to those "weak and beggarly elements" loved by foolish Galatians in the nineteenth century as well as in the first.

The mid-day glass of ale—leading in many cases to more than one—is being largely superseded by the mid-day cup of cocoa; so we have judged from observation, and we are glad to know that the report of the Commissioners of Customs confirms this by the statement that the consumption of cocoa has increased 34 per cent. during the last five years. Another important item which we glean from the same report is the unsatisfactory fact that the consumption of tobacco is considerably on the increase. In 1890-1 the amount per head was 1.55 per lb.; now it is 1.61. The amount yielded to the Customs by the tobacco duties during the last financial year was £10,135,666, but we venture to say that this addition to the revenue was dearly purchased when we consider the moral and physical deterioration caused through the consumption of this narcotic.

Individual Testimony.

Has there yet arisen in India, after a century of Christian missions, or in China since the country was opened half a century ago, any truly apostolic man, who, by force of character in Christian liberty, untrammelled by Western notions, uncontrolled by Western leading strings, has been able to compel the attention of his countrymen to any large extent, and induce them to bow their hearts to the story of Redeeming Love? We all know there have been notable converts and brave martyrs in modern oriental missionary history, but no great outstanding personality has yet appeared, as in the early ages of Christianity, or at the great Protestant Reformation epoch in Europe, or even in the revivals in this country in modern times—as an apostle of China or of India.

Is there not a cause? Has not the modern mission plan of taking the converted Indian and Chinaman into our pay tended to the weakening of their Christian vigour, the quenching of the fire of their enthusiasm, the mingling of their motives? It has at all events weakened their testimony in the eyes of their own countrymen; and their personal consciousness that this is the case must inevitably lead to their uttering that testimony with less freedom and boldness and impressiveness.

Turn we our thoughts for a moment to our own beloved land, and behold its increasing need of pure, unadulterated Gospel truth. What is to be the answer of the evangelical laity of England to-day to the increasing imposition of ritual in the Church, to the poisonous spread of priestcraft, to the withdrawal of the people's minds from the simplicity that is in Jesus Christ? Let me quote a sentence or two from the introduction (pp. 6-7) to a volume recently published, "Lord Ebury as a Church Reformer" (by Hon. and Rev. E. V. Bligh, M.A. Nisbet):—

> We may challenge the production of any Episcopal charge of that period (a generation ago), in which due cautions were officially addressed to the clergy by the Hierarchy. It was plain towards what development sacerdotal abuses, then comparatively localised, were surely tending, viz., towards a gradual and general assimilation of the worship and ritual of the Church of England to that of Rome; or rather, perhaps, it should be said, to an imitation of Romanism, or "masquerade," as Lord Beaconsfield well termed it, more disloyal and despicable than absolute Romanism ever could be.

When the highest authorities in the Established and powerful State Church—never so influential as to-day in numbers, wealth, and social prestige—are sanctioning the return to a religion of forms and ceremonies, and permitting the reassertion of priestly pretensions, and when we see that so many of "the people love to have it so," the mere denial of these pretensions, denunciation of these abuses, will not secure the maintenance amongst us of pure and undefiled religion. No; all the true-hearted must take the field. The positive statement of "truth as it is in Jesus" should become the life duty of every Christian—lawyer, doctor, merchant, banker, trader, artisan, shopkeeper, peasant, crossing-sweeper. The work will not be done in orthodox churches or chapels merely, nor even with the support brought up from mission halls and cottage meetings, but from house to house, speaking the truth each man to his neighbour, each woman to her friend, to her servant, to her fellow worker in shop or factory.

We are in a great crisis. As is the church, the true or the false, at home, will be the missions abroad; propagating the truth, or making and leading men to believe a lie. We need not expect great triumphs of the Cross in the Orient or in Africa, if the taint of Romanism or of Rationalism has infected our messengers. Purity of creed and practice at home, is essential to any wholesome spread of the truth among heathen and Mohammedans, or in making any impression whatever upon the mind of the Jewish people. If the plague be not stayed at home, alas for the foreign mission enterprise. Without noisy demonstration, without congress or conference (except to pray unitedly for power from on high), the work may be done; but it will never be done on any scale commensurate with the urgent, the tremendous need, by the paid official representatives of Protestantism. A revival in the ranks of the common membership of the churches, is the means that God can use in this our extremity; and our hope is in the living God.

A Down-Grade Confession.

The rabid rage and direct denial with which the charges of "down-grade" in doctrine were met when first made cannot soon be forgotten. Brethren who were sound in the faith, we were assured on all hands, were at once misunderstood and misrepresented. These excellent men, we were told, while holding firmly the old creeds, were only endeavouring to bring them into line with present day thought and to express them in modern language. Indeed one writer of this school published a volume bearing the significant title, "Old Faiths in a New Light." Those who dared to raise any suspicion of departures from sound doctrine were indignantly denounced as false accusers and slanderers.

In process of time, however, it was discovered that there was already a very large public, and one also rapidly growing in size month by month, only too anxious to abandon the faith of their fathers for the novelties of the hour. So soon as this discovery was made, all attempts to mediate between the old and the new ceased, and man after man boldly avowed his dislike to the evangelical creed of his childhood, and his determination to preach another Gospel more agreeable to the intelligence of the age. It is beyond denial, we might almost say even beyond dispute, that on such questions as the Inspiration of the Scriptures, the Atonement of our Lord, and the Justification of a sinner before God, the utterances from many pulpits now flatly contradict the Articles of the Church of England and the Westminster Confession. To make matters worse, when these contradictions are publicly challenged, they are allowed to pass without censure, if they are not even condoned. The outlook is most appalling, and unless God prevent it by a special outpouring of his Spirit, the threatened Apostasy of Christendom is not far distant.

It may be of some value in present circumstances to inquire concerning the principle and progress of this declension from the truth. How does it begin, and how does it advance? A peculiarly instructive history just published in the pages of an American monthly enables us to answer these questions, in so far as cases not a few are concerned. It is headed "Confessions of a Theologian." The writer tells us that he was reared in the traditional faith. His reason first revolted against the doctrine of endless punishment. True, he had been taught to distrust reason; but in this case he was confident it was the safest guide. Rejecting this dogma, he began to feel that there was no necessity for an atonement.

"A father," he writes, "who was ready to receive with open arms the prodigal son upon repentance, return, and confession, could not require propitiation by the anguish and blood of a sacrifice—could not tolerate a mediator or intercessor. My conscience revolted at the idea of an innocent Being assuming the punishment of the guilty. My reason rejected the thought that under natural law penalty could be transferred. A righteousness not acquired but 'imputed' appeared to me a transparent absurdity." After abandonment of the doctrine of an atonement for sin it was an easy step to reject the incarnation and divinity of our Lord. He naïvely tells us that "the Biblical arguments for the atonement presented no great difficulty to me at this time, since by exegetical expedients in which I had become expert, I could explain the passages which appeared to teach it in favour of my opinions."

By and by, however, he questioned the trustworthiness of the Bible itself, and reached the amazing conclusion that he could only depend on an immediate and personal revelation. Such a preposterous result is so incredible that we must state it in his own words:—

It was now evident to me that no moral or religious truth can be helpful to anyone, can be a real revelation to him, which he does not himself discern by the use of his powers, and actually take up into his own experience. Believing, then, that all revelation was internal, I sought to place myself at the point of view of the great souls out of which the Bible came, and to make their experience my own.

This whole story is eminently instructive. Briefly stated, it is the revolt of rationalism against revelation. Mind, conscience, and heart are to be the supreme arbiters of faith and duty. Man is to be the measure of God. In that case, what of the infinities and eternities? The religion which commends itself to the limited faculties of a man must prove a poor substitute for the revelation of God. It is well to learn there are only two positions ultimately possible. Either we are to discover God solely for ourselves, or we must sit at the feet of the great Revealer and humbly learn the lessons He so graciously teaches. There is no middle course. Wisdom will surely choose the place of the scholar.

OPENINGS IN FRANCE.

A CORRESPONDENT in the Savoie, France, writes to us:—There is now an open door for all Christian effort in France. After nearly five years of residence and work in the country, I state my belief that the country needs a free and open Bible in every home, and consecrated Christian workers, specially women, to go from house to house, reading and explaining it, combined with prayer for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, that the people may learn that it is Christ that must save them, and not the Virgin or the Church.

A gentleman who has worked much in France was at Keswick last month. He writes me that 250 persons offered themselves for foreign missions, but he says: "No doubt many of these will be refused as unfit for foreign service. Why should they not work on the Continent?" Why not? Let me ask that some will come over and help us the ensuing winter.

If ladies living at ease in England understood how dark these people are, almost heathen in their ignorance of the one way of salvation, Christians would, I am sure, come to the rescue. The climate is good, and the natural surroundings beautiful.

A woman who lives in the same house as ourselves said, "Unless the Virgin Mary saves me, I shall never be saved." Again, the priest of our parish church, preaching before Easter, said that "the Bible taught confession and purgatory, but that the heretics had cut out the leaves where these things were taught."

BELOVED—HATED—EXALTED:

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF JOSEPH.*

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

IN THE HOUSE OF POTIPHAR.

Many, if God should make them kings,
Might not disgrace the throne He gave;
How few who could as well fulfil
The holier office of a slave!

Great may he be who can command,
And rule with just and tender sway;
Yet is diviner wisdom taught
Better by him who can obey.

— A. Proctor.

The Midianite merchantmen, into whose hands his brethren sold Joseph, brought him down to Egypt—with its riband of green pasture-land amid the waste of sand. In some great slave market he was exposed for sale, together with hundreds more, who had been captured by force or stealth from the surrounding countries. No doubt the regions of the Upper Nile and of Central Africa were drained then as now, to meet the insatiable demand for slaves. And the delicately-complexioned lad may have found himself close to the swarthy children of the lands that lie beneath the tropic sun; lands which have been trodden in recent times by English soldiers, and which will for ever be sacred to our countrymen because of the soldiers' graves that seam the wastes of sand.

He was bought by Potiphar, "the captain of the guard." The margin tells us he was chief of the slaughtermen or executioners. He was, in all likelihood, the chief of the military force employed as the royal body-guard, in the precincts of the court. The Egyptian monarchs had the absolute power of life and death; and they did not scruple to order the infliction of a variety of summary or sanguinary punishments, the execution of which was entrusted to the military guard, which was always at hand, and afforded the readiest and most efficient instrument for torture or death.

Potiphar was an Egyptian grandee; a member of a proud aristocracy; high in office and in court favour. He would no doubt live in a splendid palace, covered with hieroglyphs and filled with slaves. The young captive, accustomed to the tenderness of his simple and beloved home, must have trembled as he passed up the pillared avenue, through sphinx-guarded gates, into the recesses of that strange, vast Egyptian palace, where they spoke a language of which he could not understand a word, and where all was so new and strange. But "God was with him"; the sense of the presence and guardianship of his father's God pervaded and stilled his soul, and kept him in perfect peace; and, though severed from all whom he knew, it was rest and strength to feel that the mysterious wings, engraved on the porticoes of so many Egyptian buildings, were emblems to him of the outstretched wings of his great Father's care—an unsleeping care beneath which his soul might nestle evermore. Who would not rather, after all, choose to be Joseph in Egypt with God, than the brothers with a blood-stained garment in their hands and the sense of guilt on their soul?

Let us consider how Joseph fared in Potiphar's house.

I. Joseph's Promotion.—"The Lord was with Joseph; and he was a prosperous man." The older versions of the Bible give a curious rendering here:—"The Lord was with Joseph; and he was a luckie fellow." I suppose the meaning is that everything he handled went well. Success followed him as closely as his shadow, and touched all his plans with her magic wand. Potiphar and his household got into the way of expecting that this strange Hebrew captive could untie every knot, disentangle every skein, and bring to successful issues the most intricate arrangements. This arose from two causes.

In the first place, though stripped of his coat, he had not been stripped of his character. See to it, young people, that no one rob you of that: everything else may be replaced but that! He was industrious, prompt, diligent, obedient, reliable. When sent to find his brothers, he had carried out not the letter only, but the spirit of his father's instructions, and did not rest till he had traced them from Shechem to Dothan. And this was the spirit of his life. He did his work, not because he was obliged to do it, but because God had given it to him to do, and had called him to do it. He read the will of God in "the daily round, the common task." He said to himself, as he said in after-life, "God did send me hither" (xlv. 5). He felt that he was the servant—not so much of Potiphar as—of the God of Abraham and Isaac. There, in the household of Potiphar, he might live a devout and earnest life as truly as when he spent the long, happy days in Jacob's tent; and he did. And it was this which made him so conscientious and careful, qualities which in business must ensure success.

When his fellow-servants were squandering the golden moments, Joseph was filling them with activities. When they were content with a good surface appearance, he toiled upward to success from carefully-laid foundations. When they worked simply to avoid the frown or the lash, he worked to win the smile of the great Taskmaster, whose eye was ever upon him. They often pointed at him with envy, and perhaps said, "He is a lucky fellow." They did not think that his luck was his character, and that his character meant God. Men often speak thus of each other, "He was always a lucky fellow;" "He was born beneath a lucky star;" "He is sure to have good luck." But except that luck means character. And if you wish to possess such a character as will insure your success in this life, there is no true basis for it but Jesus Christ. You must build on Him, or your structure will be swept away in the first hurricane. But when once you have touched Him, the living stone, with the first courses of faith—then rear the building after the plan given in his own lovely life. Tier on tier let it rise, and you will find that "Godliness is profitable unto all things, and has the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

In the second place: "The Lord made all that he did to prosper. The Lord blessed the Egyptian's house for Joseph's sake; and the blessing of the Lord was upon all that he had in the house, and in the field." This blessing was not the exclusive privilege of Joseph: it is promised to overtake all those "who hearken diligently unto the voice of God, and who observe to do all his commandments" (Deut. xxviii. 1, 2). Such blessing would oft be ours if we walked as near to God as Joseph did. It is of little use to cry with Jabez, "Oh that Thou wouldest bless me indeed!" unless, like him, we add, "Keep me from evil." But when the blessing comes "it maketh rich, and addeth no sorrow." Let us see to it that we live so that God may be with us. "The Lord is with you, while ye be with Him: and if ye seek Him, He will be found of you; but if ye forsake Him, He will forsake you."

These words may be read by servants of various kinds—the household domestic, the office-boy, the apprentice, the clerk. And if so, they will surely be helped by the example of this noble youth. He did not give himself to useless regrets and unavailing tears. He girded himself manfully to do with his might whatsoever his hand found to do. He was "faithful in that which was least," in the most menial and trivial duties of his office. He believed that God had put him where he was; and in serving his earthly master well he felt that he was really pleasing his great heavenly Friend, who was as near him in those hieroglyphed palaces as in Jacob's tents. This is the spirit in which all service should be done. "Stay where you are," said the apostles to the vast slave populations of their time, who gladly embraced the Gospel that made them free with a freedom which no thongs or chains could limit. But "let every man, wherein he is called, therein abide with God. Art thou called, being a servant? care not for it; for he that is called in the Lord, being a servant, is the Lord's freeman." "Ye serve the Lord Christ. Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men." "Be obedient to them that are your masters, in singleness of heart, as unto Christ." "Adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things." "Christ"—the great Servant—"suffered for us, leaving us an example that ye should follow his steps." These still speak to servants. If only they were acted upon, all such would as much ask the will of Christ before leaving a situation as a minister before leaving his charge. The most trifling things would be done on the loftiest principles, just as the shape of a dew-drop upon a rose-leaf is determined by the same laws as controlled the moulding of our earth into its present form. Yes; and every kitchen, dwelling-room, and office would be trodden with the same reverence and love as the floors of a temple or the golden pavement of heaven. Our lots in life are much more even than we think. It is not so important what we do as how we do it. The motive that inspires us is the true gauge and measure of the worth or importance of our life. A mean man may belittle the most momentous affairs by the paltriness of his spirit. A noble man may so greaten trifles by his nobility, that they shall become subjects for the conversation of burning seraphim, or of cherubim with folded wing.

* Mr. Meyer's studies in the life of Joseph not having appeared in The Christian, we are giving a few typical chapters from his book Joseph: Beloved—Hated—Exalted. (Morgan and Scott.)

These words may be read by masters. We cannot estimate the worth of a true Christian servant. Happy the household which is thus equipped! The Egyptian Potiphar must have been agreeably surprised at the sudden tide of prosperity which set in towards him. All things went well with him—his cattle throve in the field; his affairs prospered in the house. He may often have questioned the cause, but little guessed at first that it was owing to the Hebrew slave. "The Lord blessed the Egyptian's house for Joseph's sake"; He paid him handsomely for his servant's keep. So is it still. Ungodly masters owe many a blessing to the presence of some Christian servant or employé beneath their roof. No angel would ever alight there; no living spring would bubble there; no music would ever sweeten the daily din of work; no ladder would link that building to the skies—if it were not for some Eliezer, or Joseph, or Rhoda, that was living there. When we reach heaven, and are able to trace the origin of things, we shall find that many of the choicest blessings of our lives were procured by the prayers or presence of very obscure and unrecognised people who were dear to God.

II. Joseph's Temptation.—Years passed on, and Joseph became a prosperous man, the steward and bailiff in his master's house. "He left all that he had in Joseph's hand; and he knew not aught he had, save the bread which he did eat." And it was just here that Joseph encountered

THE MOST TERRIBLE TEMPTATION OF HIS LIFE.

We may expect temptation in days of prosperity and ease rather than in those of privation and toil. Not on the glacier slopes of the Alps, but in the sunny plains of the Campagna; not when the youth is climbing arduously the steep ladder of fame, but when he has entered the golden portals; not where men frown, but where they smile sweet exquisite smiles of flattery—it is there, it is there, that the temptress lies in wait! Beware! If thou goest armed anywhere, thou must, above all, go armed there. Yet this is so hard. It is easy to keep the armour on when we ascend the desolate mountain pass, struggling against the pitiless blast, and afraid that any boulder may hide an assassin. It is hard to keep it buckled close when we have reached the happy valley, with its sultry air. But unless we keep armed there, we are lost. "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation."

Temptation is hardest to resist when it arises from the least expected quarter. Egyptian women in those days enjoyed as much liberty as English women do now: this is conclusively proved by the Egyptian monuments, which also testify to the extreme laxity of their morals. It may be that Potiphar's wife was not worse than many of her sex, though we blush to read of her infamous proposals. They must have startled Joseph like a shock of earthquake, and filled him with a sudden tumult of thoughts. The sudden appeal to his passions invested the temptation with tenfold force. God has so arranged it that, for the most part, the sailor is warned against the coming storm; he is able to reef his sails, and close his portholes; but, alas for him if he is caught by a sudden squall! Christian, beware of sudden squalls! Men are suddenly overtaken by faults.

Policy and conscience are often at variance in respect to temptation. It seemed essential to Joseph to stand well with his master's wife. To please her would secure his advancement. To cross her would make her his foe, and ruin his hopes. How many would have reasoned that, by yielding for only a moment, they which they could afterwards use for the best results! One act of homage to the devil would invest them with power which they might then use for his overthrow. This is the reasoning of policy, one of the most accursed traitors in man's heart. It is this policy which leads many to say, when tempted to do wrong by master, or mistress, or foreman, or chief customer, "I did not care for it, or wish it. I yielded because my bread depended on it; I did not dare offend them." The only armour against policy is FAITH that looks to the long future, and believes that in the end it will be found better to have done right, and to have waited the vindication and blessing of God. Well was it for Joseph that he did not heed the suggestions of policy; had he done so he might have acquired a little more influence in the home of Potiphar, but it could never have lasted, and he would never have become prime minister of Egypt, or had a home of his own, or have brought his boys to receive the blessing of his dying father.

The strength of a temptation lies in the response of our nature to its suggestions. It is said that the germs of the potato and vine disease are always floating in the air, but they can find no place of operation—no bed—in healthy plants. But directly plants become degenerate and unable to resist their attacks, then they sweep away the farmer's hopes in dreadful ruin. So it is with us; if only we were like our Lord, we should pass unscathed through a whirlwind of temptations; they would find nothing in us. It is because our hearts are so desperately wicked that we need to stand in constant watchfulness. "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life." There is no sin in having certain tendencies, appetites, and desires, else there would be sin in hunger, and in drowsiness leading to soft sleep. But the danger lies in the fear that they should be gratified to an immoderate excess, or from wrong and improper sources. Human nature is very liable to this. It is biassed thus, and stolen waters are sweet. Therefore Joseph must have suffered the more.

We should always carefully distinguish between the appetites and desires which are natural to us, and those which we have acquired by evil habit. About the latter we need have no hesitation. We can give them no quarter. They must be cut up root and branch, as weeds from garden soil are thrown upon the bank, that the sun may scorch out their life. But the former need careful watching, because, though in themselves they are natural and beautiful, yet they are always liable to demand excessive gratification in respect to right objects, or gratification in directions which are unnatural and forbidden. We must never expect the time to arrive, on this side of death, when these natural tendencies will be rooted out, and so long as they remain in us, they will constitute a nidus in which the germs of temptation may sow themselves, and fruit. No thoughtful man, who knows his own weakness, can ever dare to affirm his immunity from temptation, or the impossibility of his yielding. If he stand, it is only by the grace of God.

There were peculiar elements of trial in Joseph's case. The temptation was accompanied by opportunity: "there were none of the men there within." It was well timed, and if he had yielded, there was not much fear of detection and punishment; the temptress would never publish her own shame. The temptation was also repeated day by day. How terrible must have been that awful persistency! Water, by constant dropping, will wear away rocks; and the temptation that tries at last to win its way by its very importunity is to be feared most of all.

Yet Joseph stood firm. He reasoned with her. He urged his master's kindness and trust. He held up the confidence which he dared not betray. He tried to recall her to a sense of what became her as his master's wife. But he did more. He brought the case from the court of reason to that of conscience, and asked in words for ever memorable, and which have given in all ages: "How shall I do this great wickedness, and sin against God!"

There are few subjects which require more notice both from speakers and writers than this great subject of chastity. Society is merciless on the occasional consequences of unchastity and on the wretched victims: but it bears of the sin itself with an averted smile, or calls it by some other name. But there is no one sin which sooner corrupts the heart, weakens the intellect, and destroys the body. The poet Robert Burns wrote out a bitter experience in his "Letter to a Young Friend."

"The hallowed lowe o' weel-placed love,
Luxuriantly indulge it;
But never tempt the illicit rove,
Though naething should divulge it.
I waive the quantum o' the sin,
The hazard o' concealin';
But oh, it hardens a' within,
And petrifies the feelin'."

And Lord Byron, ending his brief and unchaste life at the age of thirty-six, closed his last poem with these mournful words:—

"My days are in the yellow leaf,
The flower and fruit of love are gone;
The worm, the canker, and the grief,
Are mine alone!"

There is no one sin which will sooner bring about a nation's fall. If history teaches anything it teaches that sensual indulgence is the surest way to national ruin. Society in not condemning this sin condemns herself.

It is said that the temptations of our great cities are too many and strong for the young to resist. Men sometimes speak as if sin were a necessity. Refuse to entertain such thoughtless and dangerous talk. Whilst the case of Joseph remains on record, it is a standing contradiction to the whole. A young man can resist; he can overcome; he can be pure, and chaste, and sweet. We must, however, obey the dictates of Scripture and common sense. Avoid all places, books, and people which minister to evil thoughts. Resist the first tiny rill of temptation, lest it widen a breach big enough to admit the ocean. Remember that no temptation can master you unless you admit it within your nature; and since you are too weak to keep the door shut against it, look to the mighty Saviour to place Himself against it. All hell cannot break the door open which you entrust to the safe keeping of Jesus.

What a motto this is for us all! "How can I do this great wickedness?" I, for whom Christ died. "How can I do this great wickedness?" Others call it "gaiety"; "being a little fast"; "sowing wild oats." I call it SIN. "How can I do this great wickedness?" Many wink at it; to me it is a great sin. "How can I sin against God?" It seems only to concern men; but in effect it is a personal sin against the holy God.

It might have been better if Joseph had not gone into the house to do his business; but probably he had no choice except to go. He took care not to be with her (ver. 10) more than he could help. We have no right to expect God to keep us if we voluntarily put ourselves into temptation. But if we are compelled to go there by the circumstances of our life, we may count upon his faithfulness. If the Spirit driveth us into the wilderness to be tempted, we may expect to enjoy also the ministry of the angels.

Joseph did a wise thing when he fled. Discretion is often the better part of valour. Wiser to lose a coat and many a more valuable possession than lose a good conscience. "Flee youthful lusts." Do not parley with temptation. Do not linger in its vicinity. Do not stay to look at it. It will master you if you do. "Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, neither stay in all the plain."

There is no sin in being tempted. The mob may batter at the palace gates; but the national life is safe so long as sin does not penetrate into the throne-room, and thrust itself into the royal seat. The will is the citadel of our manhood; and so long as there is no yielding there, there is none anywhere. I cannot be accused of receiving stolen goods, if I am simply asked to take them in—a request which I indignantly repudiate. The sin comes in when I assent, and acquiesce, and yield. At the same time, it is in the highest degree unwise to relinquish the battle until it comes into the inner shrine of our being. Much better fight it in the first circle of defence—in the first suggestion, or insinuation, or desire. Resist the devil there, and he will flee from you; and you will be saved a struggle within, which will leave its scar on your soul for years to come.

May we have grace and faith to imitate the example of Joseph, and, above all, of our stainless Lord. We may be quite sure that no temptation will be permitted to assail us—but such as is common to man, or that we are able to resist. The onset of temptation indicates that God knows that we are strong enough to resist, and that sufficient grace is surely within our reach. And the Almighty Father would lead us to put forth that strength, and to avail ourselves of his resources. "He that abideth in Him sinneth not. He that sinneth hath not seen Him, neither known Him." Never forget that we who believe in Jesus are seated with Him at the right hand of power; nor that Satan is already, in the purpose of God, a defeated foe beneath our feet. Let the Overcomer into your heart, for Him to overcome in you, as He overcame in his own mortal life (1 John iv. 4; and John xvi. 33). Open your whole being to the subduing grace of the Holy Spirit. And thus we shall be more than conquerors through Him who loves us

The Northfield Conference.

THE TENTH SESSION.

Everything that Mr. Moody touches seems to prosper. The August conference at Northfield, established on a small scale in 1880, has met for the tenth time, and has been largely attended. In Mr. Moody's absence the chief command has devolved on Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, whose addresses at Northfield in past years, so full of unction, have greatly helped to gain for the conference the popularity it now enjoys. The song service was led, as usual, by Mr. Sankey, aided by Mr. G. C. Stebbins.

On the opening day, August 4, Dr. Gordon gave some words of warm welcome to the assembled visitors. He said the great aim of the convention was to seek the instruction and illumination of the Holy Spirit of whom the Saviour promised that He would lead believing disciples into all truth. Such instruction is the most urgent demand of our times. We cannot too strongly insist on the great canon of interpretation that spiritual things are spiritually discerned. We cannot interpret Scripture by mere intellect, any more than a mathematician can interpret "The Creation" by the multiplication table, or a shopkeeper comprehend "Paradise Lost" with his yardstick. The Northfield Conference is not set for the defence of any special school of theology. Its conductors recognise that the heart is the best theologian. Therefore great stress is laid on heart culture and spiritual communion. The desire is rather to promote consecration than controversy.

Dr. Gordon proceeded to show the relation of doctrine to spiritual life from the text, "Take heed to thyself and to the doctrine." The best way for a Christian to take care of his doctrine is to take care of himself. There is what we may call a canned-fruit theology doctrine hermetically sealed in creed and confession to keep it from spoiling. They can be kept orthodox in this way, but they cannot be kept fresh. The only way to extract from doctrine the flavour of real life is to eat it directly from the vine every day. If we are abiding in Christ in daily and hourly communion, we shall find fresh fruit every day with which to refresh a needy world.

Mr. G. C. Needham gave a comprehensive address on "The Plan of the Ages." He traced in outline the recorded history of the human race from Adam down through the Mosaic, prophetic, and Christian dispensations, to this present time of doctrinal apostasy; and foreshadowing the course of the future in the second Advent and the personal reign of Christ on the earth for a thousand years. A New York paper states that the delivery of the same address recently in North Carolina excited great interest, the judges of the Supreme Court of the State and the lawyers adjourning the sitting of the court to hear it.

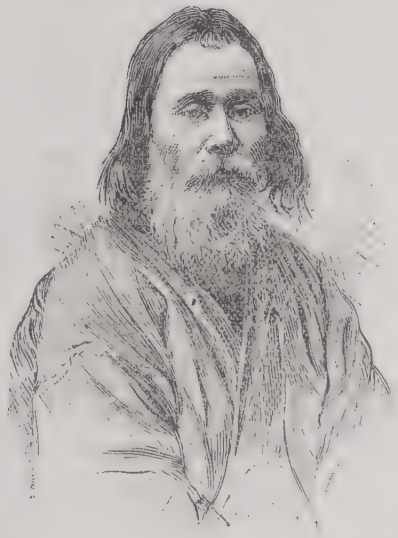
THE MISSIONARY INTEREST

of the Conference was very great. Many facts of deep interest as showing progress and Gospel triumphs were related in addresses from Dr. Baldwin, formerly a Methodist missionary in Foochow, and now secretary to the Foreign Mission Board of the Church; Dr. Nevius, of the Presbyterian Mission in China; Rev. L. W. Cronkheit, Baptist Missionary in Burmah; Rev. C. Janvier, Presbyterian Missionary at Futchegar, India; Dr. A. Mitchell, and others. A thousand dollars were promptly subscribed for famine suffers in Upper Siam. On another day, Miss Richardson, from Bombay, told a thrilling story of rescue work among women. Miss E. Cummings, Medical Missionary in India, spoke of the horrors endured by women in that country for lack of proper medical attention. An eloquent address on the missionary responsibility of the Churches at this period of unique opportunity in heathen lands was given by Dr. Gracey, of the International Missionary Union.

Writing from Northfield on August 18, Rev. F. B. Meyer says:—

"God has abundantly answered the many prayers which have been offered on our behalf. It would appear that all who came up to the Convention have received a most gracious in-filling of the Holy Spirit, and are testifying on all sides to the blessing they have received. Many ministers have confessed to having received entirely new conceptions of the way in which their work may be done, and the power by which to do it.

"The conference proper closed on Sunday, and a very remarkable day it was. The church was densely crowded in the morning, many standing. The text of the sermon was 1 John iv. 16. Dr. Gordon presided over a great meeting in the Stone Hall in the afternoon, while I preached again to a noble audience; and in the evening we were permitted to conduct together one of the most solemn meetings that I remember, for consecration and the filling of the Spirit.



"On Monday many returned to their homes, being unable to remain longer, but a considerable number have remained, so that we have had largely-attended meetings throughout this week. It is not the convention proper. But there is not much difference.

"It is impossible to estimate all the good that must accrue from these gatherings, and from the scattering of the truth through the Press. The New York Tribune is shortly publishing the whole of the addresses for about 8d.

"The heat has been excessive, but I have been kept in good health, and am not over-strained, and hope that the return voyage, from August 27, may be as favourable and reinvigorating as the former one was. It is somewhat difficult to get away, and a man might easily spend a very valuable life in going quietly through the great cities of the United States teaching the principles of the inner life, and the conditions of spiritual power.

"Mr. Moody's vast schools are growing and prosing. In September there will be 350 young men at Mount Hermon, and 300 young women at Northfield. All are longing for his return, and eager for every scrap of news concerning one who, unlike most, is loved and honoured best here, where he has been known intimately from boyhood."

CHIRIPA THE AINU.

CHIRIPA, NATIVE OF JAPAN.

The original of the accompanying photograph is an Ainu, a native of Horobetsu, Yezo, North Japan. He assisted Rev. J. Batchelor, C.M.S., to translate the Gospel of St. Matthew into Ainu, and very proud he is of it, for whenever he refers to it he says, "I and Mr. Batchelor made it."

He is now teacher to Mrs. Nettleship and myself, and thanks to the training he has had while with Mr. Batchelor, he makes a capital teacher, and takes great interest in his work.

The Ainus are, as you are doubtless aware, with very few exceptions, great drunkards. I am happy to say that "Chiripa," the subject of these remarks, is one of these exceptions, but consequently he is a very self-righteous old man. My wife and I are making him a subject of special prayer, and we do trust that the Holy Spirit may convince him of the need of a Saviour.

May I ask our brother and sister readers of The Christian to pray for him too? Let each of us with unbroken faith look for an answer to our prayer. It will indeed be a happy day when I can write and tell you that Chiripa is a true child of our loving Father in heaven. If any Christian friends would like to know more about the work amongst the Ainus, I will gladly give them all the information I can. A post-card addressed Hakodate, Japan, will find me. P. HARVEST.

Each season of the year as it revisits us brings its own special messages to our hearts. What has the harvest to say to us this year as once again we behold its glories? We take into our hand one single golden ear of corn and count from it some forty or fifty grains of wheat. Whence comes this grand multiplication from one solitary grain? Did it arise from some gigantic effort on the part of this "corn of wheat"? Nay, but from its "baptism into death."

And afresh to our hearts comes the Master's question, "Are ye able to . . . . . be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with"?

We are ready, it may be, for active service; but are we ready to pass through any kind of death that may be appointed for us in the bringing forth of much fruit? Are we prepared to suffer in the dark so far as earth is concerned, and to have the sentence of death upon those things we had been accustomed to consider essential to life itself?

Many in these days shrink from associating God's will with that which is painful. Is not this through an underestimate of the unique glories enclosed in "suffering according to the will of God"? Let us praise Him for every death-blow He deals out or permits to be dealt out to that which is in any wise hindering the development and multiplication of that Divine life which He has implanted within us. The process may seem to be veritably rending us to pieces. What of that, if by trustful acquiescence we are thus brought into more sacred union with Him who, in the agony attendant upon bringing "many souls unto glory," exclaimed: "Oh, my Father, if this cup may not pass away from Me except I drink it, thy will be done." Who can estimate the honour of being allowed in any little measure to participate in our Captain's sufferings, even apart from the consummation of the coming glory, when in the fullest sense the words shall be fulfilled? "They joy before Thee according to the joy in harvest, and as men rejoice when they divide the spoil"—that "spoil" which those shall share who, having been made partakers of Christ, have in their little measure through his indwelling presence poured out their soul unto death (Isaiah liii. 12). "A LITTLE WHILE."

Heb. x. 37.

A little while until the veil is lifted,
That hides Thee, Saviour, from our longing view;
Then praise without a note of sorrow mingled,
Shall rise in endless anthem, ever new.

A little while to serve amid the shadows,
Till breaks the day dawn on our far-spent night;
Then in thy kingdom rest to gather round Thee,
For perfect service in unclouded light.

A little while to wait while Thou art bringing Thy costly stones from Nature's quarry yet:
All for the temple of thy glory needed;
Each on thy heart in priceless value set!

A little while to watch till Thou shalt call us
To lay the weapons of our warfare down;
When in thy victory we have more than conquered,
And in thy worthiness we claim our crown.

Till then, dear Lord, as strangers here we tarry,
All that we prize with Thee has gone before;
Within the veil our love, our hope, our worship,
What but thy coming can our joy restore?

"A little while." We trust for Thou hast spoken,
Though dreary seem the night and long the way;
Come, Jesus Lord, and let thy weary pilgrims
Find in thy presence our eternal day!

THE NEED OF FRANCE.—A correspondent writes from Aix-les-Bains, Savoie: I wish some Bible or tract depot could be established in this place, as it is impossible at present to procure a copy of God's Word. Gambling is practised to a great extent at the Casino, which is also much frequented by people of immoral character. Vice prevails, and the Sunday is a day devoted to amusement, horse-racing, pigeon shooting, children's balls, and theatrical entertainments. It is a most ungodly place, and very trying, indeed, to those Christian people whose health necessitates their coming here for the sake of the medicinal baths and waters.

THE PRINCE OF PREACHERS.*

A LIFE-SIZE PORTRAIT.

In certain respects, C. H. Spurgeon suggests to our mind the sweet singer of Israel. Both in type and in the range of spiritual exercise the correspondence between them is intimate. "I conceive of David," he said one day, "as a man of large bowels, large heart. He could not have been the king he was among men without them. These seem to be the seat of emotion, and the key, under God, to popular influence. Despite the snare they involve, it is such men that draw others to them over the widest area; that can affect human nature most widely; and whether in song or discourse can travel farthest. I love David, for he was a man of soul; and what a vessel unto honour did he become! How he measured out in himself the whole range of spiritual exercise; so that wherever we are, in the valley or in the heights, groaning or exulting, we find ourselves reproduced in him."

C. H. Spurgeon was like David in the character of his influence and the many-sidedness of his humanity. He was in preaching, as David in song—the master of the great organ of the human heart. He could move and persuade, and thrill and sympathise; for where, indeed, had the hearer been that he had not? Had he not looked down into the same abyss? Had he not stood on the same golden height? Had he not met Apollyon at that very spot? Could he not boast of deliverance in that self-same extremity? Unquestionably, C. H. Spurgeon was a David in his day. When he preached, it was heart speaking to heart; and his words were as a battering-ram, before which the gates of brass were forced to yield.

Mr. Spurgeon's voice stamped him as pre-eminent, being an organ in itself of amazing compass and sweetness of modulation. His speech was music, He was a born speaker, both as to the quality of note and ease of utterance. He needed no training in elocution, for he had it.

Once when I suggested that he should give the students a lecture on elocution, he smiled and said, "That was the one thing he could not understand anyone requiring instruction in. To himself, modulation of voice and appropriate emphasis seemed as natural as it was to breathe." And, indeed, in his case they were very much on a par. As a reader—had he chosen that lower platform—he would have been famous. But the Master had need of him whom we may call the Chrysostom of his age. It was no trouble to him to clothe his thoughts, and to give them, in doing so, eloquent expression. Words trooped to his service as required, and the thought he had to enunciate shone forth clear as crystal.

Nor was his discourse ever verbiage, or a mere melodious sound in the ear. The born orator—as in Henry Irving's case—often lays himself open to this charge. Mr. Spurgeon's diction was never high-sounding or bombastic. His speech was seldom rhetoric. His thought was not obscured by profusion of flowers. He could take wing—nothing delighted him more; his rostrum was his throne. He was extempore in the true sense of the term, for his notes were but the barest bones of thought. On the spot he mused, and the fire burned. With the grandeur of his theme he soared; the transcendent never became small in his hands; if the thought was sublime, he would give it sublime expression; if homely, he bedecked it accordingly. As a speaker, he was all things in season, and rarely was he in anything too much. No one, surely, in listening to him, could say they wanted him to move on, or could accuse him of iteration, or of moving round and round in a circle.

But it would have been impossible for him to have escaped such a charge, or to have maintained the flight he did, had not his intellect been an equal associate of his great heart. The brain of this truly great man was of a giant order. He had mental faculty far in excess of the average. He did with ease, and spontaneously, mental feats which men of name and inordinate vanity struggle in vain, even by elaboration, to accomplish. Besides, he had, what every large brain has not, large method and unwonted power of concentration. He could grasp the bearings of a subject, hold his theme well in hand, and deploy his thoughts like troops in tactical movements. He was never "at sea." He never got confused or lost in the chaos of his own thoughts—there was never any chaos there. All was orderly arrangement. He knew exactly when he began his discourse the forces he had to manœuvre, the troops that were to lead on in the attack, and the reserve he had in the rear. Further, historic memory was about as perfect in this speaker as it could well be, and no tale he had to tell ever suffered in the telling of it.

Perhaps, however, his most distinctive mental possession was—point. He had a rare power of focussing his thoughts. While he elaborated with ease his ideas, he made them portable and easy to bear away by a happy epigrammatic finish. It was marvellous how, when he had expounded a thought, he could thus make it live for ever in a few terse, pithy words. The same faculty shines forth in his correspondence. He had the power—a power in daily exercise, a power impromptu—of loading language to a degree we have never seen approached. Altogether, he was a man of rare combination of gifts; a man of prodigious activity; a man who lived while he lived, and whose memory and works will live on to bless mankind.

RECEIVING AND GIVING.

"Did you know, dear, that Mrs. Pierson has been sick for three or four days?"

"No, I had heard nothing of it."

"I thought you hadn't, or you would have said something about it. I have been told that she has been complaining a good deal because her pastor has not called on her in her illness."

"Why, how could I visit her when no one told me she was sick?" said the Rev. Mr. Florence, with a slight flush. "No doubt she sent word to her physician as soon as she was taken ill, but left her pastor to learn of it by accident; and now finds fault with him because he is not omniscient. I fear Mrs. Pierson is given to such inconsistency of conduct."

"Oh, yes, of course," agreed the minister's wife. "She is known as one of the chronic grumblers of the church. Her reputation is well established in that respect. In our Aid Society she is always getting her feelings lacerated, always thinking of herself, and often threatening to drop her name from our roll when things don't go her own way, though she hasn't done so yet."

"Is she willing to work when asked to?"

"No, she is always too busy, or not well enough. Yet when she is not placed on the most important committees, or given the most prominent official position, she complains of being slighted. But never mind, dear," added Mrs. Florence, checking herself, "there are such people everywhere. One must bear with them, I suppose," with a sigh. "All of us have our besetting sins. We must do Mrs. Pierson all the good we can."

"You are a kind-hearted, sympathetic little woman," said the clergyman, stooping and printing a warm kiss on his wife's forehead; "always trying to overlook troublesome people's faults. Well, you are actuated by the true principle, the principle of the Gospel. I must go to see Mrs. Pierson at once, although I am far in arrears with my other work. She may be seriously ill," and he went to the wardrobe for his hat, overcoat, and gloves.

When he entered Mrs. Pierson's sick room he found her sitting up in a comfortable chair, convalescent, though looking slightly pale. Her indisposition had evidently not been very serious or of long continuance. She looked up at her pastor a little reproachfully, and the words with which she greeted him, as he took her hand, were these:

"Why, Brother Florence, you are almost a stranger! I thought you had forsaken us. I am afraid you are not a very good shepherd; you don't look as carefully as you ought after your sheep."

Mr. Florence was stung by this ungracious salutation, and felt the blood mounting to his temples, but he was a Christian gentleman, and restrained the impulse that prompted him to answer in a tone of rebuke. He merely said:

"Had I known of your illness I should have come at once. If you needed me, you should have sent for me as you did for your physician. It was only by an accident that I learned a half-hour ago that you were sick."

"Is that possible?" sighed the invalid, drawing her face in such a woe-begone way that she looked the very picture of neglected virtue. "Well, if you didn't hear of it before, I'll have to excuse you. But it just shows how selfish people are that they did not inform you sooner of my suffering condition. Here I've been sick for nearly a week—and I thought I should die the first few days—and yet no one in the church thought enough of me to send my pastor word. O, dear! how selfish people are!"

"Did you instruct anyone to tell any of my people of your indisposition?" inquired Mr. Florence, looking at her a little keenly.

"No, of course not," the sick woman rejoined. "What's the use of belonging to a church if the members never keep track of one? I never was so neglected in my life. Would you believe me, Mr. Florence? Not one of your members has called on me since I was taken with this sickness—not one!" and her dark eyes flashed angrily. "Can you expect me to remain in a church where I have been treated with such shameful neglect? I think I shall withdraw from Harrison-street Church as soon as I am well—if I ever get well—and go where people are more thoughtful of others."

Had she been in a debilitated condition Mr. Florence would have borne all this abuse of his faithful people meekly and uncomplainingly; but her vehement speech proved that she had a good deal of vital energy, and would be in no danger of sustaining injury by listening to a little plain speaking.

The time had come to do that. He would strike while the iron was hot. Abuse of himself he would not have resented, but he could not silently give ear to such a tirade against his true and loyal people. For their sake, and the sake of the poor morbid woman before him, he resolved to tell the unvarnished truth, even at the risk of displeasing her.

"Mrs. Pierson," he said, in the clear, firm tone of which he was master, "you are doing injustice to your fellow members, who, I feel persuaded, had not learned of your illness. All of them are busy people, and cannot spare the time to run into your house every day or two merely to inquire after your health, and you ought not to expect it of them. If you wanted them to come you should have conveyed the intelligence to them in some way. Besides, within the last few months there have been at least a dozen of my people on the sick list, some of them quite dangerously ill. Let me ask, Mrs. Pierson, how many of these have you called on?"

"Why—ahem!—ahem!" coughed the woman. "I haven't called on any of them. The fact is, I've been too busy, I couldn't; and then I didn't know they were sick."

"Did you make any effort to find out?" catechised the clergyman.

"Well, no; I didn't."

"Then why do you complain of neglect when you have yourself been so neglectful of others? There is Mrs. Batinger, for example, who has been a confirmed invalid for two years, and is now at the point of death. She only lives four blocks from here. Have you ever called on her?"

"I—I—believe not—"

"Besides," pursued Mr. Florence, having gotten started, "two months ago my own children were dangerously ill with the scarlet fever. Many of my parishioners came to the gate—we would not permit them to enter the house lest the disease should be spread—and made kindly inquiries and offered their help. Did you come near us during that trying period?"

"Oh, no! I was afraid that I and my children might take the disease."

"Yes; all along you have been thinking of yourself, and not of others; you have been expecting to receive sympathy and help, but have withheld your own. If you neglect others they will forget you. That is human nature. Be kind and thoughtful of others, and, as a rule, they will pay you back in kind. I fear you have forgotten the precept of our Saviour, when He said, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive;' or, perhaps, you have reversed it."

The poor woman burst into tears, but I fear they were globules of self-pity rather than of repentance; for she murmured and sniffled: "It is very unkind of my pastor to lecture me in this way, and that when I'm sick, too! O dear! O dear!"

"I did not mean to be unkind," responded Mr. Florence, soothingly; "I spoke for your own good, as you will see by and by if you will remember my words."

With a brief prayer he quitted the house. His plain speaking was not without effect. Sooner than he had hoped it bore excellent fruitage. Six months later Mrs. Pierson was heard to say: "I never had so many kind friends as I have now, and it all comes because I have moved out of the land of 'Receive' into the paradise of 'Give.'"—*N. Mr. Moody in Ireland.

(From our Special Correspondent.)

Before beginning his sermon at Coleraine on Thursday evening Mr. Moody did as he had done at Derry and elsewhere—besought much earnest, believing prayer on behalf of the month of special effort on which he had entered in Ireland. "God seems to be coming very near! I do not know when I have spent two such days as the two that have just passed." As one who has been a close and interested observer of Mr. Moody's evangelistic work in the three kingdoms I can fully endorse his remark. If large and eager crowds coming together at every meeting, listening to the Gospel message with the most rapt attention, and showing a ready response to the call for a manifestation of spiritual concern—if these things are symptomatic of impending and widespread revival, then there is good and sufficient reason for the hopes of the Irish friends to run high, and for their faith to be strong on the wing, in view of the coming visitation of God in this strangely fascinating land.

Do not let us suppose, however, that the Divine action is arbitrary in this matter. Mr. Moody is fond of saying that the set time to favour Zion in any nation is the time when the Church of Christ is ready and willing and anxious to be blessed. From all parts of Ireland there are clear indications that the hour is ripe and that the Christians are ready. It must also be admitted that Mr. Moody, the chief human agent, is throwing himself into the work with a spirit and an ardour that bespeak a fresh anointing with the oil of consecration and an added enduement of power. The way in which he survives the constant physical strain and spiritual tension is a standing marvel. What he has recently gone through is a striking instance in point. Last week it was noted in these columns that after conducting four public services, with a couple of after-meetings added, in Southampton on the Sabbath, he started soon after midnight to travel almost continuously from the extreme south of England to the far north of Ireland. Mr. Moody is a poor sailor, but the journey across the Irish Channel was made in tolerable comfort, though with little real rest. Shortly after reaching Dublin he was facing an audience of a thousand Christian workers, rousing them by his plain and pungent words to attempt large things for a projected week's mission in that city. Early next morning he was en route for Belfast. Here immediately on arrival he visited the leviathan structure in which his meetings are being held this week. He afterwards met the local committee, and took earnest counsel with them as to the preparation for the coming mission. Then the journey northwards was resumed, till Londonderry was reached on the Tuesday evening at 7 o'clock. In the little company that travelled with the evangelist, were Mr. J. H. Burke, his singing lieutenant, and Dr. Williamson, of Fisherwick-place Presbyterian Church, Belfast. Dr. Williamson is quite a veteran in revival work, and he gave himself very heartily to help Mr. Moody during this flying run to the northern counties of Derry and Antrim.

is an important and picturesquely-situated town at the estuary of the river Foyle; it is the largest seat of population north of Belfast, having nearly 30,000. It is a place that will ever be memorable in the annals of Irish history, for the Derry boys resisted the determined siege of the Popish James II. in 1688 for over a hundred days, and were eventually relieved, though at a considerable loss of life. The walls of the city, which stood the Protestant defenders in such good stead in that troublous time, are still intact, and form a promenade encircling the centre of the town, whose boundaries have now far outgrown them.

Mr. Moody's visit to Derry was very brief, but it will leave behind it precious memories with many. An hour after reaching the town the evangelist had to take his place in the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Church and preach to a congregation that completely blocked passages and doorways and every available corner. An overflow was held in another building, where Dr. Williamson was the preacher. That evening's work was an auspicious beginning of Mr. Moody's third evangelistic visit to Ireland. Next afternoon a large assemblage came together again, and the final meeting in Derry was held on Tuesday evening. At the close of his address, which was a very powerful one, on the peril of coming near to the kingdom of heaven and missing it at last, Mr. Moody invited the anxious to adjourn with him to another church, where he would still further explain to them the way of life. This building was some five minutes' walk distant, but the stranger had no difficulty in finding his way thither in the darkness if he followed the crowd. The large area of the church was well filled with those desiring to hear more about salvation, and the readiness with which many responded to the evangelist's invitation to a public and audible confession of Christ must have filled his heart with joy, and been to him a token for good as to the result of his labours in Ireland.

The local friends arranged to fall in with Mr. Moody's suggestion of continuing the special effort during the week, and doubtless they will reap much additional fruit. It was hoped that Mr. Merton Smith might come over from Scotland and follow up, but engagements already contracted would not allow.

STRABANE.

The Belfast Committee certainly cannot be charged with having narrow ideas of Mr. Moody's capacity for continuous work, and for the resistance of physical fatigue. They arranged that during the four days, from Tuesday to Friday inclusive, he should address three meetings a day, with a considerable modicum of travel thrown in, so as to embrace two places each day. Early on the Tuesday forenoon a start had to be made from Derry for Strabane, a little country town of 4,000 inhabitants, about fifteen miles up the River Foyle, and on the border of County Donegal. A single meeting could only be given to this district, which the evangelist had never visited before. Arrangements had been entered into with the railway company, and a cheap excursion train was run from some of the outlying places. The capacity of the Presbyterian Church (of which Rev. E. Clarke is the youthful and active pastor) was severely taxed by the large throng that filled it at noon on Tuesday, and to whom Mr. Moody descanted on the Divine compassion with a pathos and a power that I have seldom seen him exceed. The whole gathering seemed to be melted down by his heartfelt presentation of this most attractive of all the phases of saving truth. At the close of the discourse a number adjourned to the lecture-hall for some further dealing and exhortation. The rest of the congregation remained bodily in the church for a prayer meeting, over which Dr. Williamson presided. It may be appropriate to mention here that in each of the places visited during the week Mr. Moody made a special request that Christians should be instant and fervent in prayer to God for a blessing on Ireland, and on the special mission he is hoping to conduct in different parts of the island—north, east, and south. To the workers assembled in Dublin he declared his firm belief that no political movement from any party would avail to bring true peace and happiness to distracted Ireland. The Gospel of God's grace is the only remedy for its woe and its discontent. So he said he coveted beyond all else the prayers of his fellow Christians, that God would smile on the united effort now being made to bring the people to hear and obey the Gospel.

As Mr. Moody and his companions were at the Strabane railway station waiting for the return train to Derry, a goodly crowd had gathered of those who were going back to their homes. At Mr. Moody's request, Mr. Burke sang some verses of his favourite hymn, "Then shall my heart keep singing," and the chorus was speedily taken up by the bystanders. So ended a flying but interesting visit to Strabane. It is in contemplation to "follow up" here also, if satisfactory arrangements can be made.

PORTRUSH.

The party had to be early astir on Wednesday morning, for they had to catch the 7 a.m. train from Londonderry for Coleraine. Here they were joined by Rev. Henry Montgomery, one of the three Belfast secretaries. On him has fallen the burden of much of the correspondence and negotiation, and he has been kept at high pressure for some time past. But Irish pluck and a heart all aglow with zeal has carried him through. The first engagement for Wednesday was a meeting at the popular watering place, Portrush, the point of approach by rail to that great geological "wonder of the age," the Giant's Causeway. Mr. Montgomery's brother is pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Portrush, and the meeting would have been held in his church if the weather had been unfavourable. The alternative place of assembly was on a hillside close to the sea, overlooking the beautiful bay, and almost on the lip of the ocean. Looking direct north from this part of the coast, as a Belfast friend facetiously put it, there is nothing but water between the spectator and the North Pole.

It was the day of the Portrush Regatta, and excursion trains brought large additions to the native population, already swollen with seaside sojourners. A platform had been erected at the foot of the slope, and when Mr. Moody's audience had all been gathered there must have been quite three thousand souls within hearing of his voice. He held their close attention while he set forth the doctrines of repentance and regeneration, and cut from under the feet of the listeners some of the false foundations on which men are so prone to rest. Speaking of the strange replies that are sometimes given by those who are asked about their spiritual standing he told of one lady away out in British Columbia who said that of course she was a Christian, as she had a brother who was an archdeacon! A more recent case nearer home was equally ludicrous; an English woman was confident of her safety because her family entertained all the local preachers that came their way! By such sarcastic banter, by effective illustration, by vehement exhortation and appeal the preacher shut up the motley throng before him to the necessity of the new birth. In the crowd were many wearers of the white tie, who, if they cared to do so, might have carried away some very helpful hints as to how to reach the ear and move the heart of the masses with the Gospel message. Before the congregation broke up an invitation was given to proceed to the church where a second service would be held for seekers. It was interesting and amusing to hear the remarks of the crowd as they moved away from the height towards the town. One lively, loud-spoken Irishman, who had evidently been in America, and was conversant in some degree with Mr. Moody's early career, was imparting information to his companions. "He's a rale practical man; indade, sor, he's a grate jaynius, and he strikes verra heavy blows sometimes."

The Presbyterian church was almost filled with interested hearers, who laid aside for the time their holiday-making and their pleasure-seeking to give attention under Mr. Moody's tender promptings to the higher concerns of the soul. From all parts of the building came the welcome responses "I will trust and not be afraid." Surely one may cherish the faith that not a few who went to Portrush in search of seabreezes and summer pastime will leave it with the perennial joy of summer in the heart, and with all sail set for the celestial haven.

COLERAINE.

There was barely time for Mr. Moody and his helpers to get some refreshment on their return to Coleraine by road, before he was due for another open air gathering on an open space by the side of the river Bann, known as Fair Hill. It was interesting to hear that this identical spot was closely associated with the great Irish revival of 1859, which took its rise in this northern region. After a telling Gospel address, a good proportion of the audience proceeded to one of the churches, where a deeply interesting after-meeting was held.

In the evening the largest church in the town was crowded, and the congregation were rewarded with an address of singularly pathetic and soul-moving presentation of the Divine love as it is shadowed forth in the parable of the prodigal son. In the elaboration of such a theme Mr. Moody seems to be peculiarly at home. When he had ended his exhortation he split the company into three—the backsliders and doubters and the anxious were directed to the other church; Christians remained to pray under the leading of Dr. Williamson; and a little band of young men was drafted into the adjoining lecture-hall, where they were spoken to by Rev. Henry Montgomery. The after-meeting in the other church was large, and full of hopeful augury. Dr. Wilson, of Cookstown, a venerable minister who has just retired from the active pastorate, first of all gave a short address—simple, direct, and in every respect suitable. Then Mr. Moody pressed home the folly and the guilt of spurning the love of God in the rejection of his Son. The impression made was great, and the somewhat sleepy but thriving town of Coleraine, with its 6,000 and odd souls, had a waking up that will be doubtless remembered for many a day to come. The meetings were arranged for by the local Y.M.C.A. Prominent among the active local workers were Mr. Crawford (secretary Y.M.C.A.), Mr. Bascher, and Mr. Hine (who was Mr. Moody's host).

BALLYMONEY AND BALLYMENA.

These two towns were visited on Friday, the last working day of a very busy week. The evangelistic party were driven over from Coleraine to the former place, and were entertained at breakfast at the hospitable manse of Rev. J. Armour, one of the Presbyterian pastors, who had invited a number of his fellow ministers from the surrounding district to meet Mr. Moody. There was a large assemblage in one of the churches at 11 a.m. Ballymoney reminds one very forcibly of the remoter part of the far north of Scotland, where the "kist of whistles" is a rank offence and the metrical version of the Psalms is the highest, if not the only true, vehicle of human praise. There was no organ, and therefore no Gospel solos, but Mr. Moody's words were weighty and powerful, the drink coming in for some staggering blows. There was not much time left for drawing the net, but time enough to show that the arrows of truth had gone home.

Train was taken for Ballymena, or rather Cullybackey, where Mr. Young, of Fenaghy, met the party, and took them off to luncheon, afterwards driving them to Ballymena for the afternoon meeting. This was an open air one in a field belonging the "horse jumping" fraternity. A large raised wooden platform used for the accommodation of spectators at the equine jumping feats, did excellent service, and gave seats to a thousand people or so. As many more stood on the grass in front of the temporary covered rostrum that had been erected for Mr. Moody. The rain that had threatened for some time rather marred the occasion by cutting short Mr. Moody's discourse, and dissolving the gathering. A number repaired to one of the churches, where earnest and faithful exhortations were given by Dr. Williamson and Mr. Montgomery. The church was crowded again in the evening, and Mr. Moody gave the continuing portion of his sermon, which was the always telling one on "Excuses." There was a great breaking down of hearts of the people and an opening of their lips, for at the second meeting between 200 and 300 confessed themselves as desirous of having done with manufactured excuses and of accepting the royal invitation to the banquet of salvation. Thus closed the labours of the first week in Ireland, and certainly Mr. Moody will never forget it.

On Saturday he rested with Mr. Young, at Fenaghy, preparatory to entering on the week's work in the Great Ulster Convention Hall, that stands on The Plains in Belfast.

has been an important factor in the week's work. Though feeling rather tired from the continuous labours of the last nine months, he has entered with spirit into the Irish meetings, and his rendering of the Gospel songs has been with manifest acceptance to the people. He sings with much skill and intelligence with a happy combination of musical emphasis and distinctness of enunciation. He has sung new songs as well older favourites. Everywhere he has been heartily and efficiently supported by the local united choir, which have been brought together for the occasion at short notice. Not the least of the benefits that accrue from these special missions is the way in which they open the floodgates of consecrated song. And a singing church, as Mr. Moody takes pains to show, is a fruitful as well as a rejoicing church.

THE BELFAST MEETINGS.

One of the things that bring great encouragement to Mr. Moody as he goes up and down the kingdom is the assurance he constantly receives of the permanency of his previous labours amongst us. When travelling by rail last week a head was popped into the window of the carriage at one station, and the owner exultingly told the evangelist that through his meetings in Glasgow he had been converted, and he was now working away for the Master. Here, in Belfast, it is delightful to be told that many of the young men, now active and prominent in Christian work in the city, are the fruit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's mission in the city eighteen years ago.

It was a singularly happy circumstance that the great wooden structure known as the Convention Hall was secured for the mission. There is no permanent building in the city that is anything like large enough, and it is an open secret that Mr. Moody would not have visited Belfast at this time unless this capacious building were available. The committee, I understand, had some little difficulty in getting the necessary permission, but some of them are not easily daunted, and perseverance at length prevailed. The hall is nearly square in form, and admirably built for hearing. The local brethren have certainly taken effectual steps by personal visitation and by flaming posters, as well as newspaper advertisement, to make the meetings known, and special facilities will be granted, I understand, by the railway companies. Mr. Moody's original idea was to restrict the Belfast visit to a week, but if a strong religious interest develops in the early meetings, in all likelihood the mission will extend over a fortnight. These is an obvious gain in having one large convenient centre to which the surrounding populations may resort. The cumulative influence that is largely lacking in very short missions will have fuller scope.

THE OPENING MEETING

on Sabbath morning at eight o'clock was a splendid disappointment to any of little faith who feared that such a big building could not be filled at such an hour. By eight o'clock the vast quadrangle was literally a sea of faces, and there was scarcely a vacant seat. It was a spectacle to rejoice any Christian heart, and one that has not been seen, I suppose, even at Mr. Moody's meetings, since the old days of the Agricultural Hall, Islington. The place of meeting is at the extreme western outskirt of the city, and, of course, many had to walk a considerable distance. A moderate calculation set down the attendance at 9,000.

After Mr. Burke had rung out in good style "When the mists have rolled away" and "Behold, what manner of Love," and earnest prayer had been offered by Archdeacon Leaver and Dr. Williamson, the evangelist took as the appropriate subject of his short opening address "The Bible." He had previously taken pains to find out that all in the vast throng could hear his voice. If there is to be a genuine work of God in Belfast, he said, it must be in connection with the Old Book. If we go according to the views of our fellow-men we may be led astray, but if we obey our written instructions we are in the safe path. The reason why so many modern movements have failed is because they have not been based on scriptural grounds. Of what use is a Christian for work or warfare unless he knows and understands his Bible? A well-drilled army of a thousand soldiers will put to rout 100,000 who do not know how to handle their weapons. Mr. Moody went on to urge with his customary alertness and cogency that we must accept God's revelation as a whole and not cut and carve it to suit our own ideas. Then he told of the wonderful increase of Bible circulation in recent times. Instead of the Bible becoming effete or "going out" it is only just "coming in." What, he asked, has made Great Britain the nation it is? The Bible and the place given to the Bible. Spain went down in the scale of nations because she withheld the Bible from the world; and France is following the same evil example with the same result. It will be a dark day for Great Britain and Ireland if they give up the old Book. If America and England were fully united in carrying the Gospel to the ends of the earth the whole of the heathen nations might be evangelised inside of the next twenty-five years. Mr. Moody on this trip endeavours to avoid any matter that would create prejudice in the minds of the Roman Catholics and would be a bar to their attending his services, but this morning he felt constrained to urge that all the Protestant nations should get closer to each other, and combine to hold on to the Bible. In his closing prayer, also, he thanked God that we were living in a country where we have liberty to read the Scriptures without interference or disturbance from anyone.

Drawing his remarks to a close, he said he had been praying to God that this mission would result in blessing that will extend far beyond the boundaries of Belfast, or even of Ireland. Why should not God raise up here a great multitude and send them forth to preach his Gospel to the ends of the earth?

Probably the address was not what many in the audience expected, but Mr. Moody has not been slow to learn the lessons of experience, and so he laid the foundations of his teaching broad and firm on the eternal Word of the Lord. We cannot doubt but God will honour him in the coming days with the seal of abundant success.

AN AFTERNOON MEETING

was announced to be held in the great hall at three p.m. Long before that hour a constant stream of men and women blackened all the streets converging on the hall. It was a remarkable sight in the line of church-going. By half-past two the hall was packed in every nook and cranny, and the doors had to be closed. An overflow meeting was held on the open space near the hall, to which some 3,000 people remained, but probably twice that number went away disappointed at not getting entrance. Altogether the number of those who repaired to the place of meeting must have been close on 20,000, if not over it. The outside overflow were addressed by Dr. Williamson and Mr. Montgomery.

Inside the hall Mr. Moody had a very attentive hearing, except when a fainting person caused a little temporary distraction. The discourse was specially directed to the question of responsibility of parents in getting their children brought within the circle of blessing while the mission lasts. Mr. Moody told of a man who, on a past visit to Belfast, did not get blessed till near the close of the meetings; then he was sorely grieved that he had not sooner brought his family to the meetings. When Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey had gone on to Dublin this man went there with all his household, and did not rest till everyone of them, servants and all, had been led to a conscious saving knowledge of Jesus Christ. With this striking incident as the starting point, the preacher very earnestly pressed home the importance of parents and friends seeking to get their children and relations to share in the holy converting influences of the mission, before these favouring conditions pass away. There was a tone of intense earnestness in the exhortations throughout, and they seemed to fall on receptive ears. At the close a season of prayer followed, and to this the great bulk of the audience remained.

Another immense assemblage crammed hall and passage on Sunday evening. The crowd in the galleries was so dense that proper order could scarcely be maintained. At the close of Mr. Moody's impressive sermon nearly all remained for after-meeting. The Evangelist said it was the largest after-meeting he had seen for the past twenty-five years. A third meeting followed, when additional workers were enrolled to help in regulating the proceedings. During the day fifty thousand were estimated to have repaired to the hall.

Monday evening is always a crucial period at the commencement of a mission. The day was very wet throughout, yet there were few vacant seats, showing a remarkable degree of interest beyond mere curiosity. Mr. Burke's singing of "When the mists have rolled away" having been blessed on the previous day, he sang it again by request. Mr. Moody gave a very powerful address on "Qualifications for Service," seeking to rouse Christians to special efforts among the unsaved. The audience seemed greatly moved under his impassioned appeals.

Before and after the address many intensely earnest prayers were offered that salvation might come to hundreds of hearts and homes in Belfast this week.

At the men's meeting, subsequently held in the adjoining church, we had deeply interesting testimonies from those converted at former missions held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey. On the last three days of this week afternoon Bible readings are to be held for country visitors.

THE FELLOWSHIP CHOIR,

some three hundred strong, occupy a raised platform, where they command the whole sweep of the building. They have been for some time in training by Mr. A. W. Vance, a musical celebrity in the town. He works loyally under Mr. Burke, and plays the instrument when the former sways the bâton. While the audiences are assembling the choir sings some of the "New Hymns and Solos," and thus familiarise the people with them.

Among the friends who have come over to help from England and Scotland are Messrs. T. A. Denny and W. H. Seagram, from London; Mr. W. Robertson, of Carrubbers-close Mission, Edinburgh; and Mr. J. Anderson, of Ardrossan. Mr. Anderson is on his way to America, to pay a visit of observation to Mr. Moody's Bible Institute in Chicago.

After his fortnight's stay at Belfast, Mr. Moody expects to open a three days' mission at Dundalk, on Sunday, September 11, and the latter part of the week will be devoted to Cork, in the far south.

MR. J. B. WOOKEY.

Mr. James B. Wookey, widely known as a fearless advocate of the Purity Crusade, and an earnest evangelist, has, as our readers probably know, during the past three or four years been associated with Dr. Barnardo as deputation secretary to his home for children.

This week Mr. Wookey departs for Canada, in the Mongolian, which sails to-day from Liverpool. He takes with him nine little musical boys, and is accompanied by a couple of colleagues. His intention is to visit the larger cities in Canada, and throughout the United States, telling the story of the rescue of waif children, and of the beginning and origin of Dr. Barnardo's work, whilst seeking to interest in that work our English-speaking brethren across the seas. We are sure our readers' prayers will follow our brother, for whom we have the very highest esteem, and with whom for years past we have had unbroken.

Mr. Wookey bears letters of introduction, couched in the heartiest terms, from Mr. Moody, whose name carries great weight in the States, and Mr. George Williams, the President of the Y.M.C.A.'s throughout the world, which will, we hope, open many a door to him through the American continent.

THE HOSPITAL SHIP, "QUEEN VICTORIA," belonging to the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, is now lying in Folkestone Harbour, where she is probably to remain until Saturday or Monday next. Gospel services, conducted by Mr. G. A. Hutchison (editor of The Boy's Own Paper), assisted by many local and other friends, are being held daily at three and seven o'clock. Those of our readers who are now staying in or near Folkestone should not miss this opportunity of visiting the Queen Victoria—one of the finest vessels belonging to this excellent Society.

A POOR WOMAN, living in a close off the Cowgate, Edinburgh, was brought to Christ last May. She no sooner found how enriched her life had become than she was anxious to do her utmost to tell others of these inexhaustible riches of Christ. Consequently, she bought a missionary box, and began to put her spare coins into it. Her children helped with the coppers earned by running messages after school. As her husband was taking out the money for drink faster than she was putting it in, she brought five shillings to her minister to help Dr. Ashton in Mirzapur. She intends to open a special mission account in the Savings Bank in the future. Her selection of the Mirzapur Medical Mission is due to the grateful recollection of many kindnesses from Dr. Ashton when he was connected with the Cowgate Dispensary.

For the Young.

OUR STREET ARABS' CAMP.

Many readers, both young and old, will be interested in some account of our recent sojourn "under canvas."

After encamping for several years on Holtye Common (near Tunbridge Wells) we have been enabled this summer to carry out a long-cherished purpose and pitch our Boys' Camp by the sea. It was no easy matter to find a spot combining all our requirements. We needed a dry site, where even the deluge of a big thunderstorm would rapidly percolate away—a plentiful and handy supply of good water—a strictly private enclosure for the camp, and yet abundance of open country for our young campaigners to run over — near enough to the sea to allow bathing to be a pleasure instead of a toil to the young fry, with a perfectly safe bathing shore, a good available cricket pitch, etc., not near a town with a motley crowd of excursionists, and yet within reach of a population we might gather to hear the Word of Life at our evangelistic services.

After scrutinising the map and scouring the coast from Shoeburyness to Bognor, we were led to fix upon Littlestone-on-Sea, a newly-developed seaside property, on the Kentish coast between Hythe and Dungeness, near the old town of New Romney.

Instead of sleeping our boys in one large marquee, this year we pitched twenty military bell tents and put about ten boys in a tent. Each tent had a wooden floor, made in two segments of a circle, raised two or three inches from the ground and covered with a good thickness of clean wheaten straw. A knapsack, which held each boy's kit, as a pillow, and two blankets, completed the bed equipment. We added a little fresh straw now and then, as the straw after some use began to fail as a spring mattress.

The large marquee occupied previously for sleeping accommodation was turned into a big refectory, while the circular tents formerly used for meals descended in the scale to a lavatory fitted up with a lot of galvanised washing-baths on stands. Our evangelistic tabernacle, floating its scarlet pennant with the legend "Gospel Tent" in big white letters, and sundry store tents, etc., completed our camp array.

I need not detail our boys' amusements and excursions, sea-bathing, boating, athletic sports, cricket, fishing, etc., and, what pleased me very much, long all-day rambles to Dungeness Lighthouse, Lydd Camp, Hythe, etc., covering ten, twenty, thirty miles — even to Dover and back, forty-two miles, in the case of some elder boys. This enterprise was a very gratifying proof of a thorough change in tastes and habits on the part of boys who a few months ago found pleasure in merely loafing about the street-corners.

The services in the Gospel Tent, which have always attracted large gatherings, were remarkably well attended by increasing audiences quite beyond the seating capacity of the tent, but by placing forms all round outside hundreds were able to sit and hear "the joyful sound," besides many who stood about reverently listening to the story of the Cross. There was a very solemn feeling at these meetings. The Spirit of God was evidently brooding over the people, many of whom had recently been impressed at some tent services held in the neighbourhood by that great home missionary agency the Evangelisation Society. It has always been a real pain to me year by year to have to leave so soon those who have assembled so eagerly to hear "the good Word of God," and have manifestly been moved by "the powers of the world to come," but I do rejoice that our holiday visits have always been a means of blessing to the village folks around, in this case very gratefully acknowledged by many.

Beyond the pleasure and healthy influences in mind and body these outings bring to the boys, there remains another very important benefit, especially in prospect of their emigration to Canada by-and-by. Not a few weak, stunted boys seem to have only just enough vital energy to exist—none to spare for growing—till they get a change like this, when they become so invigorated that they begin to sprout up as if by magic. As soon as we come home we have to begin to change the clothes of some on this account, and others shortly are found to have palpably outgrown suits that were quite big enough when they started for their three-weeks' outing.

About two-thirds of the lads had only been a very short time—many, indeed, only a few weeks—under our influence, so that we felt some anxiety as to how their morale would stand the strain of such freedom. For some weeks beforehand I gathered them together for friendly talks upon holiday ethics, and I was fully rewarded by hearing and seeing during our camping-out how thoroughly they had entered into the spirit of these counsels. Their conduct was splendid; in fact, my helpers and I all agreed that in this respect it was quite the happiest holiday we ever had. There was a "brotherly" feeling evinced throughout, and the kind attention of the elder lads to the younger ones was the constant subject of very favourable comment by onlookers.

We have now settled down to our work for the coming winter. Every bed here is full, and I think our branches will soon be quite full too. Any slackness in the labour market makes itself felt at once in a work like this. The very poorest, widows and orphans, are not able to tide over a crisis, but, having no resources to fall back upon, are reduced in a few weeks to the common lodging-house or the casual ward. "Give us this day our daily bread" has a very real meaning for us here; but we remember what goes before—"Our Father"—and are sustained by the remembrance of his loving care these twenty-two years past. ON THE SANDS.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Seaside Reports from Workers.

HERNE BAY.

The work here is deepening and increasing. Our prayer meetings, at which a short address to beginners is given on practical subjects, have been well attended, upwards of 70 being present. On Saturdays it has taken the form of a "Christian Endeavour meeting," a subject being chosen, and any present being at liberty to speak upon it. Upwards of thirty spoke at our last meeting on the subject of "Answered Prayer," and many most encouraging testimonies were given. The weather having been very good, all things considered, the beach services have been more largely attended than ever. The many talks after the meetings have shown that the Word has been with power. Our "boys' meetings" are held on Sunday evenings in a drawing-room which has been put at our disposal by the kindness of friends. Last Sunday about fifty were present, and some who were opposed have taken a bold stand on the side of Christ. The "girls' meetings," attended by upwards of 100, were taken by ladies, and were the means of definite blessing, which continues to be seen in brightened faces and in altered lives. The testimony of parents has been most encouraging, and we cannot but praise God for this evidence of his good hand upon us. Each week a "little dots'" meeting has been held, and though the last was, owing to very heavy rain, sparsely attended, they were most interesting times. They were managed throughout by ladies. Our hands have been much strengthened by a band of lady workers full of zeal and eager for individual work. Not a little testimony and praise for blessing has been received from adult friends.

SOUTHWOLD.

We have had some encouraging tokens of God's presence in our midst. We have enrolled twenty-five members of the Children's Scripture Union. The attendances at our workers' prayer meeting, and on the beach have increased day by day, although the season at Southwold is very short, and fortnightly visitors are numerous. Miss Larter, Organising Secretary of the Y.H.L. for Dr. Barnardo, addressed the children yesterday. The collection produced 28s. 3d., and I gave half of this to Dr. Barnardo's work. Mr. Birney, of the C.M.S. College, Islington, arrived yesterday. He has very kindly volunteered to come to our help from St. Leonards. He worked most successfully with me last year. He is busy to-day hunting up the children scattered along the beach.

EASTBOURNE.

The weather here has been beautiful, and the attendance at the Services has steadily increased. We had our Bible Object Service yesterday, when over 150 objects were brought by the children; many rather original ones; a live dog and crumbs, tenons in one board, potter's clay, Eastern sleeping mat, human hair, bird's nest, myrtle tree, vinegar and smoke, drops in a bucket, cracknels, a three-fold cord, corner-stone. During this week Rev. G. Harford Battersby has been giving a series of helpful addresses to young Christians at the Prayer Meeting, and on Wednesday evening a gathering of Christian workers took place in St. Paul's, when 150 were present. The addresses to adults in the evening have been well attended, and the attention and interest shown amidst the many other attractions on the beach have been most cheering. My helpers are getting hold of the boys splendidly. At one meeting twenty boys remained behind, many of whom professed to decide for Christ. It is very delightful to see so much result of the work of former years here and elsewhere; many of the children are standing firm in their homes, and earnestly striving to help others. The lady workers are indefatigable.

SOUTHSEA.

Perhaps our largest service, so far, was on Wednesday, when about 300 gathered on the beach in beautiful weather. Our Lantern Service, in the evening, went off most successfully; having again obtained the Mayor's permission, our procession marched round the canoe-lake singing "Whither, pilgrims, are you going?" on emerging from the Gardens, those carrying lanterns formed a large ring, behind which a goodly crowd gathered. An onlooker, as the procession passed him, was heard to remark, "an excursion to Heaven"—a remark which one of the speakers turned to good account in his address.

LLANDUDNO.

The children's services here have continued during the past week with ever-increasing success, and with more and more of blessing. Tuesday and Friday evenings were devoted to special meetings for boys and young men, both of which were very successful. At the latter meetings sixty-seven lads assembled, and we earnestly trust they met the Saviour then. The girls had their meeting on Thursday evening, and many came to hear what was to them the Word of Life. We must not omit to mention the special gathering on Tuesday for nurses and maids, at which more than one found "joy and peace in believing." But of all the days of this week, to-day (Friday) is most to be remembered. After the prayer-meeting came the beach-service in most glorious weather; and truly the Spirit of God was at his gracious work in our midst. Then, in the afternoon, a huge stronghold of sand was constructed on the beach, over which the mission banner floated proudly till compelled to submit to the force of the waves. Such a multitude of busy diggers was surely never seen before on one sand castle! But the crowning meeting came in the evening in the shape of the boys' meeting above referred to, and our first lantern service. The lanterns numbered over 280, and the sight, as the long procession zigzagged over the rocky Orme, defiled across the Happy Valley, and then descended by the road, was most pretty. And the people! As one little chap said, "half the inhabitants of Llandudno were looking on"—and the same opinion was held by some of the inhabitants. Then came the short service on the green by the pier entrance, and an immense volume of sound rose from thousands as "All people that on earth do dwell" was sung.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.
SEASIDE SERVICES, 1892.

The following are the arrangements for the Children's Services to be continued in September, as far as known:—Mr. E. Arrowsmith, at Eastbourne; Mr. Henry Hutchinson, at Bridlington Quay; Rev. C. H. Nash, B.A., at Scarborough; Mr. A. G. Dodderidge, at St. Leonards; Mr. W. H. Roberts, B.A., at Llandudno; Mr. E. E. Cornaby, B.A., at Brighton; Mr. Chas. J. Small, at Mablethorpe; Mr. J. S. Tyler, at Chichester (September 3 and 4), and Bexley Heath (September 8).

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Sept. 4, Sam. i. 19-28; Mon. Sept. 5, ii. 1-11; Tues., Sept. 6, ii. 12-21; Wed., Sept. 7, ii. 26-36; Thurs., Sept. 8, iii. 1-10; Fri., Sept. 9, iii. 11-21; Sat., Sept. 10, iv. 1-18.

REV. E. H. VAN DYKE, of the American Women's Mission at Nagoya, Japan, furnishes the following to the Japan Chronicle: On a recent Sabbath morning eleven adults and eight children were baptized. There was from one family three generations baptized together, grandmother, father, and son. Also another whole family, father, mother, and three children. These were touching incidents. The working missionary force has been increased recently by Misses Julius and Hamilton from England, and Miss Gardner from America.

Y.M.C.A. CRUISE TO NORWAY.

A somewhat motley crowd it was, two hundred strong, that poured forth from the special trains at Newcastle Docks to embark on the s.s. Warrimoo. Looking down from a philosophical pedestal, many, doubtless, would have felt inclined to prophesy that the component elements were incongruous.

There were on board many experienced Christian workers, who were sometimes inclined—for the sake of mutual profit—to wish that others were on the same plane of spiritual enjoyment. On the other hand, there were some who had no knowledge of the Y.M.C.A. and no desire to come into very close quarters with its members. There was a large intermediary contingent, happy Christian people, who—while enjoying spiritual exercises, were also glad to join in the pleasant social games on deck, and in the musical and other entertainments which occupied some of the evening hours.

At the close of the ten days' cruise the sentiment was general amongst the passengers, and was warmly expressed at a farewell meeting, that the result was eminently satisfactory, and the expedition a great success. The most pleasant feature in this connection was that this testimony was heartily forthcoming from those who might naturally have been expected to be the last to render it. There were some who did not hesitate to acknowledge the blessing and spiritual stimulus that they had derived from Christian fellowship; and none can tell the extent of the unrevealed influence that was felt by all. The tone of the whole community was raised by the recollection of the auspices under which the cruise was conducted. A resolution of hearty appreciation of the kindness and wisdom of the Committee of the City of London Young Men's Christian Association in organising such a party was unanimously passed at the closing meeting.

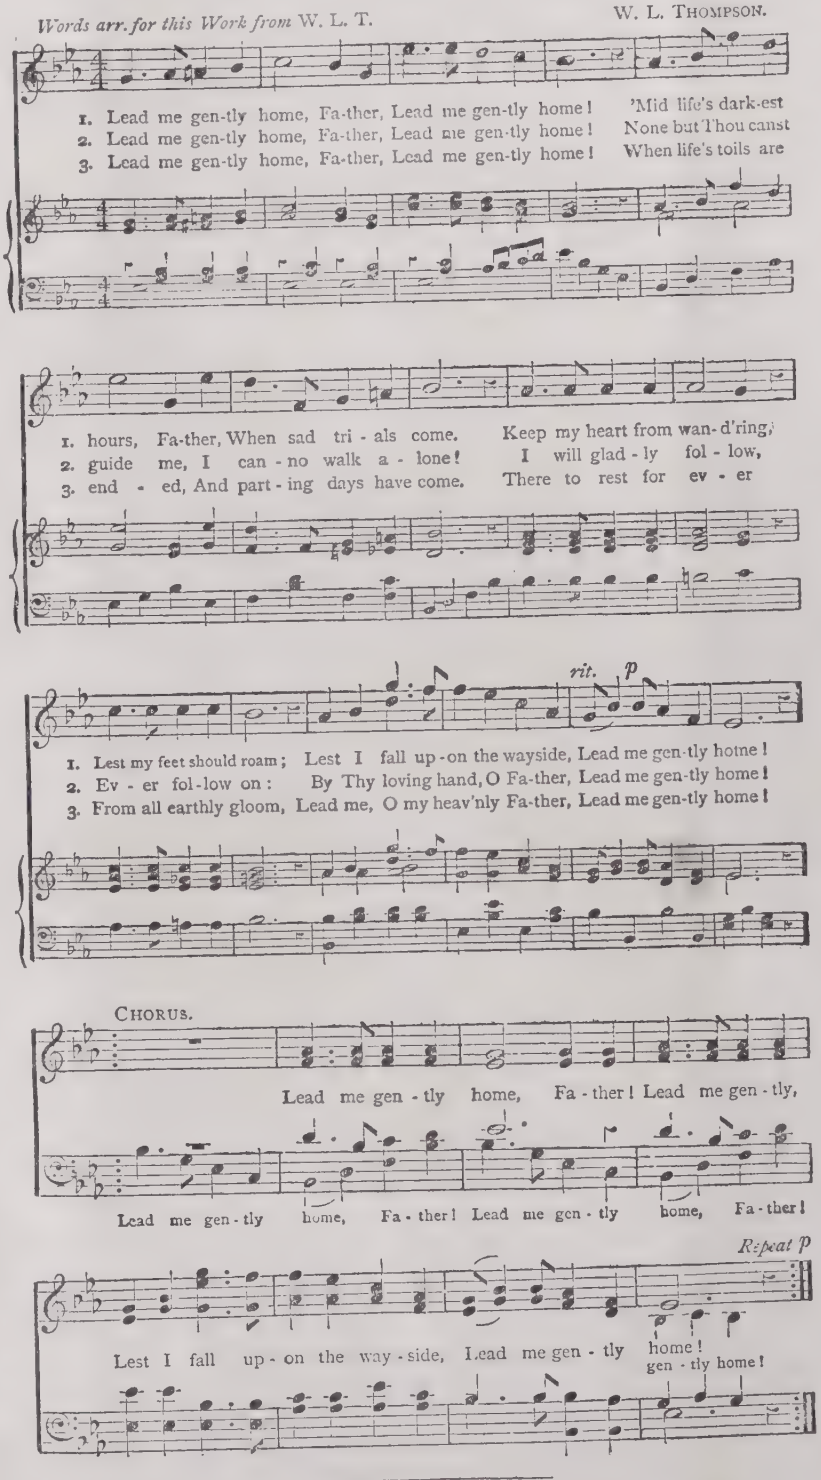
Although the North Sea was comparatively calm on the outward crossing, there were not a few who were rendered uncomfortable by its undulating swell. All the passengers gladly hailed the Norwegian coast as it came in sight on Sunday afternoon. Services were conducted during the day by Rev. R. B. Boyer, Ealing (Clerical Secretary of the Missions to Seamen); by Mr. W. R. Lane; by Rev. G. D. Hooper, Hendon; and Rev. W. Summers, Epsom.

An interesting circumstance was that one young man joined the party hoping to meet with someone who would speak to him as to his spiritual condition. He was not the only one led to decision for Christ.

Monday morning broke amidst cloud and rain, which led to a variation in the programme. Instead of landing for a stiff walk on the banks of the Hardanger Fiord, at Eide, as had been proposed, the ship stood up the Maurranger Fiord, and gave the passengers a good view of the Folgefonden glacier. Eventually the whole party was landed at Ulvik, and greatly enjoyed the first run ashore on Norwegian soil. In the evening anchor was dropped at Odde. On Tuesday, excursions were made to the three most attractive features of the locality, Skjæggedalsfos, a magnificent waterfall; Lotefos, a group of three beautiful falls; and Buerbrae, an arm of the above-mentioned glacier. The most arduous undertaking, involving a pedestrian and boating journey of twelve hours, was the Skjæggedalsfos; yet, notwithstanding heavy rain, this was accomplished in good time by forty-one passengers, three of whom were ladies.

On Wednesday the Warrimoo steamed to Bergen, a town which was greatly enjoyed by all. On Thursday a gigantic expedition was made from Bergen to Gudvangeu. One hundred and eighty passengers rose at four a.m. and proceeded by special train, sixty-six miles, to Vossevangen—a unique railway ride through regions of grandeur and beauty. Then followed a drive, in the vehicles of the country, for thirty miles with occasional halts. The fatigue of the journey was enhanced by the constantly changing features, which constrained unbroken attention. The Nærodal transcends description, and is believed to be the finest drive in the world. The next port of call was Molde—a beautifully-situated town, the visit to which was greatly enjoyed—and then on to Christianssund and Trondheim. The sail up to the latter town was made in halcyon weather. The row ashore in the light of the setting sun by those who were privileged to enjoy it might fitly be described as "a dream of beauty." Here letters from home were received. Trondheim Cathedral was thronged by an English and native congregation; the Polytechnic boat, the Albano, being also in the harbour, sent its contingent. The visitors were privileged to witness both a baptismal service and a wedding, and to see Thorwaldsen's magnificent sculpture, Christ Blessing Little Children. Two services were held on board during the day.

Turning south from Trondheim, a stiff south-west breeze was faced, to the dismay of many. Resting in Bergen Harbour on Monday night, the anchor was weighed for the last time on Tuesday morning early, and tracks were made for England across an almost unruffled sea.



With hearts overflowing with gratitude to Him who had taken out this large party and brought them home again in safety and peace, the Warrimoo's company was borne slowly up the crowded Tyne by the good ship which had proved to be such a happy temporary home. Landing at Wallsend the passengers found a special train awaiting them. Arriving at Newcastle Central Station, they were all in due time scattered to their destinations.

The ship was most comfortable; the officers were all that could be desired. The cruise in its entirety will be remembered by all who were privileged to share in it—and especially by those who formed valued friendships—with unqualified pleasure. B.

A "CATHEDRAL CAR."

Dr. A. T. Pierson writes:—That "cathedral car" in North Dakota is a great success. At many places along the line of railway where it is left for services there is not a room large enough to hold twenty persons; and over and over again ninety have crowded into the car, which seats seventy; and often the congregation is larger than the whole village. Not only the people of churchless neighbourhoods, but the railway employés, are described as asking affectionately when "their cathedral" is going to arrive.

The Bishop of Dakota adds:—My custom is to do all the work necessary in the car with my own hands. It would be very unlike a missionary in this new North-west to bring a uniformed porter on my journeys. It would give unreality to the work. So I prepare the lamps and light them; I sweep the floor and make my own bed, and distribute the leaflets, and make the fires, and put the seats in order. About half the time it falls to my lot to play the organ. I find all this no hardship; often I have three or four hours on my hands while waiting for service time on a side-track, and many come to see me then, and feel disposed to look on me as a working-man like themselves.

This looks to us like the right kind of work done in the true spirit of the Master. Knowing the Bishop as we do, it is no surprise to find him thus at work.

REV. A. F. SCHAUFFLER, D.D.,

MANAGER OF THE NEW YORK CITY MISSION.

A FEW days ago I was speaking with a friend, who remarked, as to Dr. A. F. Schauffler, the manager of the New York City Mission: "It is no great credit to Dr. Schauffler that he is a good man and doing a great work. I do not see how any man who had such a father could be anything but a good and useful man." The speaker forgot that great and good men sometimes have very inferior sons. Dr. William G. Schauffler (the father) was, however, a very remarkable man. His history reads like a romance. In his early youth his parents emigrated from Germany and settled at Odessa in Southern Russia. He received but little religious instruction at home, and was converted through the preaching of a devout Roman Catholic priest. His educational advantages were exceedingly limited; but he was a born linguist, and by earnest study and contact with foreign residents he acquired a knowledge not only of German and Russian, but also of French, Italian, and English. His intense earnestness and missionary zeal caused him to leave his home and prospects of worldly success, and made him a famous missionary. In 1825 the well-known Jewish missionary, Dr. Joseph Wolff, arrived at Odessa. His eager mind was always occupied with some new plan for work.

He proposed to form a travelling missionary institution, and invited Dr. Schauffler to accompany him. The plan was to go to Palestine, where Dr. Schauffler was to enter the monastery of Kasobeen, on Mount Lebanon, and study Arabic, Persian, and the Mohammedan controversy, while Dr. Wolff was engaged in preaching. On the completion of his studies they were to go to Persia, Dr. Schauffler to labour among the Mohammedans and Dr. Wolff among the Jews. Dr. Schauffler soon became convinced that his friend's plan for preparing young men for missionary work must be abandoned.

After being together for six months Dr. Schauffler took ship at Smyrna for America, selling his gold watch and a few books in order to pay his passage. He arrived at Boston with just ten dollars, the proceeds of a Russian fur which he sold to a fellow-passenger. He took lodgings in a sailors' boarding-house, and immediately went in search of the missionary rooms of the American Board. His reception was cool and reserved, but courteous. He was informed that the American Board did not educate young men for missionary work. He informed the secretary he hoped he might find some Gospel minister, whose children he could instruct for his board, and at the same time have the use of the minister's library and study under his guidance. He received a letter of introduction to the professors of Andover Theological Seminary. Some of these gentlemen not unreasonably looked upon the young man as a visionary enthusiast or a religious vagabond. But the fact that this young Russian, dressed in an outlandish grey cloak and long boots, spoke five modern languages, was something in his favour. He was advised to remain at Andover until the Faculty of the seminary should decide his case. Dr. Schauffler found employment at a cabinet shop until his great ability was recognised, then he was engaged to work in the seminary library. He became a great linguist, and understood twenty-six languages. He was master of Hebrew, Arabic, Chaldee, Syriac, and Persian. His translation of the entire Bible into pure Turkish is a marvel of scholarship and patient industry. For more than forty years this great and good man laboured among the Jews and Turks at Constantinople, passing to his well-earned rest January 26, 1883. His sons are all actively engaged in Christian work.

Dr. A. F. SCHAUFFLER, the subject of the present sketch, is the gifted and successful manager of the New York City Mission. Born at Constantinople on November 7, 1845, he grew up under missionary influence, and at an early age became interested in the Lord's work. During the Crimean war he used to carry packages of New Testaments to the French camp near his home, which were distributed to the French soldiers, who gladly received them. He daily saw the English, French, and Turkish armies and navies coming and going, and these were always a source of great delight to his boyish heart, however much anxiety these scenes of war may have caused his parents. At the age of fourteen he was converted, and from that time always hoped to be a missionary. There were no good English schools in Constantinople at that time; he therefore received his education at a German school, except Latin, Greek, and mathematics, in which studies he received instruction from his father. There were good opportunities to learn foreign languages at Constantinople, and the young man became thoroughly versed in English, German, French, Greek, and Turkish. In 1863 he came to America and entered Williams' College, Massachusetts. During his college days he loved all manly sports, and had nothing of the ascetic about him, yet he was intensely earnest and whole-souled. He was one of those students who elevated the standard of Christian life in the college by his ability, his perfect naturalness, and consistent piety.

After graduation he returned to Constantinople, and spent one year in studying Hebrew, Greek, and Arabic. At that time he fully expected to be a foreign missionary. In 1868 he travelled four months in Europe, and then returned to America, entering Andover Theological Seminary to prepare for the ministry. While in the seminary he became superintendent of a Sunday school in Andover, and began that Sunday school life which has formed so large a part of his subsequent activity, and in which he has become so remarkably successful. During these three years at Andover he laboured incessantly, and when he left the seminary his health was not good. He therefore took charge of a small country church in Massachusetts, where he remained for one year.

All this time he had an understanding with the New York City Mission that as soon as he was physically able he would enter their work as a city missionary. This he was able to do in the fall of 1872. He first took charge of a chapel on the Bowery and worked almost exclusively among men of the rougher and lower classes. The Bowery has always been a favourite resort for thieves, gamblers, prostitutes, and adventurers of all kinds. In no other spot in America can so many homeless, wretched, and lost men and women be found. Here this gifted, earnest young man found a missionary field which is both home and foreign in its character, and one of the most difficult in the world. The result of the work in the Bowery mission is seen in the magnificent Broome Street Tabernacle,

After very successful work in the Bowery, Dr. Schauffler was placed in charge of Olivet Church, one of the most important stations under the care of the City Mission. Here he laboured steadily for fourteen years with remarkable success. Olivet Sunday school has become famous all through America, and visitors from all parts of the world came to Olivet Sunday school to study Dr. Schauffler's methods. Soon after he opened Bible classes for teachers. The most noted of these Bible classes is the one in the Broadway Tabernacle. For the past ten years the great church has been filled with teachers every Saturday afternoon. Dr. Schauffler is frequently called to lecture at Sunday school conventions in all parts of America. His pen is constantly engaged in writing for the Sunday School Times. He is also editor of the teachers' edition of Peloubets' series. In recognition of his valuable services as a "teacher of teachers," the University of the City of New York gave him a degree of Doctor of Divinity in 1884. In the same year he married a lady of wealth and influence. This has strengthened Dr. Schauffler's power for good. He is the same humble, earnest, loving Christian who came as a poor young man to work among the lost of our great city. He is never more at home and never appears to better advantage than when he is addressing the poor people in our City Mission churches.

In 1886 he was called to take charge of the affairs of the New York City Mission. In this capacity he also directs the work of about seventy theological students, who engage in various forms of mission work; to these young men he is an invaluable guide. He also gives regular instruction at the City Mission Home for Christian Workers, and is editor of the New York City Mission Monthly.

The influence of Dr. Schauffler has done much to elevate Christian work among the poor in our great American cities. The neglected and unchurched masses were formerly provided with obscure, ill-ventilated chapels, and third-rate men; a young man of intellectual power and great promise was never found working among the poor and degraded—he would probably have lost caste had he done so. When Dr. Schauffler's ability was recognised, and he refused repeated calls to fine churches with large salaries, he made the work of a City missionary honourable, and it is now no longer difficult to find the best men for City Mission churches. Through the influence of this wise, good, and gifted man a renewed interest and activity has been manifested in Christian work among the lost and lowest, and many are rescued from the gates of death who will never cease to thank God for the consecrated work of Dr. Schauffler.

S.E. AFRICA.—Mrs. Osborne-Howe writes: On May 18 we rejoiced to welcome four new workers to our Mission from England. The Misses Whitby will take up work at Maritzburg among soldiers, railway-men, the Natal Mounted Police, and Postmen. The Misses Grieve come to us from Edinburgh. For a time, whilst studying the Zulu language, they will be engaged in railway-mission work in Durban.

A SIAMESE EVANGELIST.

Mrs. E. B. McGilvary, of the American Presbyterian Board of Missions, writes from Chieng-Mai, Siam, describing one of the most valuable native workers among the North Laos, Rev. Nan Tah, better known as Kru (Teacher) Nan Tah, formerly a priest of high standing in the Buddhist faith, now for many years the chief native assistant in all the mission work done in Chieng-Mai and vicinity. His patient and fruitful labours deserve to be noticed by all who have an interest in the advance of missions. In 1869 there were only seven native communicants among the North Laos, and but a small band of those who were unbaptized believers. Two of the seven church members were, for the sake of their religion, cruelly murdered by the Chief of Chieng-Mai; and the other five, with some of the natives who, though non-communicants were known to be friends of Christianity, were obliged to flee or go in hiding.

Among this number was Kru-Nan Tah, then a young man, who was forced to leave wife and children and flee for his life. For twelve years he was absent from home, living in Lower Siam, in Rangoon, and other parts of Burmah, among the Shan tribes in the north, and in other places. During all that time he remained faithful to Christianity, and when he returned was baptized and admitted to the communion. From the very first he was active in spreading the Gospel among his countrymen; and though he could not be spared from the mission school for many years, he gradually rose from a self-constituted worker to the native minister he is to-day.

He is the most untiring and patient of missionaries, and there is scarcely a town or village within several days' journey of Chieng-Mai that he has not visited, and many a place which offers no accommodation for visits from foreigners has been open to him, and in this way has received the Gospel. There is scarcely a person in all this district that does not know him, and on Sundays sometimes as many as thirty people at a time, coming from distant villages to church, are entertained at his hospitable home. In his dealings with the natives, and his attitude toward the foreign missionaries, he shows most admirable tact, and in both temporal and spiritual affairs he is the director and counsellor of the Christians.

His high reputation for learning in old Siamese, old Lao, Bali, and other studies, pursued during his priesthood, gives him influence and prestige among the better educated heathen. As a preacher he is an earnest and wonderfully fluent speaker, and his voice is soft and clear; but he has the true evangelistic spirit, and prefers touring to preaching in the Chieng-Mai church.

The missionaries rely on him in a thousand ways. He knows all the Chieng-Mai Christians personally, and, in case of any Church discipline, his advice is invaluable. Besides, he brings to light any cases where help is needed, and also prevents many kinds of misdirected charity. There is not one of us who does not love and admire him, and feel that to lose him were to lose in the coming years much of the wonderful success of the past years, which is plainly largely due to him and the other native workers under him.

He is about fifty years of age now, and in the prime of his life and usefulness. In appearance he is extremely prepossessing—being above the average height of Lao men, and of more commanding presence. Like all these people, he has the olive-brown complexion, black hair and eyes of the Malay race, and his face, if not handsome, according to American standards of beauty, is wonderfully attractive. The constant prayer of the workers here is that God will continue to bless the labours of the native evangelists, and send us many such leaders as Kru-Nan Tah.

THE ZULUS OF GAZA-LAND.

Rev. H. M. Bridgman, pleading for fresh advances by the American missionaries in Zulu-land, says: To "go forward" or "stand still" that is the burning question with the Zulu mission. "Go forward!" Where? you ask. Why to "Gaza-land!" To the very land which Pinkerton was aiming for, twelve years ago, when through difficulties in the unknown and best route, he laid down his noble life on the banks of the Gabula River. To the very land here, three years later, old Umzila, a Zulu of the Zulus and paramount chief of "the Gazas," said to Mr. Richard: "Give us five missionaries as soon as possible." The only outcome of all that effort to reach the Zulu-speaking people of the Highlands was the "halfway measure" of planting two or three missionaries in the unhealthy delta and coast land about Inhambane among a people of another language, where neither our already prepared Zulu books nor Bibles could be used but where even our native Zulus themselves felt handicapped with an "unknown tongue" and most unhealthy climate.

But "God's providences" have been marching on. Scarcely three more years pass, and the whole of that part of Gaza-land is thrown, by treaty with Portugal and Gungunyano, under the protection of "the Mashonaland Gold-fields Protectorate." The Zulu Mission could not rest. They felt the hand of God is opening up that land for evangelisation! We must secure a foothold among that Zulu-speaking people! Missionaries of the Zulu and Inhambane Missions were ready and anxious to go in. The missionaries and the Zulu Mission as a body, pressed the matter at home, saying here was another golden opportunity to go forward, opening up an inviting foreign mission for our Zulu Christians, who so much need to be "led out of themselves," and to break to others of their tongue that "Bread of Heaven" which they hope they have received.

In order to get still fuller, more accurate information of the Gaza-field, a few months ago, Messrs. Wilcox and Dr. Thompson, of the East African or Inhambane Mission, were commissioned to proceed by the new route viâ Bira, without doubt the ancient Lofala goldfield route. On the steamer going up, Providence had so arranged it that they should fall in with the Hon. Cecil Rhodes, Premier of the Cape of Good Hope, head organiser of the Mashona Goldfield Protectorate, and chief captain in the land. He informs the Lord's servants that "upper Gaza-land," which they have so long sought to enter, is, by treaty rights, within his territory, and "bids them Godspeed in their enterprise, and 3,000 acres of land, wherever they may select to locate."

This, indeed, seemed an open door. Messrs. Wilcox and Thompson went on with light hearts over high, beautiful, healthful tablelands, everywhere kindly received of the Zulu-speaking people, and were back to the coast in forty days. They report "the opportunity" most favourable to entering in at once, and securing a foothold, ere the vast crowd that followed Gungunyano down to the lowlands, on the Limpopo, two years ago, begin to scramble back to the hills, on account of the unhealthiness of these low lands.

Now, here in Natal, are three missionaries waiting, like "leashed hounds," to be loosed and sent forward. For two months they have waited impatiently for the electric spark to flame out from under the sea. "Forward means abundant—but be wise as to health"—and now, after all this tense waiting, there indeed comes the word, "Forward three men; keep expenses within 2,000 dollars." Tell it not "in the streets" of New England. To "start a mission, 800 miles away by sea, and 200 miles by land." To build three station houses, to put up a schoolhouse and chapel! To supply medicine and much of the food for the year; to take a supply of Zulu books and Bibles; to hire all the native help needful in starting a new station and mission—the astounding sum of 2,000 dollars, almost enough to run up one ordinary New England barn, is appropriated! To start on such a mission under such a limit is simply impossible, and hence, as yet, those whose hearts are set on the Zulus of Gaza-land must be content to wait till the way is opened and difficulties are removed.

JAPANESE AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS.—The Japan Christian Chronicle says: The native pastors in Tokio are becoming especially interested in Sunday School work. At a recent meeting of the ministers it was decided to extend the system by establishing Sunday Schools in various parts of the city, where there has been hitherto no special Christian efforts. In one thickly settled portion people outside of the church have voluntarily subscribed to financially support a school. This is because the thinking men are convinced that they need a higher code of morals for their children than is now taught by any schools or any religious system, outside of the Christian religion.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

Rev. F. E. Clark, D.D., has started on his journey round the world in the interests of Christian Endeavour. He intended sailing from San Francisco for Australia on August 19, to spend a month in Australia attending various C.E. conventions in the different colonies. He hopes then to visit Japan, China, India, Syria and Turkey, in all of which countries meetings have been arranged in the interests of the society. In many of these lands the society is already firmly rooted, missionaries finding it of as much value as pastors in the home churches. In Australia the society is growing with rapidity. Dr. Clark's purpose is not so much to establish societies, for this is always left to the pastors and churches, but to study the missionary problem, especially as it is related to young people's societies, and to see what adaptation may be necessary to promote the growth of the movement in missionary lands. Meetings have also been arranged for Dr. Clark in Paris and Berlin, also in San Sebastian, Spain, and in various places in England, and the last meeting which he will attend before leaving for America, to attend the convention in Montreal, will be the National British Christian Endeavour Convention, to be held in Bradford in June 1893.

Never in the history of the movement have societies increased so rapidly as since the Convention at New York. In the first three weeks after the Convention more than 1,000 new societies were enrolled. Something like twenty Methodist societies which have become Epworth Leagues were taken off the list; but there was still a net gain of over 1,000 for three weeks, so that now the total number of societies is over 22,000.

The way in which the societies multiply where it is least expected is shown by a letter recently received from Madagascar from a missionary of the London Missionary Society, who says that already thirty societies of Christian Endeavour have been formed among the native churches, and that many of them have resulted in a short time in accomplishing great good, and give promise of reviving the decayed vitality of many of these native churches.

Principles of the Society.

At the great convention held recently in New York, the Society of Christian Endeavour reaffirmed the following platform of principles:—

First and foremost.—Personal devotion to our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Second.—The covenant obligation embodied in the prayer-meeting pledge, without which there can be no true Society of Christian Endeavour.

Third.—Constant religious training for all kinds of service involved in the various committees, which, so many of them as are needed, are, equally with the prayer-meeting, essential to a Society of Christian Endeavour.

Fourth.—Strenuous loyalty to the local church, a denomination with which each society is connected. This loyalty is plainly expressed in the pledge; it underlies the whole idea of the movement, and, as statistics prove and pastors testify, is very generally exemplified in the lives of active members, and thus the Society of Christian Endeavour, in theory and practice, is as loyal a denominational society as any in existence, as well as a broad and fraternal inter-denominational society.

Fifth.—We reaffirm our increasing confidence in the inter-denominational spiritual fellowship, through which we hope, not for organic unity, but to fulfil our Lord's prayer for spiritual unity, "That they all may be one." This fellowship already extends to all evangelical denominations, we should greatly deplore any movement that would interrupt or imperil it.

We rejoice in the growing friendliness of Christians throughout the world. We find reason for gratitude in the fact that several denominations have in their highest ecclesiastical gatherings, endorsed and practically adopted the Society of Christian Endeavour. We believe that for the sake of Christian fairness and courtesy in all denominations and all over the world the Christian Endeavour principles should go with the name; and the name, either alone or in connection with a distinctive denominational name should go with the principles. For the maintenance of these principles of covenant, obligation, individual service, denominational loyalty, and inter-denominational fellowship, we unitedly and heartily pledge ourselves.

The prayer-meeting pledges referred to in several paragraphs is thus worded:—Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength.

Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise Him that I will strive to do whatever He would like to have me do; that I will make it the rule of my life to pray and to read the Bible every day, and to support my own church in every way, especially by attending all her regular Sunday and mid-week services, unless prevented by some reason which I can conscientiously give to my Saviour, and that, just so far as I know how, throughout my whole life, I will endeavour to lead a Christian life.

As an active member, I promise to be true to all my duties, to be present at, and to take some part, aside from singing, in every Christian Endeavour prayer-meeting, unless hindered by some reason which I can conscientiously give to my Lord.

MR. VARLEY AT WESTON-SUPER-MARE.

This western seaside resort has just been favoured with a fortnight's mission, conducted by Mr. Henry Varley. The attendance, good from the first, continued steadily to increase until the Royal Assembly Room was filled twice daily. At the afternoon meetings Bible readings were given. The evening meetings partook more of an evangelistic character, the Gospel being preached with freshness and power. The preacher's words concerning sin and its inevitable consequences were calculated to work conviction in the consciences of the unsaved, while the Divine remedy for man's ruin was presented with exceeding tenderness and force.

Mr. Varley also preached several times on the sea-front, when many hundreds listened with marked attention as the realities of eternity were set before them, and the way of life was made known. The coming day alone will disclose the full results of the work of the past memorable fortnight, but those already known are enough to make our hearts glad.

Douglas Russell.

Mr. Varley had arranged to go from here to Ilfracombe for a similar series of meetings, but this and other engagements had to be cancelled on account of the sad tidings telegraphed from Melbourne of the falling asleep of his loved eldest daughter after the birth of her second child. This heavy trial led our sorrowing brother to decide on an immediate return to his Australian home. He sails to-morrow (Friday) by s.s. Ophir, for Melbourne. He takes with him the earnest sympathy and prayers, for himself and his bereaved family, of a large circle of friends here, who will be joined by hundreds of your Christian readers.

After a few weeks in Melbourne it is Mr. Varley's intention to proceed to India for evangelistic work amongst Brahmins and Hindus during the coming winter. He may be addressed: Kinkora, Hawthorn, Melbourne.

"HIMSELF HATH DONE IT."

Once it was the blessing,
Now it is the Lord.
Once it was the feeling,
Now it is his Word.
Once his gifts I wanted,
Now the Giver own.
Once I sought for healing,
Now Himself alone.

Once 'twas painful trying,
Now 'tis perfect trust.
Once a half salvation,
Now the uttermost.
Once 'twas ceaseless holding,
Now He holds me fast.
Once 'twas constant drifting,
Now my anchor's cast.

Once 'twas busy planning,
Now 'tis trustful prayer.
Once 'twas anxious caring,
Now He has the care.
Once 'twas what I wanted,
Now what Jesus says.
Once 'twas constant asking,
Now 'tis ceaseless praise.

Once it was my working,
His it hence shall be.
Once I tried to use Him,
Now He uses me.
Once the power I wanted,
Now the Mighty One.
Once for self I laboured,
Now for Him alone.

Once I hoped in Jesus,
Now I know He's mine,
Once my lamps were dying,
Now He makes them shine.
Once for death I waited,
Now his coming hail.
And my hopes are anchored
Safe within the veil.

THE PAKEFIELD CONFERENCE.

For fourteen years a Christian Conference has been held at this quiet seaside village. This annual gathering was convened by the rector, Rev. L. Price, for the week before last, and, having been preceded by much prayer, proved full of power and deeply interesting. Among those taking part were Canon Ripley, Revs. T. Graham, Talbot Greaves, J. Ireland Jones, C. Leathes, and others.

Rev. Lewis Price, who presided throughout, opened the proceedings by dwelling on the close connection between Christian life and faith in Christ crucified. "I am the vine, ye are the branches. He that abideth in Me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit, for without Me ye can no nothing" (John xv. 5). It is said sometimes that we have no longer to do with a dead Christ, but with the risen Christ. His death is not denied, but practically set aside in favour of his resurrection. It was not by his incarnation or resurrection that Christ saved the world, but by his death. His incarnation was necessary to qualify Him to die as our substitute, and his resurrection as a proof of the Divine approval and satisfaction of his sacrifice, but neither would have been sufficient without his death. Every blessing of justification, sanctification, salvation, redemption, and eternal life are attributed to the blood of Christ. Hence Paul determined to know nothing else but "Jesus Christ and Him crucified." Christ crucified is the source of all grace on earth and glory in heaven. The setting aside of the atoning work of Christ is a serious error in much of the religious teaching of the day.

Rev. T. Graham dwelt with force and clearness upon leprosy as typical of the disease with which sin has afflicted our nature, and the cleansing of the leper as representing the cleansing and sanctifying of believers by the blood of Christ, applied by the Holy Ghost, and thereby enabling them to hear, work, and walk with God. This address contained precious truths and much valuable teaching.

Rev. Canon Ripley spoke on 2 Cor. iii. 13, showing how the veil of unbelief shuts out and deprives the natural man of all the benefits and consolations of redemption, but the removal of it opens out the fulness of Christ to supply every need, and enables the Christian to behold the glory of the Lord, which changes him into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord.

Rev. J. Ireland Jones took consecration as the subject of his address. Regarding Christians as a holy priesthood according to 1 Pet. i. 4, he referred to the consecration of the priests under the law by clothing them with holy garments, by atonement, and the application of the blood and the oil to the right ear, the thumb of the right hand, and big toe of the right foot as symbolical of the garments of salvation, cleansing by the blood of Christ, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost, by which God endues his people with power to live a holy life and witness for the Truth.

Rev. Talbot A. L. Greaves spoke on the second advent as bearing on the errors of the day. He dwelt with great solemnity and power on the Romanism, scepticism, higher criticism, and infidelity of the time as fulfilling the signs which Scripture says are to precede the second appearing of our Lord, and expressed his strong belief that the second advent was not far distant. His address made a solemn impression upon the audience.

Rev. C. Leathes gave a very interesting and useful address on the words: "Now the end of the commandment is charity, out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned" (1 Tim. i. 5). He gave a vivid description of how these graces form the character of Christian life.

Rev. R. Conway gave an address on Song Sol. iv. 12. He began by remarking on the eminently spiritual character of this Book, which is written in the form of a dialogue, and sets forth Christ as the heavenly Bridegroom and the Church as his Bride, and the close and holy fellowship which exists between them. He dwelt on the words: "A garden enclosed is my sister my spouse." The Church is called out from the world and set apart from her Lord who delights to walk therein, to see the fruits of holiness and partake thereof. When Christ and his Church delight in one another, the former is glorified and the latter blessed.

Rev. D. J. S. Hunt delivered an eloquent and able address on Gal. ii. 20. In the evening, a service was held at the church, and a sermon was preached by Canon Woodward, of Liverpool, on John xvii. 19:—"For their sakes, I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth." Thus ended a conference which was remarkable for the exposition of truths connected with the person and atoning work of Christ as revealed in the Scriptures, and their saving and purifying effect on the heart, mind, and life of Christians.

AMONG INDIAN WOMEN.

Many have watched with hopeful interest the increasing utilization of native workers in the Mission field, and perhaps especially of late the employment of Bible women amongst zenana inmates and the village women of India. The following excerpts from a native Bible woman's report, forwarded by Miss Dawson to the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East, illustrate the usefulness of this particular agency:—In one of the houses that I visit, there were a number of people seated near my pupil and me, and as we were talking of God, they began to tell their various beliefs. One said, "There is no God." "Our images are the gods," said another; while yet another, "Oh, there is a God; He it is that made the world and takes care of us." Then one of them referred to me, and asked me to tell them what I thought. I said, "The one who said there is a God is quite right, this is truth; now I will give you an example, if you will listen attentively. If you are going to build a house, how many persons you require, how many things, how much thought and time and trouble; then to create this great world in which we live, and the heavens, and you and me, is there no Being? Truly there is, and He is the true God, though we cannot see Him; He is too holy, and our sinful eyes may not now; but He is to make us holy that we may see Him, and He sent his Son Jesus Christ into the world to die for our sins, and give his holy life a sacrifice for sin, to teach us of God, and show us the way to Heaven."

Some of the listeners assented, whilst one old woman, who had often heard me before, said, "I shall from to-day leave these foolish idols, and not believe in them any more; will you teach me a prayer to the true God?" I taught her a short prayer, which she promised to use.

When calling one of my pupils on another day to her lesson, she said, "To-day is veratham with me: I cannot read." I asked, "What is that?" She said, "It means I have made a vow to a god, and I have not eaten since this morning." I asked when this god had told her not to eat. "If I do not eat I shall have some merit (poeniam), and gain for myself some great reward." I said to her, "We will suppose you have stolen Rs 300. The judge hears of this, and makes inquiry, and you say, I 'will remain without food two days if you will forgive me,' What would he say? Would it not be, 'I cannot in justice'? There is a more loving and righteous Judge, even your God; you have believed and feared idols, and have ruined yourself. If you remain thus one day without food that your sins may be forgiven is a vain thought; hear what the true word of God says." And I read to her from the 6th chapter of Matthew, and explained to her that fasting means sorrow, and that rather than actually starving for merit, the better way would be to give herself some quiet time when she could think of Jesus Christ, and all He had done for her, and with true gratitude have deep contrition for sin, and seek forgiveness through the merits of the only Saviour. "Now I see this is foolish," she said, "and will not gain for me forgiveness." Thus gradually are these heathen eyes being opened; they only see "men as trees walking" yet.

In going and coming from my work I frequently speak to a man who is interested in Christianity. One day this week he said, "I have heard of Christianity now for ten years, I have read five books of the Bible, but there is one great obstacle in the way of my becoming a Christian." "Tell me what this is," I said. He said "I have an idol in my possession which has been in my family for generations. I am now in charge, and I fear to give it up. I have a vow to give it in charge to my son when he is old enough," Then I told him the idol he had could neither do him good nor harm; it was only a bit of man's work, it could not give him heaven. "But," I said, "you know there is a true God, and He alone can forgive sin, and you say you mean to seek salvation through Him, and yet when your son is old enough give him this idol! How can you do this?" He acknowledged the wrong, so I asked him to give it to me, and I would drown it in some well where he would never find it again. "I have a wish to give it to you," he said.

He comes to the church sometimes, and speaks to his wife of Jesus Christ. I told him not to delay, the Lord was graciously calling him; his voice was in his ear now; his arm stretched towards him; and urged him to pray that he might be inclined to decide at once. May we all pray for him that this obstacle may be removed from his path,

Just the last month of our work, one young girl, who had began to read the Bible so gladly with me, came with tears in her eyes one day, saying her husband had forbidden it, and told her to return the book to me. When I saw her after this I enquired often if she had regained permission. "No," was the sorrowful answer. Next day, as I was teaching in the next house to hers, she came in, and joyfully told me her mother had consented. "And I am going to read," she said; "whatever difficulties may be in the way, I will not mind, these words I read are in my heart, and make me glad; give me back my Bible." I gave her one I had in my hand, and told her to read it every day, and I would return and read with her regularly. In these ways we have an opportunity of preaching the same good news on different subjects, of God's remedy for all earth's ills through his Son Jesus Christ.

NATIVE EVANGELISTS FOR INDIA.

In common with many missionaries, I have to thank an unknown friend for the gift of The Christian, which has been sent to me now for several years. By us who are so far out of the main current of Christian thought and feeling, your paper has always been gratefully received.

We have many branches of work in this City of Mysore, and one of the most hopeful of these is to be found in Hardwicke College, where we have a large training institution for the sons of native Christians. Those who know anything of the immensity of work in India have long since felt that our only hope of compassing it lies in the training of native evangelists who will carry the Gospel of Christ to their own countrymen; and in training these lads we hope that we not only elevate and civilise the Christian generations of the future, but provide the material out of which God's Spirit may choose many a polished instrument. To some extent our hopes have already been realised. Students of this institution are to be found already among our native evangelists and Christian teachers, and just at present we record a large increase in number, and a very much brighter prospect of Spiritual fruit. We might enlarge our numbers and our scope very considerably but for want of funds.

The Christian Church in India at the present day is made up largely of converts from the lowest classes. It is none the worse for that, and only follows on historical lines; but the Church at home must understand that help will be needed by their brethren in India for some time longer. We seek to make our people independent by taking fees from those who send their sons to our institution, but the amount that we ask does not cover half the expenses of a lad, and many of our people are so poor that they cannot provide even the small amount we ask.

The support of these lads is as worthy an object as can well be brought before Christian friends, for they not only relieve the distress of some poor brother, but they may, by God's blessing, train and prepare an evangelist of the blessed Gospel of Christ for work among his fellow-countrymen. Five pounds annually is not a large sum, but it will suffice for the food, clothing, and education of some poor Christian's son.

We have a library and reading-room, for which contributions in books, magazines, and illustrated papers are always most thankfully received. We have eighty students in residence, and as these receive an education in English, they are well able to profit by good Christian literature that friends in England may be willing to send.

We ask you to pray that God's blessing may rest upon the work which is being done among the Christian students of Mysore.

Yours very truly,
W. W. Holdsworth.

BEYROUT.—Miss Proctor, of the Schwifat School, writes that she is in danger of losing the house where she accommodates the boys, as the landlord has refused to continue letting it to her at a rental. She must, therefore, either turn out, which would be to the detriment of the work, or find the means to purchase the freehold. This could be done for £300, but she has no resources of her own, and so is anxious that the matter should be brought before the Christian public, that if it be the Lord's will for her to retain these premises the necessary funds may be provided for his stewards.

WITNESSING FACES.—At a missionary gathering in Turkey, says Rev. J. A. Davis in The Sunday School Times, a stranger sat during the conference, which was in a tongue unknown to him, looking at the faces of the men whose words he could not understand. At the close of the meeting he called the missionary aside, and told him that he wished to learn the secret of the happy faces. Though he understood not a word, he knew that they had discovered some remarkable secret, something that made them satisfied and happy, and he longed to learn the same. Then in the language of the stranger, the missionary preached Jesus to him. To lead him to Christ was easy, and soon, like the eunuch, he went on his way rejoicing.

HILL-TRIBES IN ASSAM.

Rev. E. G. Phillips, of the American Baptist missionary Union, writes:—The work among the Garos (in Assam) seems to be moving on with increased momentum. In this tribe there were, last year, about 375 baptisms, on personal confession of faith in Christ, and the number of communicants rose to about 1,900. Every year marks advancement in Christian life. These converts are organised into fifteen churches, eleven of which are self-supporting, and every year marks advancement along this line. The movement started last year, aiming to establish a school of higher grade than the village schools, to be supported and controlled by the native Christians themselves, has met with success. The school has been opened with a quite large attendance.

The native Christians are becoming more an. more earnest in their efforts for the conversion of th heathen. There is a tribe of aborigines, semi Hindu-ised, living on the plains adjoining the Garos These formerly considered themselves as of a higher class than the Garos, and, to a degree, despised them. But coming into contact with the Christians as they have, has worked a change, and now they are asking for religious instruction; and this year one small Christian village is supporting their own teacher of last year, as an evangelist to them. Others are showing their interest in these neighbours, and the work of preaching to the unconverted of their own tribe is carried on with increased enthusiasm. The preachers are working with the conviction that the whole tribe will soon be brought to Christ.

Among the Kols the work is progressing. These are aborigines from Central India, who have been imported into Upper Assam, in great numbers, as labourers on the tea gardens. Of these Kols and kindred tribes 300,000 or more are in Assam, and the number is constantly increasing. Among them one missionary is labouring with great encouragement. Last year about forty were baptized. In March last he baptized seventy-three, and the communicants from this tribe number 300, or more.

Among the Mikirs, a hill-tribe of 90,000, there has been an interest for many years, and a few converts gathered in connection with work for another people, their neighbours. Three years ago converts fron this tribe petitioned for a missionary. A missionary and wife have been sent to them, and we may confidently hope for the work to progress rapidly among them.

CHINA AWAKING.

Writing from Amoy on June 30, Rev. J. Sadler (L.M.S.) says:—"Last night we had a union prayer meeting of English-speaking friends, the news of which may gladden those at home who watch unto prayer. Among those present was Mr. Johnson, of the Scotch Bible Society, who has just come a long journey from Hankow, chiefly overland. His testimony is that everywhere there is a preparedness amongst the people for the Gospel, although the rulers would prefer to keep out the new and foreign religion. There seems, however, reason to believe that even the rulers are getting accustomed to the new order of things. The distribution of Scriptures and good books is found to be a means of preparation for the more settled work of evangelisation.

"Miss Warr, formerly of the Children's Mission in England, was also present, and spoke of her satisfaction in being able to do something for Chinese children. Miss Warr seems to have a special gift in dealing with young people. She lays great stress on early decision for Christ, and illustrates, from the experience of herself and others, how young folk are often allowed to go on for years wavering because they are not invited to an early surrender of themselves to God. Miss Warr has met with keen appreciation in visiting five of our Chinese schools. The scholars will remember her natural and telling words, inviting them to seek the Lord now, and for ever reckon themselves to be His.

"At this same meeting, Dr. Otte, of the Dutch Reformed Church, U.S., who is returned from inland work, gave proof of his earnestness for souls as well as bodies of Chinese. His heart is set on spiritual results, and he sees them. He recounted definite and continued blessing as the outcome of believing prayer and steady effort. Patients, students, preachers, pastors, all give him joy. Open-air services for music, singing, and preaching, also magic-lantern exhibitions, all prove useful. He has taken part in a great pleading for larger working of the Holy Spirit. 'We never have enough,' he said, 'and yet God has always heard our prayer.' In this vast country there is room for incalculable increase of faith, prayer, and effort. The present progress encourages hope of greater."

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

In seventy-six years this society has issued fifty-five and a-half million copies of Bibles, Testaments, and portions of the Word of God. During the first twenty-five years the total issues were less than three millions; during the next twenty-five years they reached nearly nineteen millions; and during the third twenty-five years period almost thirty-two and a-half millions. Last year the total was, in exact figures, 1,298,196. The society has shed abroad the light of life through all the years of its existence, with what vast, blessed and eternal results no human mind can estimate.

We notice with joy that the lines of life-giving light have gone among the various nationalities of the globe. Copies of the blessed Word have been printed by hundreds of thousands in the English language. German, Dutch and Swedish Bibles and Testaments have been sent upon their mission of mercy. In French and Spanish, Portuguese and Italian, the glad tidings have been told. In the Russian, Polish, Hungarian, and Bohemian languages the gospel of God's love has been published. Chinese Testaments, Japanese Gospels, Zulu Testaments, Choctaw Testaments, Sheetswa Gospels, Hawaiian Bibles, and others have been published. Eight hundred and twenty-one volumes for the blind have been sent forth from the society's presses during the year. We may well say that all its issues are volumes for the blind, since all mankind is blind and in the dark till the Word of God introduces its saving light.

The society does not merely publish the Word of God. It has its workers far and near, through whose labours the Bible is brought to the hand of multitudes of persons who would otherwise be without it. A large proportion of the society's expenditure is required to sustain the direct missionary labours of colporteurs employed to bring the people among whom they labour to a knowledge of the Scriptures, and to persuade them to possess and read them. At the same time various missionary societies receive by gift or by purchase supplies of the Word for distribution through their representatives at home and abroad.—New York Observer.

CHICAGO NOTES.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Death has sealed the lips of Mary T. Willard, mother of the famous Frances E. Willard, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. She was eighty-seven years old, and of late has been called "Saint Courageous." In 1840, when Wisconsin was a wild west, her husband opened a farm, and then his heroic wife gained her great reputation as a fearless and devout Christian. No matter how many Indians or strange beings came to her door, she was never known to show fear. Valour and tenderness, daring, and love were her characteristics, and her mind worked out great plans which she stood fearlessly by to the end.

After her three children were born she took a full collegiate course in Oberlin College, Ohio, and became a valuable instructor to her favoured children. In 1858 the family found a home in Evanston, Illinois, twelve miles north of Chicago, where Oliver and Frances graduated, and where Mary had passed nearly through the University before her death.

Frances E. Willard is left alone in the world. Rest Cottage will be lonesome now, but hundreds of thousands will remember the great temperance worker to the Father of all.

The first of a great national encampment of the Salvation Army is now being held at Lake Bluff. Marshal Fielding is in charge, and a host of the rank and file are on hand in the tented grove. Apart from the purely devotional services, a large portion of the time is given to reports from the extended fields and special methods of work. Much attention is given to "Slum Work," and something is being talked of after the manner of the British "Social Wing." Farm lands can be had, and food is easily raised, and at present very plentiful. There is no reason why a tenth or a hundredth should perish for want of bread. The meeting at Lake Bluff, a great camp meeting ground, will last one week, and already a desire to come here again next year has been recorded, when it is expected to be a world-wide gathering.

The Pacific Garden Mission, so long under the leadership of Colonel Clarke, is still carried on by Harry Monroe, who seems to feel the great task, and has thrown his soul into the work. Fifteen long years of steady toil by Colonel Clarke and his faithful wife have resulted in good that is known in its fulness only to the Omniscient. Mrs. Clarke does what she can, and will not let the good work die while her strength and purse remain. It is believed that many thousands of permanent reformations have resulted from the labours of the mission, and yet how meek and trusting the good man was through all his years of activity! He had a dread of newspaper notoriety, and would not allow reporters to "write him up," but went on his way a tried and trusty Christian nobleman, beloved and honoured of the King Eternal.

There is a strong feeling among the masses of God's people that special work must be done here next year. The scattered evangelists and earnest workers are to be called in, and the immense throngs of sightseers given the plain Gospel. Now that Congress has ordered the gates to be closed on Sunday, the masses can be the more easily reached. Some predict that the order will be reversed next year, but the Christian world prays that the gates may remain closed. Tents, tabernacles, camping grounds, and all the necessary arrangements for a field engagement with the powers of darkness are being arranged, and will be brought into service. The foundations of the great new Farwell Hall are being laid, and an army of workmen is engaged in building the great structure, which, when completed, will be second to none in the land.

Chicago, August 11.

A CALL TO PRAYER.

The Missionary Review says:—We follow the call for daily prayer with another call for a day of prayer. One of the most significant occurrences of recent times in India was a great Hindu conference, held at Benares. This conference on what to do to preserve Hinduism from the encroachments being made upon it, appointed a committee to formulate their decision. An immense crowd is said to have assembled to hear the report of this committee read by four pundits, standing at the corners of the great pavilion in which the conference was held.

The conference recommended that prayers be offered at fixed times to the Supreme Power, that the Hindu religion may be saved from its present degenerate position, October 30 being specified as the special day for the whole country. Branches of this conference are to be organised in all the provinces; preachers are to be sent over the land to preach the sacred truths of Hinduism; Sanskrit books containing the religious rules are to be published, and schools are to be established for the study of Sanskrit. This shrewdness in copying Christian methods is natural to the imitative Asiatic. It is an indirect compliment to the methods of the Christian Church, nevertheless, and an acknowledgment of the felt force of Christianity in the land.

It seems to us that it would be a very fitting thing for the Christian churches of all the world, so far as information can be extended in time to admit of it, to set apart October 30 as a day of special prayer for these religionists, that God would, in a way they little intend or suspect, hear their cry and answer them. A power for organization is always present with the Aryan race in all of its branches, and hence a great movement is possible. In the spirit of Elijah's contention with the priests of Baal, it seems we might cry to the Lord, on October 30, to show Himself as the "Supreme Power" to whom these people are called to pray. If the Lord be God, may He not thus show Himself to our brothers? Let October 30 be remembered as a special day of prayer for these Hindus.

The Brazil Inland Mission.

At our Missionary Conference held at Rio last month, it was decided that I should leave Minas, for a time at least, to work up this field where God has wonderfully opened and prepared the way. Campos is a grand centre, from it we can reach Minas and the state of Espirito Santo, also Rio, the capital, by rail or sea. We have a church here of fifty-four members, all of them received during the past year and eight months, I preach here only twice a week, the rest of my time I hope to devote to evangelising the cities around. We have a few members living out in the country some eight miles, who have been bitterly persecuted, some had to flee to the woods and hide, others sold what they had and removed to the city. Those who stayed have lived down the bad feeling of their neighbours and are having their praise and prayer meeting again. We ask the prayers of the readers of The Christian, also that you will please announce our new address, that friends interested may know our whereabouts.

NEW Y.M.C.A. BUILDING.—The corner-stone of a new Y.M.C.A. building at Hartford, Conn., was laid July 26. Its inscription reads: "For the love of Christ."

THE MACHINATIONS OF ROME.

The following extract from the C.M.S. Report, being issued this week, admirably illustrates the article contributed to our pages two weeks ago by Rev. Hugh Stowell Phillips.

Archdeacon Wolfe writes that recently he and his work have been sorely tried by Roman Catholics, who have entered Hok-Chiang, now that the work gives promise of success, and have by very culpable methods endeavoured to draw aside those who were already under Christian instruction. Archdeacon Wolfe says:—"For example, they have come to one of our stations where we have a congregation, but have not yet erected a place of worship, and told our people that if only one family would leave us and go over to them, the priests would at once build them a large church, without any expense to the Christians; that the Protestants compel them to keep the Sabbath, but that if they became Roman Catholics they could work on Sundays; that they need only wear a rosary, and sign themselves with the sign of the cross, and sprinkle themselves with holy water, and attend mass once a year; that they need pay no money for pastors and teachers, as they are now required to do by us; and that the priests would see to it that full protection would be given them in all lawsuits. By these wily crafts they have succeeded in drawing away a few, and have induced several heathen families who were about to join us to go over to the priests. One of these families, after having received the priest into their house, which he sprinkled all over with holy water, and mumbled some unknown words, and made the sign of the cross in vacuum, relapsed back to their idols, and threw away the scapular, the rosary, and other Romish charms. The priest, on hearing this, came and demanded 50dols. as a fine for having left the Church of Rome, and actually made the people believe that this fine was imposed by authority, and could be legally recovered. This family, however, refused to pay so large a sum as the price of their apostasy, and the priest mercifully let them off with a smaller sum. This is how they act, and this is what they call converting people to Christianity. They came to one of our people in Ko-san-che, and offered him a large bribe if he and his family would join them. He replied: 'Will such things save my soul? I have learnt from the Bible that Christ alone can save me. What is all your money to me if my soul is not saved?'"

Mrs. Grimke's Cards in Uganda.

Last autumn Mrs. Grimké sent out to Uganda a quantity of illuminated Scripture texts specially prepared in Luganda. These, as letters received show, have been highly appreciated by the people. Mr. Baskerville, for example, writes:—

"I do indeed right heartily thank you for the way in which you have so freely responded to my appeal for Luganda illuminated Scripture texts. Never, when I wrote to my mother some time ago on this subject, did I think that so many would come forward. In doing this I am sure you have done something for these people, and I feel certain your texts will be blessed to those to whom they are given.

"The Word of God is the power of God unto Salvation. I hope, God willing, to make another selection of striking texts to send home shortly, and trust you will help me again.—Yours ever sincerely,

"Geo. K. Baskerville.

"Namirembe, C.M.S., Uganda."

Mrs. Grimké is now preparing further supplies to send out to Uganda. She is also helping missionaries in many parts of the foreign field, and is anxious to do more should funds permit. Her address is Wellington House, Higher Broughton, Manchester.

A Waldensian Convention.

A convention for the deepening of the spiritual life was held a fortnight ago in the parish of Angrogna, memorable by its glorious past. About 2,500 people met on the beautiful hills. The pastor of Bobbio Pellice, began with an address on the words: "Oh, that thou wouldest rend the heavens, that thou wouldest come down!". The pastor of San Germano followed, speaking about Jacob, who at Jabbok wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day, Jacob had his enemies, as we have ours, but with prayer we shall gain the victory over them.

Dr. Comba urged more liberality in giving to the cause of the Master. Dr. C. Prochat dealt powerfully with evangelistic work, and other friends spoke on foreign missions. There is no doubt the spiritual life is deepening in our people, and we ought to be grateful to God for the same. We do not pray in vain, nor do we work in vain. C. A. Tron.

THE PEACE CONGRESS AT BERNE.

The beautiful little city of Berne has been chosen as the scene of the fourth of the series of Annual International Peace Congresses, and a more picturesque spot could scarce be found. On arriving at the station the delegates were recognised by white rosettes, and directed to their lodgings by members of the Committee of Reception. Indeed, the Swiss people carried out the words of the President, who said in his opening address that we should not find the splendours of great capitals, nor sumptuous receptions, but that the welcome offered by his simple and modest people was from the heart.

The opening meeting on Monday morning, August 22, was held in the Federal Palace in the very room where the Swiss Parliament meets. Fancy holding a peace meeting in the House of Commons! It was presided over by Mons. Ruchounet, ex-President of the Swiss Republic, a man whose refined, expressive countenance reminded one of that of Julius Cæsar. He said that we had met to organise war against war, and proceeded to enumerate the forces which ought to be engaged in this struggle—the peasants and working-classes, who are the first victims of war; the followers of Him whose advent into this world was announced by the words "Peace on earth"; the lawyers, whose aim is opposed to violence; and the women—the women of the whole world.

The president was followed by representatives of the nations from which delegates were present. The Baroness von Suttner, author of the peace story "Die Waffen Nieder," spoke for the Austrian Peace Society, which now numbers several thousands of men and women of all ranks. Mons. Bajer spoke for Denmark, and expressed his desire that his country should be permanently neutralised in time of war, as Switzerland is already. Roumania was represented by one of a band of young university men who came full of enthusiasm and specially desirous that the Congress should by peaceable means take up the cause of their country which has no proper representation in the Austrian Parliament, and is oppressed by exceptional legislation. Other countries represented at the Congress, besides England and the United States, were France, Germany, Italy, Belgium, Sweden, Russia, Poland, and Spain. At a later meeting there was also a lady from Asia Minor, who made an earnest appeal to Christians to oppose all war and to women especially to carry peace into all their actions. The valuable work of Mr. Henry Richard was referred to by our English delegates, and the presence of Mrs. Richard added an interest to the occasion. Signor Mazzoleni referred to the peculiar suitability of Switzerland for a Peace Congress as having solved the question of nationalities; and Dr. Darby pointed out that that country is an object lesson which shows how people of different languages and religions can live federated together, Protestant Zurich side by side with Roman Catholic Zug and Lucerne, German-speaking Berne with French-speaking Neufchatel and Italian-speaking Ticino. There is a tribunal of arbitration for settling difficulties which may arise between the different Cantons. May not this country be a model on a small scale of the future harmony of the States of Europe?

The actual business of the work of Congress began on Monday afternoon in the Grande Salle du Musée. French was the language of the meetings, though most of the addresses were briefly interpreted into English, and a few speeches were in German. Once or twice the translator found it a little difficult to render the sense of one language into another; for instance, we were rather puzzled once on being asked to vote on the "equiparation of languages"! Mons. Ruchounet was president, and vice-presidents were appointed from each nation represented, those from Austria, France, and Switzerland being ladies. One of the first questions brought forward for consideration was the organisation of the International Bureau, which has been instituted at Berne, as a centre for giving information on peace, and arranging the work of future Congresses. The subject of arbitration was discussed in an able paper by Mr. Hodgson Pratt, in which he said that the rights of nations should be like those of individuals. It was shown that duelling had been abolished by law, and that war should be also abolished by international law.

Resolutions were passed, among others, in favour of Federation of European States, by establishment of a permanent court of nations for deciding questions by law instead of force, in favour of mutual and gradual disarmament, of transferring the power of deciding on war to the representatives of the people, and of disapprobation of loans for purposes of war. Our English delegates and a few others arranged a short prayer meeting every morning before the sitting of the Congress, to ask a blessing on the day's proceedings. Considering the varied elements that composed the Congress and the difference of language and habits of thought, there has certainly been a conciliatory spirit, and a desire on the part of all to meet one another's ideas as far as possible. Even when there was an apparent disagreement, and the meeting sounded a little stormy, it proved to be only a surface tempest which soon subsided, while deep down there was an earnest mutual desire to bring about peace by peaceful means.

DESTITUTE BOYS IN VENICE.

For some years the Industrial Home for Destitute Boys in Venice has done a good work, not only in saving and helping such boys, but in training those likely to do good service as Christian schoolmasters or evangelists. We hear, however, that the lack of funds is pressing very severely on the Lady Superintendent, Miss A. R. Hammond, who is now in this country trying to awaken fresh interest in the work, and who writes that the pressure has been chiefly caused by "the death or adversity of a great many of our former most generous contributors. Unless it pleases God to grant us shortly some substantial additional help, we must begin to dismiss our boys—there are now sixty boys in the Home—and to face the prospects of the work coming to an end; for I do not think anything could induce me to go on sinking into the quagmire of debt.

"At this crisis, I receive a letter from my Director, Signor Bernatto, dated July 18, in which he tells me of a boy, aged fifteen, who has been with us six years, having just left us very creditably, to obtain good employment in the Arsenal: this boy was taken from the very lowest class, and was at first a very difficult child to manage: the very notable improvement in him, both as to conduct and work, gives cause for thankfulness and hope concerning him.

"Signor Bernatto goes on to tell me of a little boy of German origin, but Italian by birth and language, whom he has admitted to occupy the place left vacant. I give a translated extract from the letter—'In his place I have thought well to receive a child seven years old, the son and grandson of Protestant Germans, almost all dead, except the mother, who is in a lunatic asylum. He came in a pitiable state, barefooted, ragged, and hungry, brought here by his maternal grandfather, who kept him as long as he could work as a painter, but now, having lost his sight, he has not bread even for himself.

"'The child has some few bad habits, but he seems to feel himself in Paradise here, and he jumped about in such a cheerful manner (especially after a good shower bath which I administered to him when he came) as to rejoice my heart, and to strengthen my faith that God will not forsake this house, to which He brings such necessitous cases. Impossible!'

"It does indeed cause poignant distress of mind to contemplate the probable closing of the Boys' Home; distress, not only on account of the poor boys themselves, but also on account of the injury it would inflict on the cause of the Gospel in Italy, and the triumph it would afford to the enemies of God's truth. May it please Him to avert it. I am probably remaining in England for some months to come, and my permanent address will be—4, Lincoln's Inn Fields, London. "Anne Rosa Hammond."

The Paris Methodist Mission.

The past year has, we learn, been one of the best in this delightful work of French evangelisation, under Rev. Wm. Gibson, B.A. The weekly leaders' meeting at the office of the mission, 4, Rue Roquepine, has done much to consolidate the churches. The fourteen stations continue to be busily occupied in various ways for the Master. At the important station of St. Denis, where the Anarchists threatened to blow up the hall, Mr. Alain is courageously maintaining a fierce fight against atheism, immorality, and sin. The little chapel at St. Cloud is often filled with workmen engaged on the neighbouring reservoir works. At Rue Clairant, Batignolles, Sunday afternoon social gatherings for the working classes have been wonderfully popular. At Rouen, much good is done among the 19,000 English-speaking sailors who yearly frequent that port. The Havre workers have experienced varied toil and varied cheer in the French work; while among the English, services have been well attended, and the life of the church has been developed. There is here much need of still more workers, and the rescue work among young English girls would, in itself, occupy one lady's time. Granville was the scene of a blessed revival last November. Passing over many interesting details connected with other places, it is gratifying to know that prospects of the future are very bright; for France is casting off the yoke of the priesthood, and multitudes are saying "Who will shew us any good?"

IT SEEMS TO ME that the whole matter of Christianity is like a vine: there is no telling whether it is alive unless it propagates itself.—Livingstone.

IN ZULU KRAALS.

In the new issue of Forward,* the organ of the South-East Africa Evangelistic Mission, Mrs. Osborn-Howe gives some telling extracts from the itineration-journal of three workers, Messrs. Olsen, Suter, and Potter, who have concluded a three months' tour in Zululand; and of Messrs. Olsen and Emanuelson, who have now set out on a fresh journey:—

"On Lord's day Mr. Herald and I visited a white man living about eight miles off, to speak to him of Jesus. His wife is a Zulu. His little boy came over to our meeting. I felt strongly impressed that I should go and hold a meeting in his house. All the way we felt the Holy Spirit's leading, and kneeled down under a large tree by the roadside asking God to bless us. When we entered his house, he was explaining a new law about stealing cattle to two natives, one of whom was the chief. He met us with these words—'I am just preaching to these men, teaching them to be good.' He was pleased to see us. After singing and prayer, I read John iii. about the new birth, and said a few words. Mr. Herald also spoke. The words seemed to take hold upon his heart. He followed us a long way. This man told us it was thirty years since any one had spoken to him like that, nor had he attended any service in all that time. On our way back we praised the Lord under the same tree where we had prayed on our way up. Yesterday we held a meeting in one of the kraals. I do look forward to a blessed time in Zululand. God will not disappoint us. We do not take any medicines, but believe God to fulfil his promise according to his word."

In a letter of later date Mr. Olsen-Feyling wrote:—"We have moved our camp a few miles down the little river Umvuzana, and crossed it. Oh! how precious to know that God is with us, and that we really are in the way and in the place He wants us to be. This I realised more than usual yesterday, for God was indeed near us and blessing us.

"Mr. Emanuelson and myself went out in the forenoon to hold meetings in the different kraals round about. The Lord first led us to a kraal where we found only two women at home. We sat down at the hut door, and they also. I took my Testament, gave a few verses, and told them about sin, and that God had sent his Son into the world to save us, and that all who turned from sin to Him should be saved.

"For a long time I repeated the story, and made it so plain that they did indeed understand it. There only remained the work of God's Holy Spirit to give life to the soul. From there we went to the top of a high hill. The first we met there was, as usual, a growling dog, showing his teeth. Then the kraal owner came out and bade us welcome; still, he wanted to know what we wanted, which I told him, that we were come to talk to them about God. He at once offered to call the people from the next kraal, so after a very short time we had a nice congregation in one of the huts. After singing I read a few words to them and told them the story of God's free grace, and exhorted them to repent from their sins to God, and He would forgive and receive them. The manner in which they listened to the glad news I have scarcely ever seen before, and my soul was indeed blessed by seeing the words go home to their hearts."

At one kraal visited by the evangelists, Mr. Suter found a Zulu who had been a member of his Bible-class when working near Durban. As soon as Mr. Suter had told the story of Jesus to those assembled, the mother of this man turned to her son, saying:—"Did the umfundisi (teacher) tell you all this before?" "Yes." "And you never told us!" Would that this heathen woman's cry could be rung in the ear of every able-bodied worker in Great Britain!

CHRISTIAN POLICE.—Voluntary home workers are greatly needed to unite with us in work amongst the police in several counties, boroughs, and London suburbs. As the Master calls out his servants to foreign fields, let those who cannot go abroad press forward to fill up the ranks at home. Will any who are led into this work, which is chiefly carried on at home in the midst of home duties, write to the Hon. Sec. (Miss) C. Gurney, International Christian Police Association, 1A, Adelphi-terrace, London, W.C.?

CHISWICK.—On Monday week Dr. Moxey, accompanied by his wife, visited this locality, where in former years he used to be in practice. Addresses were given by both at the weekly gathering of the mothers' meeting in the Mission Hall, Fraser-street, where on Saturday night an address was given by Rev. W. Haslam, who in the afternoon also spoke at Devonhurst, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Watts. Help is needed for carrying on the Lord's work in this part of London, and there will be found a field of labour for willing workers. Communications should be addressed to Robert T. Smith, 1, Eunice-road, Chiswick.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

BY REV. F. B. MEYER.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 4.—NUMBERS XXI.

MUCH discouraged! Such times come to us all, and bring with them strong temptations to lose temper with God and man. Then we must turn to Him, and claim the grace of patience. We must yield our will to his, not knowing all the reasons why He has chosen a path so hard, but being sure that it is the right way to the city of habitation. It is because our hearts have become steeped in the sins of sense that we esteem angels' food as vile. But, ah, my soul! though thou has so often grieved thy God by thy murmurings and disputings, there is forgiveness with Him that He may be feared, and plenteous redemption. Look to Him who in the likeness of sinful flesh was lifted up on the tree that thou shouldest be saved. To look is to live, and journeying thence thou wilt pitch in Oboth, from which point and onwards there will be no further record of murmuring. This chapter was set to music by the Psalmist, who interleaved the names of these beings and the story of these battles by the mention of the ever-enduring mercy of God (Ps. cvi. 16—26). So shall it be with us. The experiences of life may not seem to be joyous but grievous, nevertheless, in the golden afterward they will yield food for everlasting joy, and the uncouth names of sins and foes will be woven into the music of golden lays. Wherefore lift up your heads and rejoice in anticipation of your joy, for your redemption draweth nigh.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 5.—NUMBERS XXII.

How strange is the human mind, and through what contortions do we pass it! Balaam loved the wages of unrighteousness, and from the first was dazzled by them. Then there came a conflict between his sense of duty to the will of God, which forbade his going to Balak, and his desire to obtain the promised treasures, which could only be procured by going. In the first temptation he succeeded, but there was a vacillation and uncertainty in his reply that evidently suggested to Balak's emissaries that he refused to come with great reluctance. On the second occasion his repeated request, as though God could change his mind, after giving a clear refusal, indicated how set his heart was on having his own way. And in the morning he did not wait to be summoned, but eagerly presented himself to accompany the embassy. Here, as so often, God gave the heart's desire, though it was the worst thing that could have befallen. We should be very careful not to force our plans and purposes against God. If we yield our will to Him, He will teach us the path of real blessedness and usefulness. But if we will take our own path, we shall be permitted to do so, to our abiding regret in after days. And even when we have started on our perverse road the angel of the Lord stands to resist us and turn us back; we may not at first detect his form and uplifted sword, but they are there. In his love, God makes the way of transgressors hard, and hedges up their way with thorns. It was a true word that Balaam spoke, but it was spoken in the wrong place. He was off God's plan. Nevertheless it is true that we can only speak with power those words which God puts into our lips.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 6.—NUMBERS XXIII.

Throughout this chapter and the next there is a record of Balaam's persistent endeavour to serve God and mammon; to speak what God's voice dictated, and yet to win the rewards of Balak, which could only be his by disobeying that voice celestial. His one aim was to make God's voice to him tally with his own interests, hence the altars and their many victims, and his shifting to another place, that he might be able to see but part of the Israelite encampment. If only he could induce the Divine voice to curse! And yet in his deepest heart he knew that God was not a man that He should lie, or the son of man that He should repent. How often we have tried to turn God to our own will and way, instead of converting ourselves to his. This has been the meaning of heaven rending prayers that have never been answered, of promises of amendment, of protestations and vows which were to act on God as bribes. This has made it apparently so difficult to ascertain the Divine will. Our judgment has not been just, because we have sought our own will, and not the will of our Heavenly Father. And yet what a comfort we may get from this. Whatever our great enemy may have against us, and however much he may endeavour to prejudice the mind of God, his words break on God's covenant relationship, as a wave on the rocks, into clouds of spray. He beholds us in his Son, in whom He sees neither iniquity nor perverseness. He hath brought us out of Egypt, and there is no art that can prevail against us.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 7.—NUMBERS XXIV.

In these remarkable words Balaam described the people of God, both as to their condition and prospects. And we need not wonder at the accuracy of the description, because the truth is always the same, whether it be seen by a bad man or a good, just as a landscape is. Balaam had his times of illumination, when he saw into the heart of things and pierced the veil of sense. Would that our lives more aptly realised these delineations! That we should be as gardens by the riverside, as lign-aloes planted by the Lord, as cedar trees beside the waters, whilst rivers of water flowed forth from us. Oh, for more of the exalted kingdom, the invincible strength, and the victory that shall eat up our adversaries! But in addition to these rapturous descriptions of our position as God's children, in the first rhapsody, in the second what a far outlook! Jesus, the Star and the Sceptre in its victorious might. The glimpse of the kingdom going forth out of Israel, of which the fulfilment is already given in the preaching of the kingdom, and shall be yet more fully given in the millennial reign. The destruction of Amalek, then one of the strongest nations; the supremacy of Assyria, then almost unknown to Israelite ears; the coming of the ships of Greece, in far-away days, when, under Alexander, the third world-empire should be set up. All these things have come to pass, and still the one great event for which they prepare awaits the final signal, and He shall come, for whom creation waits, and longs, and groans.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 8.—NUMBERS XXV.

This fearful sin seems to have arisen from a fell suggestion of Balaam. He taught Balak to cast this stumbling-block before the people of Israel. As he could not win the rewards of Balak in a straightforward way, he seems to have suggested to him the wisdom of dissolving the connection betweem them and Jehovah, and with this in view the Moabitish girls were sent to attract them to the licentious orgies of Chemosh. This the policy which Satan still adopts. He knows that so long as we are hidden in Jesus, and retain our position in Him, the risen glorious King, we are beyond his reach, and he, therefore, exerts all his arts to entice us forth by the baits and allurements of the world of sense. Oh! to be warned against his wiles, and forearmed to hold our ground! There is nothing that so pleases God as decisive action, like that of Phinehas, for the cutting-out of some hideous cancer, that threatens our very existence. And doubtless, if we will thus deal not with the sins of others in the first instance, but with our own, we shall be conscious of a fresh plighting of God's covenant of peace with us, by which we, too, shall be assured of a perpetual priesthood. Jealousy for the honour of God is a sure passport to the greatest honour that He can confer.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 9.—NUMBERS XXVI.

The saints' book of life contains an accurate record of those who belong to Him. Not one of them can be lost. Ah, my soul, be sure that thou art included in that vast inventory, for only so canst thou claim a share in the inheritance. What a decimation had been wrought in Israel by its sins, so much so that its numbers had decreased from the last census, forty years before, to the extent of 1,000 males! How few of those who had been included in the redemption from Egypt entered the Land of Promise. So many carcasses were strewn through unbelief upon the desert-waste. The whole generation died, with the exception of Caleb and Joshua, and perhaps the tribe of the Levites. And the nation emerged from its wanderings, shorn of its growing numbers. Let us beware of disbelief and disobedience, lest we too be excluded, not from heaven, but from the promised land of rest; and suffer from decrepitude and decline. In Jesus there is an abundant inheritance, greater than the furthest wing of thought can reach; but we must claim it by a single faith, which is independent of emotion, and reckons that God gives what faith claims, at the moment in which she claims.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 10.—NUMBERS XXVII.

Moses, the lawgiver, may bring the people to the borders of the land of promise and rest, but there he must resign his charge. The law, with its exhortations to obedience, can bring no soul thither. That is the exclusive office of Joshua, the Jesus of the Old Testament. Give up thine efforts, O eager soul. Remember that thy Joshua has already entered into the rest. Follow after Him, and humbly put in thy claim to share it with Him. Cease from thy own works, and trust. Trust Him with thy sins, and sorrows, and needs, and rest. How eager was Moses for a suitable successor. God honoured and answered his request, so that his work should not be dissipated. There was a distinction between himself and Joshua, who received his office from the hand of Moses, and sought counsel from Eleazar. God had honoured his faithful servant after a unique fashion. "Them that honour me I will honour," is a maxim true of all dispensations. What a word is that, "God of the spirits of all flesh," especially when compared with the assertion of our Lord, that the Father has delegated that power and authority to Him. The spirits of men can never find rest and satisfaction till they come to rest in God in Christ.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, SEPTEMBER 11.

PHILIP AND THE ETHIOPIAN.

Acts viii. 26-40.

GOLDEN TEXT: JNO. iii. 36.

"GAZA, one of the five cities of the Philistines, was situated near the southern boundary of Canaan, about three miles from the Mediterranean. It had frequently been destroyed in war, and as frequently rebuilt. It was again laid in ruins about A.D. 65, by the insurgent Jews, but was subsequently [illegible]."

The conduct of Philip in the whole of this narrative is worthy of imitation. The command to leave Samaria, the scene of a great revival for a desert road was a strange one; but Philip at once obeyed (27). The suggestion of the Spirit (29) was one from which the flesh might shrink; but he appears not to have delayed his obedience. Are we as ready to hear, and as prompt to obey our Lord's commands?

See in this incident the Ethiopian seeking after God; God seeking after the Ethiopian; and the meeting of the two. Under these three points the lessons of the whole story may be grouped.

THE ETHIOPIAN SEEKING AFTER GOD. Note (1) he was an Ethiopian, yet a seeker. Prophecy had foretold such an event (see Psa. lxviii. 31; Zeph. iii. 10). But Ethiopia was a long way from Jerusalem. What in modern times are called Nubia, Kordofan, and Abyssinia were included in Ethiopia. As a Gentile he had his national prejudice to overcome and would have to endure something of the contempt with which all Gentiles were regarded by the Jews. While they were despising, he was seeking. Does not his concern contrast with the indifference of many whose privileges are much greater?

(2) He held high office, yet was a seeker. He yearned for something more than the wealth and honour belonging to his high position. Nothing can satisfy a man who has not Christ. Did not his high position constitute a barrier? (See 1 Cor. i. 26-29.)

(3) He was a very earnest and persistent seeker. He took the long journey from Ethiopia to Jerusalem for worship (27). Here his yearning was likely to be increased, and here it might be satisfied. He deemed the matter all important. Returning from Jerusalem he read Esaias the prophet, not to "kill time," but because time was too short to be wasted. He read aloud—for he was not ashamed to be known to others who journeyed with him as a devout inquirer. And he was willing to be taught. He knew and acknowledged his ignorance, and invited Philip to join him (31). In all these particulars other seeking souls would do well to imitate him. Be as earnest, and humble, and persistent. Though salvation is all of grace, "strive to enter in" (Luke xiii. 24).

GOD SEEKING AFTER THE ETHIOPIAN. This is always first, and is the cause of the other. Proof of God's seeking earnestly for him is found in many things:—(1) In the agencies he employed. See how many they were, an angel (26), the word of God (28-33), his servant Philip, and the Spirit (29). (2) In the manner in which these agencies worked for his salvation. Why should Philip leave a city where so many new converts would need his counsel, and go into a mere desert place? Because God would save this soul. How was it that the eunuch was reading such a Scripture (32-33)? It is exactly the chapter to which a worker delights to take an enquirer. Many a burdened sinner has found rest in the atoning Savour through those words. Was it mere chance? or was God in this manner showing his further concern for this enquirer by directing him to such a word? Picture the two riding side by side in the chariot, oblivious to everything but the theme of the prophet's words. Philip preached to him Jesus. And the same Spirit who had commanded him to speak to the eunuch now spoke through him, and opened the eunuch's heart to the truth.

All this indicates how great is God's care for an individual soul, how highly He values it, and how He yearns to lead it to rest in Him.

THE MEETING BETWEEN THE TWO. No sincere seeker ever fails to find. Two results are mentioned. (1) His baptism (36-38). In preaching Jesus, Philip had evidently explained the ordinance of baptism as a confession of faith, a visible presentation of our union with Christ in death and resurrection (Rom. vi. 3, 4), and an entrance into his service (Gal. iii. 27). The sight of water on the road seems to have filled the eunuch with delight, as affording opportunity for an immediate confession of his faith in Christ. Nothing hindered since he was now a believer. (2) His joy (39). "In keeping his commandments there is great reward." The sudden removal of Philip from him did not interfere with his joy. Having found the Lord he was not now dependent on his servant. Azotus, another Philistine city—also called Ashdod—about twenty miles north-east of Gaza.

Dear Sir,—Some days before a letter under the above heading appeared in The Christian, I had been struck by that word, "We walk by faith, and not by sight" (2 Cor. v. 7). Circumstances are "things seen" (Heb. xi. 1). Tracing in the Scriptures instances where people were guided or influenced by circumstances, it is remarkable how often the word "saw" or "seeing" occurs. When Moses slew the Egyptian (Ex. ii. 12); when Israel saw that Nahash came against them "they demanded a king, when the Lord was their King" (1 Sam. xii. 12). Saul saw that the people were scattered, &c., and so "did not keep the commandment of the Lord" (1 Sam. xiii. 11, 13). "When they saw Goliath they fled, and were sore afraid" (1 Sam. xvii. 24). "Elijah, when he saw that, arose and went for his life" (1 Kings xix. 3). "When Peter saw the wind boisterous" (Matt. xiv. 30). "When the south wind blew softly," the voice of God to Paul was not "hearkened" to (Acts xxvii. 11, 12, 13, 21). These are only a few. Then, the "father of all them that believe," the one given as the great example of faith, Abraham, "considered his own body was as good as dead" (R.V.), but "looking at the promise of God, he wavered not" (Rom. iv. 11). The Word is full of instances where the voice of the Lord was contrary to circumstances, although He often made circumstances give way before the obedient servant. Let us not seek to weaken the truth of God's Word because the path of faith is difficult—one "which no fowl knoweth, and the vulture's eye hath not seen"; and because it demands entire yieldedness, intense purity of heart, constant abiding in Christ, and a close, obedient walk with God.

I also have been in most of the places in Australasia where Mr. Grubb's missions were held, in some cases at the time, in some afterwards. There may have been cases of apparent unwisdom among the "red-hot" Christians, although Satan's opposition is not always a proof that the Lord has not guided His servant, but generally there was a brokenness of spirit, an entire yielding of the will to God, on the one hand; on the other, such a filling of the Holy Ghost that every fear of man or circumstance was lost sight of in obedience to "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me." And I know that if circumstances had been looked at, very few of the missions which have been such a blessing as none can realise who have not seen it, and very little of the work now going on as fruit of those missions, would ever have been undertaken.

I am, yours faithfully, M——.

CONVOCATION AND ROMISH ERROR.

Dear Sir,—You mention that a Latin service has been performed in St. Paul's Cathedral at the opening of the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury.

It will interest your Protestant readers to know that in the "Form of prayers to be solemnly recited in both Houses of Convocation" these words occur:

. . . ducatque nos in omnem veritatem quæ est secundum pietatem, ut qui ad amussim sanctæ Reformationis nostræ, errores, corruptelas, et superstitiones olim hic grassantes, tyrannidemque Papalem, meritò et serio repudiavimus, fidem Apostolicam et vere catholicam firmiter et constanter teneamus, omnes tibique rite puro cultu intrepide serviamus pro Jesum Christum Dominum et Salvatorem nostrum."

That is, "Lead us into all truth that is according to godliness, so that according to the rule (standard) of our holy Reformation we may deservedly and seriously repudiate the errors, corruptions, and superstitions, and the Papal tyranny, formerly prevailing (lit. rioting) here, and firmly and constantly hold the Apostolic and true Catholic faith, and may intrepidly preserve the rites of thy pure worship, &c."

Was this prayer offered the other day?

I am, dear Sir, faithfully yours, H. C. M.

OPEN-AIR PREACHING.

Dear Sir,—Although the orthodox season for preaching in the open air is fast drawing to a close, I rejoice that your correspondent, Mr. B. Barry Wake, has called attention in your issue of August 25 to this much-neglected subject. I have been an open-air preacher for the past ten years, and have worked in Hyde Park, Regent's Park, and Parliament Fields, and have thus had ample opportunity of seeing how the work is done; and with one or two exceptions, it is quite evident to the most cursory observer that the churches, as a whole, do not attach importance to open-air work as an agency of the Gospel. Surely there are numbers of fully consecrated men and women capable of doing this kind of work; but they need organising. Why cannnot bands of workers be formed in connection with all our evangelical churches and chapels who would pledge themselves to engage systematically in this work, say from April to September? A very effective work could be done, most especially during the time the services are being held in the churches and chapels. It is true that the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, when fully preached, is still a mighty power for good; and is not only abreast, but in advance of the times, but how can it be brought to bear upon those thousands of our fellow-citizens, who will not enter "church, chapel, or mission hall"? The excellent report of the Open-air Mission for 1892, supplies the answer. "The masses of the people are yet unreached by the Gospel, they are becoming more and more indifferent to Sabbath observance, and public worship, and if they are to be reached at all it must be out of doors." Yours faithfully,

17, Rona-road, N.W. Arthur Solomon.

NEGLECTED PLACES.

Dear Sir,—May I venture to give a few facts, which are typical of many of our country villages. We hear of much being done to evangelise the masses, yet there are thousands living in country villages who have never heard the Gospel. For example, Storrington, Sussex, is a village with 1,250 inhabitants, and with the exception of a few tent meetings, this and last year, no opportunity is ever given whereby these may hear the Gospel. Ritualism and Romanism are rampant in the neighbourhood, and the Romish Church (founded some twelve years ago), not only holds its own but wins many over. A few Christians gather weekly for prayer, pleading that God would send either some one or some means whereby these people may hear the truth. It is a fine opening for aggressive Christian work, and I venture to say that should any of the hearts of the Lord's stewards be moved to take up this work, they will receive a hearty welcome and as much assistance as possible from the few of the Lord's servants who have this burden upon their heart.—Yours, sincerely, F. Chapman.

A Literature Crusade.

The reduction of book post to the uniform rate of a halfpenny for two ounces and fourpence per pound for Europe, Australia, India, New Zealand, Canada, and United States of America has placed in the hands of all Christian workers and generous friends a great and ever-increasing medium for the spread of the Gospel. Through the generous kindness of a friend we are enabled to offer at 21s. per 1,000 copies of Mr. Hastings's thirty-two page pamphlets in the "Anti-Infidel Library." This is half price, our friend paying 21s. on each 1,000 as his share on 100,000 copies for "The Literature Crusade."

Our City Mission, as well as workers among sailors and soldiers, should have a quantity. I trust many tract distributors and others will accept of our friend's conditional gift of half publishers' price. Orders should be sent to Marshall Brothers, 5A, Paternoster-row.

YOUNG EMIGRANTS FOR CANADA.

It was an unusual spectacle for a hot day in August that met the eye on Monday last at the noon prayer-meeting. The hall of the Y.M.C.A. in Aldersgate was crowded to the doors with an audience who gathered for prayer, and were evidently in deep sympathy with a group of Dr. Barnardo's boys en route for Canada, who occupied the front seats. Mr. Robert Paton presided, and after singing and prayer, called on Dr. Barnardo to address the meeting.

Dr. Barnardo explained how much and how earnestly he desired the prayerful sympathy of all present for the party of 105 fine young lads now about to sail for Canada. With these Mr. Wookey, so widely known as Deputation Secretary to the Homes, was about to travel with a view to visiting Canada and the U.S.A. in the interests of the homes. Continuing his account, Dr. Barnardo said that up to the 31st December, 1891, the Homes under his care had placed out in situations abroad 5,009 trained lads and girls. This year already 498 others had gone forth, and the 105 lads now present brought up the number of emigrants for this year to 603, and the total to 5,612. He yet hoped to send another party of 120 girls late in September if enough money were received to pay the expenses of outfit and passage, and this party would bring the total up to 5,732. Dr. Barnardo explained that with no party sent out this year had he been so late in securing the passage and outfit as for the present group, sixty-two of whom, at a cost of £10 each, yet needed to be paid for. The facts concerning the parentage and former condition of the 105 lads forming this party were given, from which it appeared, that while almost every county in England was represented by those present, three lads were from Scotland, three from Ireland, and two from the U.S.A. Of the whole number sixty-eight had actually been rescued from a street life and from the common lodging-houses, the remaining thirty-seven being orphans, or the children of decent widows of the poorest class. All had been thoroughly tested and trained in the homes, and no lad was going forth upon whose record any blot rested. The story of a lad rescued from the slums, led to Christ, and emigrated to Canada in 1887, who out there is now preaching the Gospel, was then given, after which Mr. Wookey, in a few touching words, spoke of some recent admissions to the homes of which he had been witness. The set time for the meeting to close was one o'clock, but it was evidently with reluctance that the crowded audience separated from a gathering which had been one of unusual interest.

Keswick Mission Fund.

The amounts received by me up to the present date for 1892 for the Keswick Convention Mission Funds, etc., are as under:—

For General Fund, Keswick Convention Mission	901	8	0
For other missions	556	9	11
For Convention Lodge and expenses ...	244	15	0
	£1,702	12	11

Also packets of jewellery:—

For Keswick Mission	63 packets.
For other missions	25 ,,
	88 in all.

The amount in cash and jewellery have been handed over to the respective societies.

The number of contributions—506—in amounts ranging from 3s. to £200.

Receipts have been sent as far as home addresses could be ascertained. Should any omissions have occurred, the donors' excuse is desired.

I gratefully acknowledge, on behalf of my Lord and Master, these often self-denying gifts, and pray that those who have given their hearts' love to Him, with or without these material proofs of it, may find in his love a full reward.

Praise God for all the abounding blessing granted at the Keswick Convention, 1892.

HON. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR, of Ohio, referred lately to the drink traffic, and to "the tremendous loss, the tremendous waste of money which this traffic causes, and the ruinous effect it has on all classes, in all kinds of business."

Temperance Notes.

A NEW Temperance Hotel is being erected at Herne Bay.

In the eleven Western mountain States of the Union there is a saloon for every forty-three voters.

The police successfully opposed the renewal of eleven public-houses at Leath Ward Brewster Sessions, Penrith.

Mary Allen West has sailed for Honolulu, to engage in temperance work until September, when she goes to Japan.

In the Fiji Islands, any white man found giving intoxicating drink to an aborigine or half-caste is liable to a fine of fifty pounds or imprisonment.

The close connection of drink and insanity is leading many medical men in this department of science to take decided steps in regard to total abstinence.

Miss Frances E. Willard calculates that there are enough saloons in America, if they were set in a row, to keep one company without a break along a street reaching from Chicago to New York.

Professor Barrett, of Belfast, says the misery of Ireland is due in great part to the abominable traffic in strong drink, more money being spent in a year on alcohol than the whole rental of the country.

The temperance workers in connection with the churches and chapels at Lynn have formed a vigilance committee, for the purpose of endeavouring to reduce the number of public-houses in the town.

The landlords of the public-houses at Bolton Abbey, a district much frequented by visitors on Sundays, have received instructions from the headquarters of the Devonshire estate to apply for a six days' licence only at the approaching Brewster Sessions.

The example of drunkards has no influence as a rule towards encouraging drunkenness, but the example of respectable religious moderate drinkers is followed by many to their ruin. The Bible condemns not only sin itself but the way of sin, the steps that lead to sin.

The Sevenoaks Temperance Council have suggested several reasons why some of the licences might be advantageously dispensed with, and the most curious reason set forth, is that many of the houses do not pay the publican, a fact that is evident by the houses constantly changing hands.

Brighton, it is well known, possesses a large number of public-houses in proportion to the population, and it is alleged that many of them are conducted in a discreditable manner. On these grounds a petition has been presented to the borough justices requesting the closing of a number of licensed houses.

The National Temperance League, 33, Paternoster-row, has published a booklet giving particulars of deputation and mission arrangements for the coming winter season. Friends of temperance work should get this booklet, and see in how many ways they can co-operate with the League for the good of humanity and to the glory of God.

Rev. Newman Hall, writing in the Home Messenger for September on "The Drink Question," relates how, in 1840, he was led to sign the pledge, and goes on to show how, apart from the benefits which accrued to him personally, it enabled him to deal more effectually with cases of intemperance which he met with in his ministerial experience.

In one of the towns of Illinois, a banker lately put his private mark on the money he paid out on Saturday night to the wage-workers of the town who patronised his bank. It is stated that on the Monday night, of the seven hundred dollars paid out and marked privately, over three hundred dollars had come back to him from the saloons of that town.

The Temperance Cause.—The annual report of the state of temperance in the Irish Methodist Church for the year ended June, 1892, has just been issued, and shows that there are 228 Bands of Hope, with 25,523 enrolled members. A sum of £21 was given for superior answering on Dr. Richardson's Temperance Lesson Book, and temperance sermons were preached in several congregations during the year.

Church and Nonconformist ministers are working hand in hand at Wolsingham for the furtherance of the temperance cause. At the petty sessions there on Tuesday week Revs. T. E. Espin (vicar of Tow Law), J. R. Cleminson (Wesleyan), M. Cuthbert (Primitive Methodist), and Geo. Samuel (Presbyterian) were included in a deputation sent to oppose the granting of an occasional licence, and several applications for extensions have been successfully opposed.

Mr. McCabe tells of a drinking man who, being in a saloon late at night, heard the wife of the landlord say to her husband, "Send that fellow home, it is late." "No, never mind," replied her husband, "he is shingling our roof for us." This idea lodged in the mind of the drunkard, and he did not return to the saloon for six months. When passing the saloon keeper in the street the latter said, "Why don't you come round to my place any more?" "Thank you for your kind hospitality," replied his former victim; "I have been shingling my own roof lately."

Personalia.

Dr. Billing, Bishop of Bedford, is now regaining strength after his illness.

The Bishop of Guildford, who had his leg broken last week through an accident at Buxton, is progressing favourably.

Dr. A. T. Pierson has accepted, it is announced, an engagement for the summer and holiday months at the Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York.

Rev. G. W. Olver, B.A., senior secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, leaves London this week for an extended official tour in India and the East.

Rev. J. Fordyce, Secretary of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society, has left Kensington Park-road, London, for "Simla," Station-road, Cambridge.

Dr. J. Aspinwall Hodge, for many years widely known and esteemed as an able and successful Presbyterian minister in Hartford, Conn., has felt himself compelled, by advancing years, to resign.

Mr. George Blaiklock expects to reach home at the end of September. His Gospel temperance tour in South Africa has proved very successful, the missions held in various places arousing great interest.

Dr. Harford-Battersby has been, we hear, again invalided home from the Niger. This will compel another rearrangement in the Niger Mission, as Dr. Battersby had been appointed acting secretary.

Dr. Fenn, the well-known L.M.S. Medical Missionary in Madagascar, is, we hear, regaining strength after his severe attack of typhoid fever, and has resumed work after a visit to the Hot Springs at Antsirabe.

Lady Radstock is a shade better this week, though still weak and only able to hear a verse or two, but always in great trustfulness, and accepting all the variations of her illness as part of the Lord's dealing in grace.

Rev. S. Chapman, who has been preaching for a time at his former church, Adelaide-place, Glasgow, has now set sail on his return to Melbourne. He is returning by way of China, where his daughter is labouring as a missionary of the China Inland Mission.

Rev. William Ashton, of Barkly West, South Africa, who, for fifty years, has taken a leading part in the evangelisation of the Griqua and Bechuana tribes, has just celebrated his jubilee. Europeans and natives of many denominations united in hearty tokens of love and esteem.

Mr. Joseph Hannington, having secured the services of two or three Christian workers who speak Arabic, would like to meet with some three or four Christians to join him in an evangelistic tour on the Nile, starting from Cairo about the middle of November, afterwards visiting Palestine.

Rev. J. Jackson Wray has now almost recovered his health, but he has been prohibited from taking charge of Westminster Chapel, Buckingham-gate, it being judged that regular pastoral work would be too heavy for him at present. He intends to devote a good deal of his time in the future to literary work.

THE DECISIVE STEP.

In the world of the soul, the world of a dream,
Alone on a desolate height,
In a desert of snows where no creature could live,
Through the storms coming down with the night,
O'er an ocean of mist, lying dense in the glen,
Rose a mountain that glittered like gold,
With palaces fair as the mansions of bliss
Which the saints in their visions behold—
Oh! to reach that bright country, that heaven upon earth,
Where the lost ones are safe in the fold.

I sought it, but steep was the rugged decline,
And dark was the mist in the vale,
Till stayed by what seemed an impassable flood
Roaring down like the sea in a gale.
I cried, "Must I die with my face toward Heaven?
Must I perish while Jesus can save?"
When a voice through the darkness—the Word of a King—
Answered, "Come to Me," over the wave:
Then I stepped on the torrent at Jesus' command—
I stepped for a crown or a grave.

I stepped; but I stepped on a tremorless rock,
Not into the treacherous flood;
But into the land where the sun never sets,
The beautiful kingdom of God.
The eye cannot see and the ear cannot hear,
No spirit of man can conceive
The joys of the Christian, even this side of Heaven,
Who will freely Christ's fulness receive;
When the Spirit, revealing the deep things of God,
Imparts them to them that believe.

Evangelistic Notes.

Rev. Thomas Waugh is about to open a Gospel mission in Cork. Possibly he may visit other towns. Prayer is desired for blessing.

Bromley (Kent).—Mr. Dykes, the Kent evangelist, is conducting a special mission at Bromley Common, and there have already appeared signs of blessing. The mission continues for another fortnight.

Brighton.—During the week special efforts have been made at the Carlton Mission Hall, Brighton, with the object of deepening the spiritual life in the locality, and it is pleasing to notice that the spiritual results are very encouraging.

Featherstone.—A united evangelistic mission has been conducted here, and many who have hitherto refrained from attending a place of worship have been present at the services. It is hoped that much lasting good may be accomplished.

Mr. E. P. Telford is now conducting a midsummer mission in Andover Street Chapel, Sheffield. Last Sunday he addressed a great camp meeting; over 2,000 persons being present. Mr. Telford returns to America at the end of the year.

Ireland.—During the past fortnight, several meetings under the auspices of the Dublin Y.M.C.A., have been addressed by Mr. Brown, of the London City Mission, and by Mr. M'Kittrick, who is going as a missionary to the Congo in a few months. The open-air meetings in the Phœnix Park especially were a great success.

Basingstoke.—Mrs. W. Brown, of Swindon, has been holding an eight days' mission in Essex Hall. The Lord has been using her in a remarkable way, and souls have been led to decide for Christ. The meetings will be continued throughout this week; as there are many more broken down under a deep sense of their need, and many in tears crying to the Lord to save them.

Mr. B. Fay Mills.—The meetings held in Oakland, Cal., by Rev. B. Fay Mills, have been attended with the same remarkable results which have followed his missions in other places. The various churches have cordially co-operated, and about two thousand converts have been made. The services were held in a tabernacle erected specially for the meetings. As one result of the meetings sixty-one persons were lately received into the church at San Diego, Cal.

Mr. Edward Hurditch has been preaching the Gospel during August in the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse. In spite of the hot and sultry weather large audiences were present at all the meetings, and much spiritual good has followed. Mr. Hurditch, who is open for engagements, may be communicated with at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, E. Mr. Ned Wright is to be the evangelist in charge of the meetings at the Edinburgh Castle during September.

Appledore, Kent.—The Evangelisation Society has at present a tent pitched in this village. The work is very encouraging, and there is every prospect of a good work being done, especially as the district is full of harvesters. It is very pleasing to notice the co-operation with the mission of the vicar of the parish, who has taken part in the meetings, and on Sunday shortened the service at his church in order to allow of his congregation and himself attending the meeting.

Mr. Newton Jones has, since August 22, been holding services twice daily on the Broadstairs sands. This being the fourth season he has visited this place, many friends greeted him on his arrival, some to tell him that it was last year they decided for Christ, and others to again help him to get the young people together. A museum service was held on Wednesday, when numerous objects were brought, the evangelist speaking on each. On Friday the annual fruit, flower, and toy service was celebrated. The weather was much in our favour; many listened to the singing on the cliff and sands.

Messrs. Herbert Hurditch and Irwin are visiting a number of towns in the North of Ireland with a Bible carriage, and have met on the whole with good success. In Monaghan the priests stirred up a good deal of opposition, and the populace smashed the glass of the carriage. The magistrates, however, interposed to protect the evangelists, and under the guardianship of a posse of police they preached the Gospel night after night to a thousand Roman Catholics. Many copies of the Bible and Douay Testaments, Horner's Penny Series, etc., were circulated. Will friends in England pray that these two young brethren may be safely kept and guided in their interesting work?

THE EMPRESS FREDERICK is the patroness of the Society for Children's Hospitals on the German coast. Its last report gives the total number of children received at its four hospitals as 1,175. Of these, 610 were improved and 483 entirely cured.

Obituary.

MR. W. BILLINGTON.

This well-known Christian worker at Kirkham and Preston died on Friday. Converted in 1849, he at once commenced Christian work, and for thirty-seven years he acted as a local preacher. His labours were productive of much fruit. He also acted as a useful class-leader for forty-three years, and his death is a serious loss to the local churches.

MR. J. P. COHEN.

We hear with deep regret that Mr. J. P. Cohen, one of the Lord's faithful servants, known to many in years past, has departed to be with Christ. He fell asleep on Friday, 26th ult., at his residence, 110, Manor Park-road, N.W. Himself a converted Jew, he was owned and blessed of God in carrying the glad tidings of salvation in the name of Jesus to the Jews, both in this country and abroad. For a long time he has been laid aside through much bodily affliction. But our gracious Lord kept him in perfect peace, and has now delivered him out of all his sorrows. He was 73 years of age.

MR. BENJAMIN MARSHALL.

With deep sorrow we record the death on the 19th ult., at Downham, Norfolk, of Mr. B. Marshall, Superintendent of the Soldiers' Institute at Gibraltar, at the early age of thirty. The immediate cause of his death was dropsy. Formerly an officer in the Orient line of steamers, when brought at sea to the knowledge of the Saviour he realised that a life without Christ was a wasted life, and devoted himself heart and soul to the service of the Master. In 1889, an opening for work that he loved, amongst soldiers and sailors, occurred at Gibraltar, and during the past three years he laboured faithfully and incessantly, and we know that many will rise up and call him blessed for being the means of leading them to the Saviour. For his young widow at Gibraltar, who ably assisted her husband in his work, and for the two little fatherless children we ask the prayers and sympathy of the Lord's people.

MR. JOSEPH WEATHERLEY.

This beloved brother entered into rest at 51, Gordon-square, on August 25, at the age of sixty, after several months of suffering and weakness, greatly increased towards the end. To be laid aside so long from active work for the Master had been a very heavy trial to him, for to serve in so high a service had been the greatest joy of his life.

He was one of the founders of the Evangelisation Society and a constant preacher in connection with it for his Master, as also for the Open-air Mission. He was the superintendent of M. Barbier's Mission to the French in London, and Miss Mittendorff's Homes for Destitute Girls. For many years he held a weekly Bible Class for Telegraph Messengers, and was an active member for eleven years of the Religious Tract Society Committee. But he will be most missed, in public work at the Homes for Little Boys at Farningham and Swanley, where the officers ever sought his advice, and the boys regarded him and mourn for him as a father. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness," was his prime object, and his dying advice to one who saw him the day before he entered into the glory.

MR. STEPHEN HERMITAGE.

Every section of the Christian Church in Hastings is mourning the loss of Mr. Stephen Hermitage, a devoted and honoured labourer, who has just been called to his rest. He passed away on the morning of Saturday, August 20, in the house of his son, Mr. Henry Hermitage, at Eastbourne, whither he had gone a few weeks ago, in the hope that change might be of some service in bringing back the health he had lost through many years of work in his Master's cause. He leaves a widow, seven sons, and three daughters.

Mr. Hermitage, since his conversion in Mr. Everard's Bible-class, has given himself unreservedly to evangelistic work. He began as a Wesleyan local preacher, but soon pushed out into open undenominational service. He built a little hall at Ninfield, and conducted services there for two or three years; he also started a mission at Robertsbridge. In Hastings his Sunday services at the Public Hall—in which all his family took a part—and the outdoor services on the beach and in the Central Hall, were always exceedingly well attended. It was these labours that eventually broke down his robust frame and strong body. He was a vehement preacher—a man carried away by the power of the message he felt compelled to deliver—and the strain on his bodily powers began to tell. By command of their medical friends, both Mr. and Mrs. Hermitage had to relinquish the work in which they took so much delight, and they had to see the well-known Gospel Mission banner—a blue flag with white lettering—carried by younger and stronger hands. It may be said in closing that at all times and seasons, indoors and out of doors, Mr. Hermitage was ever seeking opportunities of setting forth the Gospel. Much more might be added as to his interesting career, but these details we reserve for the present.

REV. HENRY SIMON, OF HARE-COURT CHAPEL.

We mentioned in our last, with very deep regret, the unexpected death of this devoted and able minister of the Gospel. He had been ailing for some six weeks, but no danger had been anticipated until on the evening of Thursday week he had a serious relapse, from which he never rallied, passing away on the following morning.

He was born in April, 1837, at Stackpool, a seacoast village in South Pembroke. His father and mother are described as Independents of the old Puritan type. There was no chapel within five miles, but they gathered a weekly prayer-meeting in their own house—a prayer-meeting that was visited by nearly every minister who found himself in the neighbourhood, and which exercised a deep influence on the villagers, and a deeper still on the six sons. To-day, of the five surviving sons, three are Congregational ministers.

Henry began preaching at the age of seventeen, and after serving as home missionary, went to Springhill College. In 1861, he entered on his first charge at Castleford, in Yorkshire, and preaching at first in the Mechanics' Hall, gathered around him a congregation. He did not remain there long, but when he left to accept a call to Tolmers-square, London, in 1866, he left the people with a church built and paid for. At Tolmers-square he remained five years, doing good work. While there he married Miss Annie Richards, who survives him with a son and daughter. Mr. Simon, in 1871, became co-pastor with Dr. Raleigh, of Hare-court Chapel, Canonbury, and the connected church at Stamford-hill. In 1875, Mr. Simon received a pressing call to Westminster Chapel to assist Rev. Samuel Martin in his declining years. There, for more than twelve years, as co-pastor and sole pastor, Mr. Simon preached the Gospel by his life and beautiful character, as well as by word, till he left to return to his old church at Hare-court in 1887, much to the regret of the Westminster people. The Hare-court church had fallen off to such an extent that there was danger of its becoming extinct. On Mr. Simon's return the old life revived, and in two years 300 members were added to the roll. The church now mourns with the bereaved family, and its grief is hardly less intense.

The funeral took place on Wednesday last, and was attended by a large and sorrowful congregation. Many leading ministers took part, amongst these Principal Simon and Rev. E. White. The latter said that such a man as Henry Simon does not live in a world where death ends all. There are souls among us which so shine that they impress the stamp of conviction upon their faces, and Henry Simon's face gave the lie direct to all that materialistic atheism. His countenance was like a window into the spiritual realms, and in its nobler expressions always helped one to believe in God's unseen and heavenly world.

CHOLERA.—"Medicus" writes "A Word of Warning" in view of the possible development of cholera. He says, Keep the skin open and clean by a daily bath. Let the diet consist of food of an easily digested and highly nutritious character, avoiding badly-cooked vegetables and unripe fruit. Filter all drinking water; guard against chills by increased attention to clothing. These are the chief points in his letter, and might be advantageously observed all the year round, but are especially important in the face of any epidemic.

BROOKEBOROUGH, IRELAND.—A hall, erected in loving memory of the Hon. Lady Brooke, was opened a few days ago at Brookeborough, co. Fermanagh. Captain Harry Brooke, in an explanatory statement, said:—The property is vested in trustees, whose duty it will be to see that the conditions of a charter drawn up in legal form, specifying for what uses the hall is available, are complied with. This charter contains the following conditions:—The Memorial Hall shall be used for all meetings (religious and secular) such as public worship of the Church of Ireland, Methodist or Presbyterian, or any other Protestant denomination. Evangelistic or missionary meetings connected with all Protestant parties. Lectures on scientific, agricultural, or other similar subjects; entertainments for charitable objects. No political meetings will be allowed in the hall. No intoxicating beverages, and no gambling, raffling, dancing, or theatricals. The management is entrusted to a committee which is as representative as possible of the different Protestant denominations. At the inaugural meeting, addresses were delivered by the Dean of Achonry, Revs. Henry Brooke, and J. W. Bruce Little, Colonel Doran, and others.

The Book World.

The Cry that Opens Heaven, and other sermons, by Dr. De Witt Talmage, is a very readable book. The discourses are fourteen in number, some of them very short. W. G. Wheeler.

Bible Readings on Bible Women, by Mary E. Beck, is a thoughtful little book. The readings are illustrated by incidents in daily life, and should prove suggestive to ladies engaged in conducting mothers' meetings 1s. 6d. Partridge.

The Anti-Infidel. Edited by W. R. Bradlaugh. Vol. 7. (2s. 6d. Snow and Co.) Those who have to deal with persons holding infidel opinions will find here many arrows for their quiver. The pages represent a wide range of information, and deserve wide-spread circulation in quarters where doubt and unbelief are being industriously propagated.

The Safest Place in the World. By J. Oswald Jackson. (6d. Stoneman.) These thoughtful pages deal with no mundane refuge, but show that "the secret place of the Most High . . . the shadow of the Almighty," alone offers security for time and eternity. This is a booklet of exceptional worth, dedicated to Mr. George Williams, who commends it to the notice of all who are interested in the welfare of young people. We second the commendation, and assure old and young alike that the pages emphasise a truth which is sublime beyond conception.

The Gospel of Paul the Apostle: An Attempt to Render in Modern English the Principal Writings of St. Paul. By Ralph Sadler. (Nisbet.) This is a bulky book which scholars can well do without, and the unlearned will not be much the better for possessing. Translations of the Pauline Epistles are followed by a new version of the Acts, which is succeeded by some Old Testament selections based on the Septuagint, and notes on various subjects, with "The Dying Speech of Sigsmund the Volsung," mysteriously sandwiched between them. Singular as it may seem, "Apostolic Doings" heads the top of all these latter pages, in perpetuation of a species of carelessness which runs all through the work. There is no evidence of learning adequate for the great undertaking to which the author has set his hand, and on every page there are renderings that challenge legitimate criticism.

Sowing and Reaping is the title of a very instructive missionary Bible reading, by Annie W. Marston. 1d. (Marshall Brothers.)

A Lasting Revival, by Mr. James Van Sommer, is a brief study founded on 1 Sam. vii. The pages are practical throughout, and close with pointed suggestions for very humbling self-examination. (1d., The Author, Cuffnells, Wimbledon Common.)

Only a Colporteur.—A story of work in Bohemia, by E. E. Heathfield. (6d. J. Snow and Co.) These pages describe the chequered experiences of a colporteur in a most difficult sphere of labour, where Romanism has a firm hold on the minds of the people. It is especially interesting, as showing that the Scriptures are still (as they ever have been) the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.

Home of Hope, Gloucester.

Twenty-one rescued girls remain in this refuge, where they have been taught to forsake sin and, some of them, to begin a new life in the love and fear of God. During last year news was received of the happy marriages of six former inmates. It is worth much labour and sorrow to read such words as these from one who has been for more than five years in a situation. "I am trying to live a new life, but it is hard sometimes. I have often to fly to my heavenly Father for strength and guidance, and I am very thankful for the godly counsel received whilst in the home." Of the large number of late residents with whom more or less frequent communication is kept up, the majority seem doing well. Some pleasant visits have been made by "old girls," one of whom gave the girls a nice little picnic and seemed very pleased to tell them how her past training helps in her present life. Various kinds of daily work are done with industry and perseverance. Many of the girls have experienced saving faith in Christ, of which fact the change in their lives gives good testimony. The hon. superintendent is Miss E. Sessions, 6, Bath-place, Park-road.

KEITH-FALCONER MISSION.—Rev. R. W. Gardner, of the Free Church of Scotland, writes from Aden, with reference to his work there, and refers to the sickness which is so prevalent, especially among the women and children, largely in consequence of want of suitable clothing. The missionaries would be able to do much in the prevention of disease if they had a stock of flannel or the means wherewith to purchase it, so that they could supply the needs of the very poor, and so alleviate their sufferings, especially during the cold months of the year. We trust some of our readers will be led to help in this way.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Archdeacon Taylor, D.D., resumes on Sunday his duties at St. Andrew's, Liverpool.

The Dean of St. Asaph's (Rev. J. Owen) has been appointed Principal of St. David's College, Lampeter.

The Bishop of Liverpool is deriving continued benefit by his change and rest at Keswick. He intends resuming work on October 14.

Rev. Dr. Hicks, the Bishop-designate of Bloemfontein, has sailed from Southampton for the Cape, where he is to be consecrated on arrival.

We hear that the letters of the late Archbishop Magee, with a biography, are shortly to be published in two volumes by Messrs. Isbister. The editor is Rev. J. C. Macdonnell, Canon of Peterborough, and formerly chaplain to the Archbishop.

The post of central secretary for Ireland of the C.M.S., vacant by the resignation of Rev. F. W. Mervyn, has been filled up by the appointment of Rev. Arthur T. Shields, M.A., who has just returned from India after ten years' work in the mission-field.

We learn that Canon Money, vicar of Holy Trinity, Kilburn, has accepted the incumbency of Birling, near Maidstone. His health has suffered severely during the last year, and Canon Money has earned the comparative repose of a smaller charge than that he leaves at Kilburn.

In Guiana Dr. Austin's episcopal jubilee was celebrated last week with great enthusiasm. "He has been," says the Times, "a thorough missionary bishop as well as a metropolitan, having travelled through nearly all the interior of the colony, which is only inhabited by a few aboriginal Indians."

Rev. Charles Hole, B.A., has begun, in the C.M.S. Intelligencer, a series of articles which will have their development in a full history of the Society, to be published in view of its approaching centenary. Mr. Hole's first article deals with the "Events Leading to the Establishment of the C.M.S."

"Rev. H. E. Fox, of Durham, and Canon Bell, of Cheltenham, have practically finished," says the Yorkshire Post, "a new hymn-book. The collection will be distinctly Protestant in tone—much more so than that of Bishop Bickersteth—and will contain adequate provision for Holiness conventions and parochial missions."

Canon Venables, rector of Burgh Castle, writes:—"During the last eighteen years no fewer than 237 churches have been built or restored within the diocese of Norwich. The money raised for this purpose, and raised entirely by the voluntary gifts of the people, exceeds half a million, or £500,000. Thus on an average, during the last eighteen years, this diocese has given more than £28,000 every year for church repairs and church building."

A proposal having been made as to holding during the cool season a series of missions for English in the principal stations of the diocese of Madras, the Bishop appointed a committee to consider the question, and one of its members has ascertained during a recent visit to England that the Church Parochial Mission Society would be willing to help, and that in all probability Rev. W. H. Hay Aitken would come out and undertake the mission.

A few earnest labourers are wanted for the ministry of the Church in Western Texas. The Bishop of the diocese writes that there is a good prospect of usefulness for young men who are willing to "disdain delights and live laborious days." Candidates must possess, besides piety, "common sense, social qualities, and fair preaching power." The Bishop is confident that there is a great work to be done in these outlying regions, if he can find the right sort of workers.

Canon Claughton, who has been ill for some time past, is now better. He has been suffering from an ulcer in the foot of an alarming character, and has been under a London specialist. He was in a sick bed when the news of his father's death came; but he, however, attended the funeral, though he was obliged to use crutches. His foot is now much better, although he is suffering from acute rheumatism. He is now at Danebury Palace, and will not be able to resume his duties for some time.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. J. Stirling Miller has resigned the pastorate of Shaw Church, Oldham.

Out of 2,747 Congregational ministers in England and Wales, 2,052 are total abstainers.

Sermons in aid of the Sunday-school were preached at Buxton on Sunday last by Rev. Colmer Symes, B.A.

A temperance Sunday was held at Beckenham on Sunday week, when sermons were preached by Rev. Elwyn Thomas, of Tolmers-square Church.

It is stated that the vacancy caused at Sunderland by the removal of Rev. W. H. Harwood to Islington is likely to be filled by Rev. Wm. Robinson, of Burnley.

Rev. C. A. Berry, of Wolverhampton, addressed the English visitors to Grindelwald on Sunday week, appealing for sympathy and practical aid for the homeless poor of the village.

Rev. Dr. A. Mackennal, of Bowden, is opposed to the proposed multiplying of summer schools of theology. He hopes that next year there will be but one, and that, as this year, it will be held at Mansfield College, Oxford.

The quarterly meetings of the East Carmarthenshire Ministers' Association were held at Llansadwrn on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week. A useful conference was held on Tuesday at Carmel Chapel, Rev. W. Davies, Bethlehem, Llangadock, presiding.

Rev. W. E. Hurndall, M.A., preached at Bower Hinton, Martock, on Sunday week, carrying out the exchange suggested by Dr. Leach between town and country ministers. The services at Martock will long be remembered for their brightness, point, and power.

A gratifying report of Sunday School work was read at the anniversary of Bethel Sunday School, Sheerness. During the year encouragement has been given by increasing numbers, by a deeper interest manifested by both teachers and scholars; of the latter twenty-four have been admitted into church membership during the year, and several others are actively taking their part in other forms of Christian service.

Rev. Walter Searle, of Birchfield, is leaving Birmingham in November for the Cape, having been asked by the Committee of the Cape General Mission, to take charge of their work in South Africa. Though it had for some time been feared that Mr. Searle would, on account of the recent severe illness and continued ill-health of his wife, be compelled to seek a more suitable climate, the announcement of his probable departure was received with deep regret on the part of the church. Mr. Searle will conduct his last service at Westminster-road, Birmingham, on Sunday, Oct. 30th, and a farewell meeting will be held on the following evening. The final meeting will be held in Exeter Hall on Nov. 4, on the eve of Mr. Searle's departure.

BAPTIST.

It is proposed to erect an English Baptist Chapel at Colwyn Bay.

Rev. George Dunnett, who has for the last three years been the pastor of Darkhouse Chapel, Cozeley, has resigned.

Dr. M'Laren has promised to preach the centenary sermon at the London autumnal meetings of the Baptist Missionary Society, to be held in October.

Rev. Charles Cole, of Windsor, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Claremont Baptist Chapel, the largest Baptist place of worship in Bolton.

Special services were held on Sunday week at Berwick-on-Tweed in connection with the centenary of the Baptist Missionary Society, when sermons were preached by Rev. Dr. Landels.

The Baptist Church at Twickenham (Rev. E. H. Brown, pastor), has resigned its connection with the Baptist Union in consequence of the inaction of the Union in connection with the Aked incident.

Rev. F. C. Spurr has preached at Taunton on the last two Sundays. A very large congregation assembled on the last evening to hear a sermon on "The days of Noah and the days of the Son of Man."

Rev. F. J. Feltham, late of Wellington-street Baptist Church, Luton, is engaged in a very successful work in a large and rapidly-growing neighbourhood in the town of Leicester, where a new church is in contemplation.

Rev. Charles Carter, missionary to Ceylon, who recently returned to New Zealand, translated the Scriptures from originals into Cingalese, and has just issued from the Government presses an English-Cingalese dictionary which he has long been compiling.

Though the exact design of the memorial which it is proposed to erect over the grave of the late Mr. C. H. Spurgeon has not yet been finally decided upon, the last resting-place of the great preacher in Norwood Cemetery continues to be the centre of interest to thousands of visitors. Around the tomb there is evidence, in the trodden grass, of many pilgrim feet, and on the large flat slab there have been temporarily placed the words, "I have kept the faith."

PRESBYTERIAN.

Three large Mission Halls have lately been opened in Cardiff.

The Highbury congregation is at present worshipping in the local Athenæum, the church building being in process of renovation.

The London Presbyterian pulpits have for the last Sunday or two been largely occupied by ministers on holiday from the North, some hailing from the distant Orkneys.

A recent bazaar at Branton, Northumberland, at which Lady Tankerville rendered substantial assistance, realised the sum of £230 on behalf of the Presbyterian work.

Rev. J. B. Thorburn, B.D., formerly of Broad-street Church, Birmingham, has entered on the pastorate of the rural congregation of Widdrington in the Presbytery of Northumberland.

The Presbyterians at Tooting, who continue to worship under the ministry of Rev. Wm. Anderson, D.D., intend to erect a substantial church, accommodating five or six hundred people, at a cost of about £5,000.

The Calvinistic Methodists have decided to start a new mission to the masses who never attend a place of worship in the populous districts of Glamorganshire and Monmouthshire. The Presbyterians have undertaken to pay the salaries of at least two missionaries in connection with the mission.

METHODIST.

The Walcot Chapel, one of the historic chapels of Bath, was reopened last week after extensive alterations.

A fine new Primitive Methodist Chapel has just been opened at Middlesbrough. It will hold 700 persons.

Rev. Alfred S. Geden proposes that Richmond Wesleyan College should be sold, and in its place a Theological College established at Oxford on the lines of Mansfield.

The annual report of the Ladies' Auxiliary of Wesleyan Missionary Society, just issued, states that the gross receipts for the year amount to £9,494, which includes £584 raised by special effort.

The Bible Christian Conference has remitted to the district meetings the consideration of the question that all persons who are engaged in making or selling intoxicating drink shall be excluded from taking office in the church.

The foundation-stones of a new church were laid at Richhill last week. Methodism has long been established in the neighbourhood, and the old church in which the congregation worshipped for many years had become dilapidated.

The Wesleyan Conference has published a pastoral address, in which the assumption of the title of "church," instead of "society," is defended, partly on the ground that Wesleyans are coming to undervalue both the sacraments.

A sermon was preached in the English Presbyterian Church at Holyhead on Sunday week, commemorative of Mr. Joseph Williams, C.C., who for over fifty years laboured as a Methodist local preacher, being also noted for his benefactions to the poor and Christian objects.

Rev. Dr. Waller, secretary of the Wesleyan Conference, has recently sent to the Vanderbilt University, the chief university of Southern Methodism, a valuable historical set of Wesleyan documents, including an autograph letter of John Wesley to Rev. Samuel Bradburn, and part of the diary of Hester Ann Rogers.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Dr. Lucy Gaynor is expected to leave Chicago for China on the 28th ult., to join American Friends at Nanking. She goes out under the auspices of the Ohio Yearly Meeting.

Only a few weeks ago 230 old people responded to an invitation to tea in Oldham and had a happy time together. Their average age was seventy-one years, and their united years over 16,000.

Benjamin J. Elsmere has found a wide field of service at Llandrindod, Radnorshire, and hopes also to help at the Pales and Penybont. Earnest work is needed and will be repaid with success in those parts.

Miss Harriett Green, of Saffron Walden, a minister of the Friends Society, assisted by Miss Robinson, of Whinfell Hall, Lorton, commenced services at the Central Hall, Maryport, last Monday. There was a good attendance.

The Bible School Assembly of Wester Yearly Meeting recently held, adopted strong resolutions against the liquor traffic, the Sabbath opening of the World's Fair, and the double standard of morality for the two sexes now unhappily existing.

The tent mission at Newport, Isle of Wight, conducted by Geo. B. Carter, of Weston, and Howard and Louisa Nicholson, of London, seems to have given them much encouragement. Doubtless the warm and dry season has contributed materially to the success of the many open air and tent missions held this year.

At the coming General Conference probably all the Yearly Meetings in America except Canada will be represented. The last conference formulated a great "Confession of Faith." This one will likely deal with methods of work and discuss the pastoral question, and the proposed congress of all the religions in the world at the Exposition next year, which the Friends have been asked to join.

It will be very satisfactory to Friends to hear that in addition to "The Writings of the Apostle John, with notes, critical and expository," by J. Tindall Harris, there are several other volumes, covering the whole New Testament. Completed there would be seven volumes. Should they be printed it would be in "the hope that it might satisfy the yearning of many minds for a broader and deeper spirituality."

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A Wexford Methodist has promised to defray the cost of a colporteur for the Waterford district.

Mr. Thos. Burgess, of Kingstown, has offered £500 towards the erection of a Methodist new church in Carlow.

An Episcopal Church Congress, the first ever held in Ireland, to last two days, commenced in Armagh on Wednesday, Dr. Knox, Archbishop of Armagh, presiding.

Rev. Dr. H. B. Wilson, Senior Moderator of the General Assembly, has resigned the pastoral charge of First Cookstown Presbyterian Church, after being over forty years in the ministry.

The Presbyterian congregations of Poyntzpass and Scarva, County Down, have agreed to unite so as to form a charge for one minister only, and thus lighten the burden on the Sustentation Fund.

Rev. Jno. Macrely, senior minister of Clifton-street Presbyterian Church, passed away at Larne on Friday, aged 68 years. Deceased was an excellent man, a hard-working pastor, and always took an active interest in the temperance movement.

Rev. David Wilson, of Dungannon, has accepted a call to Oxenden Presbyterian Church, Haverstock Hill, London; and Rev. J. M. Witherow, son of the late Rev. Professor Witherow, D.D., of Derry, to Wallace-green, Berwick-on-Tweed, so long the scene of the late Principal Cairn's labours.

A meeting of the Belfast Methodist Council was held on Friday evening, when Rev. R. Cole read a paper on Mr. Moody's Present Visit to Belfast, in which he gave a sketch of Mr. Moody's life and work, pointed out the secrets of his success, and urged that all should take an active sympathetic interest in his meetings.

The widow of the late Rev. J. H. Fitzsimons, Presbyterian Missionary to China, is about to proceed to that country as a medical missionary, but in the meantime is visiting the Sabbath Schools of the Presbyterian Church throughout Ireland, with the view of bringing prominently before the children the work of God in China, and she has succeeded in getting several schools to undertake to support missions in that land.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Faversham, Mr. T. M. Attwater, aged 65, a valuable and devoted worker and preacher of the Gospel. At Pudsey, Leeds, on 23rd ult., Mr. Joseph Hare, aged 71, for thirty years an earnest Christian worker. At the Vicarage, Carisbrooke, Isle of Wight, on 22nd ult., Rev. E. B. James, aged 73, well known as an active clergyman and able writer. In Kashmir, Dr. Thomas, assistant to Dr. Neve, who "had been several years working in Srinagar; and his loss is a severe one. One of the missionaries writing about him says that he had quite overworked himself in attending to cholera patients, so that when attacked himself by cholera he quickly succumbed." At Castle Church, Stafford, aged 71, Rev. E. Allen, for forty years the faithful vicar. At Goosnargh Vicarage, Rev. C. O. Gordon, aged 49. At Farnborough, Banbury, on 21st ult., Rev. T. Prater, aged 80. At Tiverton, Mrs. W. C. Bennett, an earnest believer. At Riccall, Mrs. W. Dixon, an active and loving worker.

Christian Instruction Society.

Much has been done by this society since its establishment in 1825 to aid in the evangelization of London and its vicinity. Its agents work in the homes and haunts of the many who are not reached by ordinary means of grace. Last year a new department of labour was inaugurated, which consists in employing devoted Christian women, Deaconesses, nine of whom are now engaged in visitation from house to house, relieving distress, soothing sorrow, nursing the sick as women only can, and instructing in the way of salvation. The districts in which they are engaged are for the most part among the very poorest, such as Barking, Haggerston, Shadwell, Southwark, and Bermondsey. The society's evangelists have diligently and successfully devoted themselves to the furtherance of the Gospel in the homes of the people, besides preaching in chapels, mission halls, and the open air, and by personal dealing with those who hang about publichouses and street corners. Rev. W. H. Dickenson has conducted several missions in various churches, with assuring tokens of divine favour. In the homeless wards of St. Marylebone Union, a Sunday morning service is regularly held in connection with the society; and as there is a different audience at every service, the number of persons who there come under the sound of the Gospel is very considerable. The work is directed from the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, and Rev Arthur Wickson is secretary.

A STRANGE SERVICE.—Somewhat unusual and singularly impressive services were held lately in Homestead. About four hundred of the new non-union men were gathered in one of the ponderous mills protected by one hundred and fifty watchmen, a strong fence, and with a thousand soldiers in easy reach. A few occupied rough benches and the remainder stood around or were seated on huge steel beams. A string orchestra from Pittsburg took the place of an organ, and the services were conducted by the chaplain of the Sixteenth Regiment, Clarence A. Adams, who delivered a very stirring address

Police Convalescent Home, West Brighton.—Miss C. Gurney writes:—"May we heartily thank those of your readers who have contributed towards this much-needed home for the benefit of our sick and injured policemen? We still need £4,300 to complete the new building, and we are believing that the Lord will allow us to see it roofed in before the winter commences. Contributions may be sent to Miss May Griffin, 51, Clarendon-villas, West Brighton. Cheques should be crossed Union Bank, Brighton."

THE MISSION TO LEPERS.

This mission is rapidly developing, and the Lord is greatly blessing the work. The Society has recently begun operations in China at five points. Altogether the Mission is caring for lepers, in one way and another, at thirty-three different centres in India, Burmah, Ceylon, and China; and in connection with thirteen different missionary societies. It has eight asylums of its own. The committee is now asked to begin work in Japan.

Rev. J. A. Cullen, C.M.S., at the newly-opened asylum in Bhagulpore, writes very hopefully regarding the work there, and expects very soon to baptise six converts from amongst the lepers.

Rev. W. F. Johnson, of the American Presbyterian Mission at Allahabad, says (speaking of the Leper Asylum):—

"I have been summoned to bury members of the little Christian flock over there in very touching circumstances. The last man I buried, I had visited in his illness not long before. I went to comfort him and to sustain his faith, but there was no need. His poor body was withering away, but the spirit within him was strong, and he was ardent in his professions of trust in Jesus."

Rev. C. W. de Souza, Methodist Episcopal Mission, writes from Roorkee as follows:—

"The Christian lepers are all doing well, and are very happy and bright, thank God. . . . . One of the Christians died a few months ago, leaving a very bright testimony behind. He was a poor blind fellow too, besides being a leper, but his spiritual eyes were wide open to the light of God's truth."

Rev. H. Uffmann, of Gossner's Mission, Purulia, Chota Nagpore, who is in charge of the leper asylum at that station, sends us the joyful news that he has lately baptized forty of the inmates.

Miss Reed, of the Methodist Episcopal Mission, in charge of the asylum at Chandag, Pithoragash, writes of great blessing there. She says:—"There are now forty-seven persons in the asylum—we began the year with thirty-seven; there have been sixteen baptisms, only one person left now outside the fold, and he is a new man who came a few weeks ago; we are teaching him, and expect him too to come out into the light and liberty of the children of God. I wonder if brother M. has written to you of the series of meetings he assisted in holding at the asylum. God owned and blessed the work. We had some precious services; Mr. M. was amazed at the testimonies. Those dear people have been growing, and learning of the deep things of God. All praise to Him, whose we are and in whose service we find so much of blessedness." All communications should be addressed to Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, Secretary and Superintendent of the Mission, 17, Glengyle-terrace, Edinburgh.

British Bhutan.

The Church of Scotland Y.M. Foreign Mission Guild, instituted at Kirkcaldy Conference, 1888, has been going forward during 1891. The seat of operations under Rev. J. A. Graham, M.A., is Kalimpong, in British Bhutan, and is situated in the great Himalayan mountains, overlooking a large tract of land called the Dooars, thickly populated by numerous varying races, and in proximity to Thibet, Nepaul, and Bhutan, where there are no missionaries. The number of converts has reached 925, and this great gathering is taxing the resources of the mission. so that the council are considering how additional help may be given in the crisis. At Kalimpong, Normal School boys go out in pairs to conduct small Sunday schools within a radius of a few miles. At Sitong, men and women conduct classes. Two catechists who went on an evangelistic tour towards independent Bhutan, returned burdened with thought of the great world beyond, in which no one was witnessing for Christ; and this has resulted in the starting of work to be supported by the prayers and money of Christians within the Guild Mission district. The secretary is Mr. Geo. M'Alpine, 22, Queen-street, Edinburgh.

The Lord Was His Helper.

A merchant in New York had pledged to the Lord a certain portion of his business receipts as fast as they were collected. He called this the Lord's insurance money, "for," said he, "so long as I give, so long will the Lord help and bless me, and in some way will He give me the means to give. It is a blessing to my heart to keep it open in gratitude; a blessing to dispose of it to gladden other hearts, and the surest way to keep the Lord's favour with me."

The results of his experience were blessed indeed, as he said: "I never realised before how He helped me in all my business plans.

"Things happen daily which show me that some one who knows more than I is protecting me. Bad debts have been paid that I did not expect. Errand boys just getting into sly and bad habits have been discovered ere thefts had proceeded far. As I needed competent help in my business it has come just as it was wanted.

"When customers were about to fail somehow their debts to me were paid, although they failed to pay others.

"A severe fire came to my office and seemed to have swept all my valuables away. But it was stopped at just the right moment, and not one thing valuable was lost. The insurance companies paid me enough to replace every damage, and the office was renewed better than before. The Lord sends me business enough to pay my debts, while others are dull.

"I cannot tell why it is except that I always pray for my business, and ask the Lord to bless it for the good of others, and that the means which come from it may be used for his cause.

"When I stop giving, business stops coming. When I stop praying for it, perplexities arise. As long as I pray for it, all moves easily and I have no care or trouble.

"The Lord is my banker, my insurer, my deliverer, my patron, and my blessed guardian of things temporal as well as spiritual."—The Wonders of Prayer.

Tramcar and Omnibus Mission.

The Scripture Text Mission has for its principal object to bring the Word of God under the eyes of some among the many who never read the Bible and never enter a place of worship, and this is done by the display of texts in tramcars and omnibuses. But here is a little incident which shows another benefit from the mission's operations:—On a dull day, a wearied toiling child of God was making her way homeward through the muddy streets of north-east London; the day had been one of conflict and temptation to doubt. She stepped into a tramcar to get a lift towards her humble dwelling, thinking anxiously about her father who was lying at home very ill. As her eyes wandered round the car, she read, "Fear thou not; for I am with thee, be not dismayed, for I am thy God; I will strengthen thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." It was a message straight from God, and her despairing thoughts instantly vanished. The ninth year of the mission's existence has closed with some slight progress in the work; and eight additional texts have been placed, making in all 259, now to be seen in London cars. The Hon. Sec. is Mrs. E. S. Wood, 1, King Edward-street, E.C.

THE

WILL POSITIVELY CURE

THE MOST SEVERE FORMS OF THE FOLLOWING AILMENTS:—

COLDS.

Madame ADELINA PATTI writes from Craig-y-Nos Castle:—"Madame Patti has found the Carbolic Smoke Ball very beneficial indeed, and the only thing that would enable her to rest well at night, when having a severe cold."

CATARRH.

Rev. HENRY S. LUNN, M.D., writes from 5, Endsleigh-gardens, London, N.W., November 16th, 1891:—"I have much pleasure in testifying to the great value of your Carbolic Smoke Ball. It has been used in my household with the best results in cases of bad Catarrh."

ASTHMA.

Miss HUDDLESTON writes from Walmersley House, near Bury, Lancashire, 15th October, 1891:—"Miss Huddleston is finding the Carbolic Smoke Ball a great blessing for Asthma. She is very glad to say that it is doing her a great deal of good when hope had almost gone."

BRONCHITIS.

Dr. H. G. DARLING, M.D., Linden Cottage, Shepherd's Well, Kent, writes, 18th April, 1892:—"I had used the Carbolic Smoke Ball only a few times when it gave me immediate relief—although I am 83 years of age and have suffered more than one-third of that time from Bronchitis complicated with Asthma."

DEAFNESS.

Mrs. KINGSLEY writes from Woking Village, Surrey, May 10th, 1892:—"I have very great hopes of being able to hear quite well by the end of the month. My whole throat was in a dreadful state, and when we consider I have been deaf since 1884, I think the improvement in the two months since I commenced using the Carbolic Smoke Ball is wonderful."

One CARBOLIC SMOKE BALL will last a family several months, making it the cheapest remedy in the world at the price—10/- post free.

The CARBOLIC SMOKE BALL can be refilled, when empty, at a cost of 5/- post free. Address:—

Expository Volumes.

THE LIFE AND LIGHT OF MEN. 5th Thousand

EXPOSITIONS OF JOHN I.—XII. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from THE CONGREGATIONAL MAGAZINE:—

"These Expositions are delightful reading. To be at home with John is our earnest ambition, and we gratefully welcome any helps of mind and heart in this direction. Mr. Meyer in this work affords both light to the mind and stimulus to the heart. Whoever would understand the vital force and practical bearings of John's Gospel would do well to procure this series of studies."

"TRIED BY FIRE." 10th Thousand.

EXPOSITIONS OF THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PETER.

Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from THE BRITISH WEEKLY:—

"The popularity of Mr. Meyer's Expositions is a good sign of the times. This, on the First Epistle of Peter, is one of the best, and is full of tender Christian wisdom. There are many unobtrusive signs of thought and culture throughout; but the chief charm of the book is its earnest simplicity."

ABRAHAM: 13th Thousand.

OR, THE OBEDIENCE OF FAITH.

With Nine Original Illustrations.

Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from THE SUNDAY SCHOOL CHRONICLE:—

"Beautifully illustrated, and so tastefully bound as to be a most acceptable gift-book. But the contents are such that no Christian can rise from their perusal without feeling consciously strengthened of God, and inspired afresh for a godly life. Sunday-school teachers may learn from it how to draw out the spiritual lessons of the Sacred Word."

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from THE SWORD AND TROWEL:—

"Exceedingly good. Not only spiritual, as everything from our brother Mr. MEYER would be, but also thoughtful, fresh, suggestive, and thoroughly practical. Oh, that hundreds of our younger men gave signs of such real godliness, such true devotion, and such clear knowledge of the Gospel as we see in the author!"

JOSEPH: 8th Thousand.

BELOVED—HATED—EXALTED:

With Nine Original Illustrations.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from THE PREACHERS' MAGAZINE:—

"The great charm of this very beautiful monograph is its clear setting forth of the way in which the life of Joseph mirrors, to use the author's own phrase, the life of Jesus. This idea is not at all unduly pressed, but it runs through the volume, and adds immensely to its homiletic and devotional value."

ELIJAH: 20th Thousand.

AND THE SECRET OF HIS POWER.

With Nine Original Illustrations.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from CHRISTIAN PROGRESS:—

"Full of devout reflection, stimulating thought, and most helpful instruction—all tending to lead up to a holier and more consecrated walk with God. This, in every sense of the word, is a helpful book; and we must cordially recommend it to all who desire to go forward and higher in their Christian life."

Devotional Volumes.

THE SHEPHERD PSALM. 30th Thousand.

MEDITATIONS ON THE 23RD PSALM. Cloth Boards, 1s.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 1s. 6d.

A Review from The Irish Congregational Magazine:—"We have never read anything so charming on the twenty-third Psalm as this volume from the pen of Mr. MEYER. The devout reader will find it one of the most comforting, cheering, and inspiring books he can read."

CHRISTIAN LIVING. 27th Thousand.

Cloth Boards, 1s.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 1s. 6d.

A Review from Footsteps of Truth:—"A choice book of nine chapters, into which is condensed a mass of helpful instructions and wise practical counsel on various topics relating to the Christian life."

THE PRESENT TENSES OF THE BLESSED LIFE. 28th Thousand.

Cloth Boards, 1s.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 1s. 6d.

A Review from The Record:—"An excellent little book, full of practical Christianity; a pocket companion which will be valued by those whose dearest aim it is to walk daily more closely with God."

THE PSALMS: 8th Thousand.

NOTES AND READINGS. Crown 16mo size, for the pocket.

Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.

A Review from The Cambridgeshire Congregational Magazine:—"A pocket commentary on the entire book of Hebrew song. The treatment of each Psalm is brief, plain, and well planned. The divisions are usefully suggestive for public addresses, and the fillings in are the pith and marrow of Gospel truth. For private devotional use also it is a little treasure."

The same Volume, in Demy 8vo size, forms one of

WORKS ON ROMANISM.

"Popery can find no favour where 'Foxe's Martyrs' is studied."—Christian Progress.

MORGAN & SCOTT'S EDITION.

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS:

A COMPLETE AND AUTHENTIC ACCOUNT OF

THE LIVES, SUFFERINGS, and TRIUMPHANT DEATHS of EARLY CHRISTIAN and PROTESTANT MARTYRS in ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

WITH TWELVE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Complete in One Handsome Volume, cloth, bevelled boards, 10s. 6d.

Presentation Edition, cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 12s. 6d.

'We are glad to see our old friend John Foxe in this new and handsome form. Of all the editions that we have seen, this of Messrs. Morgan and Scott's is decidedly the best. The additions of the Editor's, bringing the history down to recent date help to show the unchanged nature of Romanism, and the need of watching its insidious incroachments. Rev. Ingram Cobbin's introductory essay on Popery is of a very vigorous and instructive character. The numerous engravings lend additional interest to the book, and its excellent 'get up' renders it an ornament worthy of any drawing-room"—Methodist Recorder.

"A new edition of this useful and standard work; and a most masterly exposure of what Romanism really is, and what it can do when it has the upper hand. The perusal of this book should form part of the education of our youth. Heads of families should purchase it for their children to read. Popery can find no favour where FOXE'S MARTYRS is studied."—Christian Progress.

THE CATACOMBS AT ROME:

Their Contents and Teachings.

A VINDICATION OF PURE AND PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY; AND AN EXPOSURE OF THE CORRUPTIONS OF ROMANISM; DERIVED FROM THE SEPULCHRAL REMAINS OF THE EARLY CHRISTIANS AT ROME.

By BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.A.S.,

Late Chamberlain of the City of London.

Fourth Edition. Revised and Improved.

With many Illustrations.

Tinted covers, 2s. Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"Mr. Scott's volume possesses great antiquarian and historical interest."—Word and Work

"Most people have heard of these famous Catacombs; but nowhere have we met with a more graphic or instructive account of their contents than in this book. The many wood engravings help to make the whole thing quite plain. We advise our young ministers, or more educated Sunday-school teachers, to study this volume."

THE VEIL LIFTED;

OR, THE ROMANCE AND REALITY OF CONVENT LIFE.

Tinted covers, 1s.; cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"A valuable little work. We wish we could place it in the hands of thousands and more, we wish we could induce that hapless multitude who are now given over to a blind infatuation of Romanism and Ritualism, under a gossed and gilded form, to 'read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest' what the author has here advanced upon this all-important subject."—The Gospel Magazine.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCE OF ROMAN CATHOLICISM:

WITH INCIDENTS OF CONVENT LIFE.

Tinted covers, 1s; cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

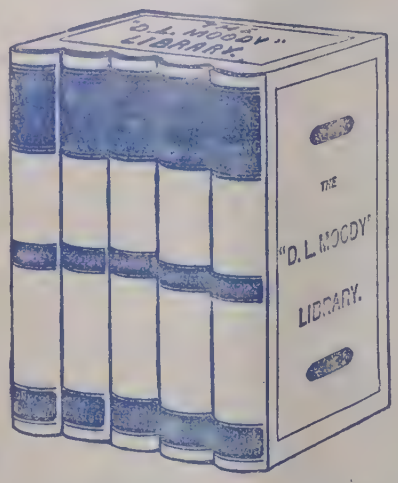
"Now, more than ever, ought books like this to be diligently circulated, for not only is Rome as busy with her wiles as heretofore; but in what was once a Protestant Church we have convents and the confessional too. As for the book of Miss Richardson, we can answer for the accuracy of many of its details."—Evangelical Christendom.

THE CONFESSIONAL:

A PERSONAL NARRATIVE.

Neatly Printed in Red and Black; suitable for enclosing in the modern square envelope.

1s. per Dozen; 7s. 6d. per 100.



"It was a dark page in my experience, when first I knelt at the feet of a mortal to confess what should have been poured into the ear of God alone. I cannot dwell upon this; but a brief time before it would have for ever put to rest my longings after Romanism. But the mantle of evening had already cast its shadowy folds around me, and they were fast enveloping me in darkness as of midnight."

WORKS BY REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

EXPOSITORY VOLUMES.

The Life and Light of Men. Expositions of John I.—XII. 5th Thousand. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from The Presbyterian, August 26th, 1892:—

"These 'Expositions' are not critical; they are practical. They do not deal with the 'text,' nor with 'readings,' nor with any of the difficult theological problems of the Fourth Gospel; but they are evidently designed to be suggestive, to be helpful, to ordinary everyday readers of the New Testament, and it is certain that in many instances this end will be attained. There is much to commend in the volume. The chapters (of which there are thirty) are of a very convenient length. The passages selected for comment are all of highest importance, and in the divisions or 'heads' of his expositions the author is often strikingly happy. For example, when speaking of 'The Blessed Results of doing the Will of God' (p. 120), he says:—(1) It feeds the spirit: (2) It clears the judgment; (3) It gives rest; (4) It is the key to certain knowledge; (5) It introduces to a large family ('He stretched forth his hand toward his disciples and said, Whosoever shall do the will,' &c.). Again, in referring to the words of Jesus (p. 146), he says:—'His words are gracious..... His words are authoritative..... His words make deepest truths current coin. .... His words are life..... They are the words of the Father.'"

After a candid critical survey of the whole volume, the reviewer sums up:—

"But, while we have said all this, we are free to confess that on the whole we like the book. A good healthful spirit pervades its entire teaching; and there is such a manifest sympathy with the life, and work, and words of Jesus, that we cannot but heartily wish it success."

Tried by Fire. Expositions of the First Epistle of Peter. 10th Thousand. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from The British Weekly:—

"The popularity of Mr. Meyer's Expositions is a good sign of the times. This, on the First Epistle of Peter, is one of the best, and is full of tender Christian wisdom. There are many unobtrusive signs of thought and culture throughout; but the chief charm of the book is its earnest simplicity."

SCRIPTURE BIOGRAPHIES.

Abraham; or, The Obedience of Faith. 13th Thousand. With nine Original Illustrations. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from The Sunday School Chronicle:—

"Beautifully illustrated, and so tastefully bound as to be a most acceptable gift-book. But the contents are such that no Christian can rise from their perusal without feeling consciously strengthened of God, and inspired afresh for a Godly life. Sunday-school teachers may learn from it how to draw out the spiritual lessons of the Sacred Word."

Elijah; and the Secret of his Power. 20th Thousand. With nine Original Illustrations. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from Christian Progress:—

"Full of devout reflection, stimulating thought, and most helpful instruction—all tending to lead up to a holier and more consecrated walk with God. This, in every sense of the word, is a helpful book; and we must cordially recommend it to all who desire to go forward and higher in their Christian life."

Israel: a Prince with God. 17th Thousand. With nine Original Illustrations. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from The Sword and Trowel:—

"Exceedingly good. Not only spiritual, as everything from our brother Mr. Meyer would be, but also thoughtful, fresh, suggestive, and thoroughly practical. Oh, that hundreds of our younger men gave signs of such real godliness, such true devotion, and such clear knowledge of the Gospel as we see in the author!"

Joseph: Beloved—Hated—Exalted. 8th Thousand. With nine Original Illustrations. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from The Preachers' Magazine:—

"The great charm of this very beautiful monograph is its clear setting forth of the way in which the life of Joseph mirrors, to use the author's own phrase, the life of Jesus. This idea is not at all unduly pressed, but it runs through the volume, and adds immensely to its homiletic and devotional value."

DEVOTIONAL VOLUMES.

The Shepherd Psalm. Meditations on the 23rd Psalm. 30th Thousand. Cloth, 1s. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

A Review from The Irish Congregational Magazine:—

"We have never read anything so charming on the twenty-third Psalm as this volume from the pen of Mr. Meyer. The devout reader will find it one of the most comforting, cheering, and inspiring books he can read."

Christian Living. Practical Counsels concerning the Christian Life. 27th Thousand. Cloth, 1s. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s 6d.

A Review from Footsteps of Truth:—

"A choice book of nine chapters, into which is condensed a mass of helpful instructions and wise practical counsel on various topics relating to the Christian life."

The Present Tenses of the BLESSED LIFE. 28th Thousand. Cloth, 1s. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

A Review from The Record:—

"An excellent little book, full of practical Christianity; a pocket companion which will be valued by those whose dearest aim it is to walk daily more closely with God."

The Psalms. Notes and Readings. Pocket Edition. 8th Thousand. Cloth, 1s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

This volume is also published in demy 8vo size, as one of

"THE CHRISTIAN BIBLE READINGS"

Series of Expositions.

Tinted covers, 1s.; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth bev. boards, gilt, 2s. 6d.

A Review from The Cambridgeshire Congregational Magazine:—

"A pocket commentary on the entire book of Hebrew song. The treatment of each Psalm is brief, plain, and well planned. The divisions are usefully suggestive for public addresses, and the fillings in are the pith and marrow of Gospel truth. For private devotional use also it is a little treasure."

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., and Other Contributors.

THE CHRISTIAN BIBLE READINGS.

Notes and Readings on the Five Books of Moses: Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d. Presentation Editions: Cloth boards, 2s.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

A Review from The General Baptist Magazine:—

"For Sunday school teachers who have little time and less money, nothing could be more welcome. A commentary of this sort is within the reach of every teacher."

A Review from The Primitive Methodist:—

"Combines the instructive with the practical, and while unpretentious in form, contains a great amount of information, compressed into exceedingly small bulk. We can cordially recommend this work to preachers and teachers, and all who desire intelligently and profitably to study the Word of Life."

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Mr. Juji Tshii, a very remarkable Japanese Christian, the "George Müller" of Japan.

If Job never lived and suffered, if only some poetic brain conceived the story, magnificent as it is, would it ever have taken hold of men's hearts as it has done? Has any mere poem ever had such life and influence? If no battle had been fought at Marathon or at Waterloo, would these names have the significance they now posses? Would Homer's name be the power that it is if he had only dreamed the Iliad and the Odyssey?

If no great fish ever swallowed Jonah, how is the survival of the foolish and extravagant fiction to be accounted for? The mythologies of all nations have lived because they had actual facts for their foundation; because their gods were deified heroes, "mighty men which were of old, men of renown," not mere ideals of gigantic power. If the story of Jonah were not a fact, but only an imagination of the mind, then the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus are imaginary also; for He said: "As Jonah was three days and three nights in the fish's belly, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." "And if Christ be not risen, ye are yet in your sins."

In describing Mr. Moody's work in Ireland, our special correspondent calls attention to the "after-meetings," which are so fruitful in results, and he expresses wonder that such meetings are not more often held in connection with stated church services. We know of churches which have, to some extent, adopted the plan, and we believe it has always proved successful. We should be glad to hear from pastors of churches who have had personal experience of after-meetings in connection (not with special missions, but) with their regular Lord's-day or week-day services. We are sure that nothing will so much help to promote the adoption of this additional "means of grace," as the demonstration by personal testimony of its practical usefulness.

Expressions of satisfaction are heard on all sides at the prospect of Mr. Moody's coming to London, and various suggestions for work have been made, some of which, it is evident, cannot be carried out. One, however, that seems feasible, and at the same time desirable, is to have a meeting at some central place in London of all those who were brought to the Lord during the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in 1883-4. Such a gathering, whilst in itself helpful and stimulative, would also be a strong argument against those who question the permanence of results. We commend the suggestion to Mr. Moody's London committee.

We hear, by the way, that owing to the vacation season, when many are scattered widely, some little difficulty has been experienced in convening a meeting of the members of the London committee. A good many, however, will probably be returning to town next week, when the work should be taken up in thorough earnest, if the London mission is to be successfully organised.

The Bishop of Liverpool has again and again been attacked by the High Church party for attending, while in Scotland, a Presbyterian church, and thus openly disavowing the teaching of those who would unchurch all outside of Episcopacy. What, however, must be the consternation of such extremists to find the Archbishop guilty of a like offence? The Daily Telegraph says:—

> While on a visit to the Earl of Aberdeen at Haddo House, the Archbishop of Canterbury is said to have shocked his High Church friends by attending morning service in the parish kirk. Other bishops, before and since Wilberforce, have been fiercely assailed for thus bowing the knee in the House of Rimmon.

The concluding words have given pain to one of our correspondents. We certainly are no apologists for the Daily Telegraph, but we do not think that any sneer at a Presbyterian church as "the House of Rimmon" is intended. A fair reading of the phrase seems to be that the paragraphist is merely noting the view taken by the High Church objectors referred to.

A fruitful theme for serious reflection is found in the fact that 35,000,000 of people die every year, and that only comparatively few of that large number die from old age. How necessary, therefore, is the prayer that we may be taught to number our days and to apply our hearts to the only true wisdom, and to the knowledge which is life eternal.

It is stated in the Italian Press that the designs for a golden throne have been submitted to the Pope, with an estimate for £40,000. What a comment is this upon the declaration of our Divine Lord that his kingdom is not of this world, and what an illustration it affords of the tendency of Rome to magnify its outward assumptions of power.

So much prominence has been given to the utterances of the preacher upon the occasion of the Pallium being conferred upon the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Westminster, that it is desirable that attention should be called to the fallacy of most of the statements made in regard to the historical continuity of that which has been termed "The Italian Mission" in Great Britain. It is worth while to remember in connection with Reformation studies, that the Roman Pontiffs have invented fourteen new "Articles of Faith" since the Reformation took place in England, so that the great gulf which separated Protestantism from Romanism centuries ago, has only been deepened and widened in the intervening period.

Rev. D. L. Leonard, of Oberlin (U.S.A.), gives the following sadly suggestive figures as an incentive to more earnest effort in spreading the Gospel among the heathen:—

> Thibet has 6,000,000 inhabitants; Manchuria, 12,000,000; Nepaul, 2,000,000; Hunan, 16,000,000; and Kwangsi, 5,000,000, without a single missionary station. One district in North-west India has 6,000,000, and only three European missionaries. The state of Bhope has 10,000,000 and only two missionaries.

It is important, another adds, to remember that "Of the world's inhabitants, 1,440,000,000 have not accepted Jesus Christ."

In the intensity of the interest which is so persistently and properly devoted to the East-end of London, with its solemn and vital social and religious problems, we are, perhaps, too prone to overlook the grave condition of things in other great centres of population. Yet the state of large sections of the people in only too many of these is a scandal to an age which is apt to boast of its progress, and which, unfortunately, has even shown signs, in some quarters at least, of a tendency to look to science for those results which the inspired Book tells us plainly can only come from righteousness. Anyone who wishes to have some knowledge of what life in its lower depths is in Glasgow may find full details in a paper in the last issue of the Scottish Review. We are certain that no thoughtful reader will be able to rise from its perusal without a feeling of shame that such things should be possible in our midst to-day. That a high death rate necessarily follows upon an exceptionally high percentage of the "one room" abomination—nearly 25 per cent. of the entire population being compelled to live in that way, goes without saying, but who shall measure the amount of moral and spiritual death which results?

Parker-street, Drury Lane, is a dismal and degraded locality, narrow, dirty, and repulsive, largely occupied by the poorest and the lowest. A great clearance has been made in it, and the London County Council is erecting a common lodging house at the cost of £16,000. It is to shelter 324 men, and afford every possible comfort. Small the bedrooms certainly will be, but each man is to have his own. Under a municipal roof the work of Christian lodging-house visitors ought to be carried on with less discomfort and more freedom.

A communication to The Times (of August 31), from the secretary of the Anti-Slavery Society, enclosing a letter from Morocco, confirms the description of the sad state of things in that country which was noticed in these columns a fortnight ago. It is there stated that during the last few weeks an Arab caravan has brought four thousand slaves from Timbuctoo. During the journey the guide lost his way, and between five and six hundred slaves died of thirst. The perishing of a few hundred human beings was, however, in the estimation of the callous Arab traders, a mere trifling incident of the journey. It is to be noted that most of the slaves sold in Morocco are purchased from Soudanese Arabs; this lends additional urgency and importance to the work of suppressing the trade in Central Africa. The only effectual method of dealing with a poisoned stream is to cleanse its source. The objects of the Anti-Slavery Society have, it is stated, been explained to the Governor of Morocco city, who is now in this country, and he has promised to lay the facts before the Sultan. But we fear that the prospect of redress from this quarter is not very bright.

To-day the crying needs of children are reaching the ear of law-makers as they never did before. The act passed by the New York legislature comes into force this month, under which children accused of any offence will be both tried and punished without mixing with adult criminals. Magistrates are to try them separately, and commit them to an institution apart from the common gaol. The results of this healthy action ought to be eagerly watched for the sake of English juvenile criminals.

The following passage from a paper in Good Words for September on "Socialism and Social Organisation," by Professor Flint, indicates in a few words the defect which underlies many if not most of the modern schemes propounded for the removal of abuses or the improvement of society:—

The true organisation of society . . . . must be originated and carried on chiefly from within, not from without. It must be to a far greater extent the combined and collective work of the moral personalities who compose a nation, than of the officials who compose its Government. . . . . The healing of society to be effective must proceed, on the whole, from the centre outwards. Socialism has never seen this clearly or acknowledged it fully. It leads men to expect extravagant results from merely repairing or reconstructing the outward mechanism of society.

True: the real root of the evil among us is—as our Saviour taught—to be found in the heart and motives of the individual man, not in his outward circumstances or surroundings, and no reform will be effectual which ignores this cardinal principle.

It is much to be regretted that Professor Huxley has not diverted the powers of a keen intellect into worthier channels than in his latest "Essays upon some Controverted Questions," in which he applies the scientific method to the examination of Biblical statements. But while protesting against the Bible being brought down to the level of some Pagan classic, and while unable to share the equanimity with which he regards the expected fulfilment of his own prophecy, that much of what is now supposed to be a vital part of religion cannot survive the teachings of science, we can at least echo his regret that real intimate knowledge of the Bible should in the present day be so rare. Certainly there is abundance of ability and appetite for reading, but the quality of the food provided and taken, too often leaves very much to be desired. Bible-reading has not kept pace with the spread of education, nor has the fruit of the seed sown in 1870 proved altogether good and fair. How comparatively few there are among the present generation who really know their Bibles! Yet he is the best instructed man who has been nourished on this Book, and he who has by regular study made its truths his own will prove the best equipped for grappling with the difficulties of life. Where, for instance, will the man of business find a better guide than the Book of Proverbs?

General Booth's instructions to his soldiers, in view of a visitation of cholera, are such that the whole Christian Church would do well to lay to heart. After giving orders regarding food, etc., he says:—

As far as possible keep a restful mind, and a conscience void of offence to God and man. Be ready at all hours of the day and night, as you have opportunity, to minister to the sick and dying. Prove yourselves to be that which you profess to be—the servants of Jesus Christ and of all men.

The devotion and self-sacrifice of the early Christians during pestilence and death attracted the attention of the Pagan world. The same Christ-like qualities manifested during a scourge of cholera would challenge the respect even of the nineteenth century.

Surely it must be utter want of thought that permits men to continue the destruction of gulls and other sea-birds off the Yorkshire coast. A visitor, drawing attention in the Daily News to their rapid extinction, points out one cruel feature which well might be spared:—

If one goes out in a boat he is tolerably sure of seeing winged and maimed living birds left floating on the water slowly and miserably to perish.

How tenderly our Lord spoke of our feathered friends, but to-day their beauty dooms them to death at the hands of ruthless men.

In an article in the current number of The Leisure Hour, describing the London evening papers, it is stated that the abolition of the "Sporting Tipster," in connection with The Echo, has caused a fall of only two thousand in the circulation of that paper, which is to be congratulated upon its courage. If only other papers throughout the country would follow the example, a heavy blow would be struck at the gambling mania which prevails among all classes, from the miner to the marquis, which ruins so many promising careers, and makes so many distracted wives and famished children. And even where the habit does not lead to such disastrous results, yet it produces a general deterioration of character and a callous disregard for the feelings or interests of others. In the absence of an enactment making it a penal offence to publish "the odds" in the public papers, at least the ordinary daily newspapers might leave the racing and betting intelligence to those publications which devote themselves entirely to the interests of "the turf." Even the "leading journal" frequently devotes a column or more to racing, while the report of some important religious or philanthropic meeting is squeezed into thirty lines of small print. Here and there are honourable exceptions to a bad rule. The Leeds Mercury, for instance, sets an admirable example in excluding betting intelligence from its pages.

The August issue of Mr. Joseph Cook's magazine, Our Day, opens with an article by Rev. Dr. Happer, entitled "Ravages of the British Opium Trade in Asia." If the title conveys rebuke the article itself affords abundant reason for national humiliation on the part of Great Britain. Our readers do not require to be told of the deplorable extension of the vice, which is no longer limited to China, but commits its ravages among six hundred millions of the human family.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Let us, Lord, approach thy table,
Where thy feast of love is spread;
Seeing, 'neath the sacred emblems,
More than wine and more than bread.

Memories of thy cross and passion,
Wrestlings in Gethsemane,
Mockings in the hall of Pilate,
Shame and pain of Calvary.

These, as we, dear Lord, "remember,"
Be all sin by us abhorred
More than ever; and still stronger
Grow our love to Thee, our Lord.

The one sacrificial offering
Art Thou, Lamb of God Divine;
Now we take, with true thanksgiving,
Thee, with this thy bread and wine.

Thus for duty newly strengthened
By thy grace again outpoured;
Rise we; satisfied with favour,
Fill'd with blessing of the Lord.

TWENTY YEARS AGO Dr. Mackay, missionary of the Canadian Presbyterian Church, began to labour in North Formosa. The result is in that part of the island at this day 2605 baptized Christians fifty native preachers, two ordained pastors, and many other workers.

FROM ROMANISM TO CHRIST.—In reference to the article bearing this title which appeared in our issue for August 25, we visited the Brompton Oratory at the request of the Father Superior, and having examined the registers in which are recorded the names of all persons admitted to the institution as candidates, we have satisfied ourselves that the name of Clement Maitland does not appear therein. We regret exceedingly having given publicity to statements which prove to be erroneous. Concerning other points in Mr. Maitland's narrative, we await further information from missionaries at Jerusalem.

The Apostolic Speeches.

Acts xiii. 16—49.

The initiatory idea traceable throughout another of these discourses is, again, the Divine action. "God" had acted, "God" has provided, "God" is saving. A simple truth; but how important for its own sake, and also as a model for teaching religion in God's way.

The Bible puts God first and man afterwards. It is very possible to reverse this order.

(a) God chose Israel's fathers. He brought up their descendants when in Egypt; with a high arm, He led them out of it, and for forty years He supported them. He destroyed the Canaanites. He gave their land for an inheritance. He gave judges. They asked for a king, and God gave them Saul. He removed him. He raised up David. And now of David's seed, according to his promise,

(b) God had brought unto Israel a Saviour, Jesus. To them, and also to all who fear God, the word of salvation is sent. The Jews at Jerusalem and their rulers, not perceiving that Jesus was the one to whom their prophecies referred, and, indeed, not understanding the prophecies which they read every Sabbath, unconsciously fulfilled them in wickedly condemning Him and procuring his crucifixion. But

(c) God raised Jesus from the dead, and He was seen of many witnesses. In the risen Saviour, David's seed, David's Lord, God's Holy One, God's Son now begotten in resurrection—all the holy mercies, sure in promise, are established for ever.

(d) God's word—His message of Salvation is then unfolded:—(1) Through this man; (2) remission of sins is proclaimed; (3) and in Jesus everyone that believeth is released from all charge of guilt.

(e) Thus far as to God's action. The sequel to this discourse will furnish topics for earnest exhortation: it is intensely solemn, and calculated to awaken the careless, and to encourage those who are striving to walk in the narrow way that leads to eternal life. (1) Beware of despising if God is working. (2) To reject God's message concerning Salvation is to judge ourselves unworthy of what He offers. (3) Let those who have been brought under concern continue in the Grace of God. (4) Christ is set for a light to all mankind that He should be for salvation unto the uttermost part of the earth. (5) Oh, for the inward disposition to value the blessings of eternal life! Those who possess this disposition will gladly believe and glorify the Word of the Lord. (6) But some were envious, some blasphemed, some rejected; some, even devout persons and honourable and chief, were stirred up to take the wrong side, and the preachers were persecuted and expelled. (7) Nevertheless the good work went forward, and disciples were filled with joy and with the Holy Spirit.

(f) The reader and the writer are in one at least of the above conditions of spirit. Which is it?

BELOVED—HATED—EXALTED:

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF JOSEPH.*

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

THE STEPS OF THE THRONE.

(Genesis xli.)

The heights by great men reached and kept
Were not obtained by sudden flight;
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night.

Standing on what too long we bore,
With shoulders bent and downcast eyes,
We may discern—unseen before—
A path to higher destinies!

Longfellow.

The facts of Joseph's exaltation from the prison-cell in which we left him, to the steps of Pharaoh's throne, are so well known that we need not describe them in detail. We will dwell briefly on the more salient points.

I. Hope Deferred.—"Remember me when it shall be well with thee." It was a modest and pathetic prayer that Joseph made to the great officer of state, to whose dream he had given so favourable an interpretation. Some, however, have said he had no right to make it. They have said that he had no right to ask this man to plead with Pharaoh, when he himself had access to the King of kings, and could at all times plead his case at his court. The Moslem thought embodies itself in a characteristic legend. It says that God had changed his cell into a pleasant and cheerful place by causing a fountain to spring up in the midst, and a tree to grow at the door with shadowing branches and luscious fruit: but that, when he made this request to the chief butler, the fountain fell down and the tree withered; and this because, instead of trusting in God, he had relied on the help of a feeble man.

Well, there may be some truth at the foundation of all this; and yet it ill becomes us to bear hardly on the captive in the hour of his soul's deepest anguish. The strongest faith has wavered at times. Elijah sank down on the desert sand, and asked that he might die. John the Baptist, daunted and despondent, sent from his gloomy cell in Herod's castle to know if Jesus were indeed the Christ. Savonarola, Luther, Edward Irving, passed through darkness so thick that it almost put out the torch of their heroic faith; and if at this moment Joseph eagerly snatched at human help, as being nearer and more real than the help of God, who of us can condemn him? who of us can help sympathising with him? who of us might not have behaved in like manner? Many a time when we have professed that our soul waited only upon God, we have either eagerly hinted at or openly shown our needs to those whom we thought likely to assist.

This cry, "Remember me," reminds us of the prayer of the dying thief to our Lord, as he was entering into the thick darkness. But how different the reply! The promise was quickly made and swiftly kept. And as the sun was setting over the western hills, the believing penitent had entered the city which is never bathed in sunset glory, and had learnt what it was to be in Paradise with Christ. Far otherwise it was with Joseph.

The great man no doubt readily acceded to his request, and promised all he asked. "Remember you," he said; "of course I will." And, doubtless, in the fulness of his heart, he resolved to give Joseph a place among the under-butlers, or perhaps in the vineries. And as he passed out, we can imagine him saying, "Good-bye: you will hear from me soon." But he "forgat." Oh, that word "forgat"! How many of us know what it means! Day after day, as Joseph went about his duties, he expected to receive some token of his friend's remembrance and intercession. Week after week he watched for the message of deliverance, and often started because of some sudden knock which made him think that the warrant for his release had come. Then he invented ingenious excuses for the delay. No doubt the butler had had to receive the congratulations of his friends; arrears of business had perhaps accumulated in his absence, and now engrossed his attention; many things had probably gone wrong which required time and pains to set right; or perhaps he was waiting for a good opportunity to urge the claims of his prison-friend on the king. How many hours of anxious thought were spent thus, hoping against hope, combating a sickly fear, which he hardly dared to entertain! But at last it was useless to hide from himself the unpalatable truth, which slowly forced itself upon his mind, that he was forgotten.

Hope deferred must have made his heart sick. But he kept steadfast. If he was disappointed in man, he clung the more tenaciously to God. "My soul," said he, in effect, "wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from Him. He only is my rock and my salvation." Nor did he trust in vain; for, by a chain of wonderful providences, God brought him out of prison, and did better for him than could have been done by the chief butler of Pharoah's court.

It may be that some who read these lines are in perplexity or distress which may be compared to that of Joseph when in the dungeon. And they have again and again schemed to effect their own deliverance. They helped a friend to emigrate, on the understanding that, if he got on well, he should send money to help them over too. They have applied to people who were befriended by them when they lived in the same poor street, but who have subsequently risen greatly in the world. They have got certain manufacturers and men of influence to make a note of their name and address in their pocket-book. But nothing has come of it all. They were at first very hopeful. They thought each post would bring the expected letter. There was a woman in America who went every morning for ten years to the village postmaster to ask for a letter from her son, which he had promised to send, but which had never come. But the embers have grown colder and colder still. Hope has flickered out. It is sad enough to be disappointed; but is when we are forgotten.

II. Three Brief Pieces of Advice to those in Similar Circumstances.

1. Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils! We cannot live without human sympathy and friendship. We long for the touch of the human hand and the sound of the human voice. We eagerly catch at any encouragement which some frail man holds out, as a drowning man catches at twigs floating by on the stream. But men fail us; even the best prove to be less able or less willing than we thought: the stream turns out to be a very turbid one when we reach it, in spite of all reports of its sufficiency. "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord: for he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, a salt land and not inhabited."

2. Turn from the failure and forgetfulness of man to the constancy and faithfulness of God? "He abideth faithful." He cannot promise and fail to perform. He says Himself: "Thou shalt not be forgotten by Me." A woman may forget her sucking child, and be unmindful of the son of her womb, "yet will I not forget thee." He may leave you long without succour. He may allow you to toil against a tempestuous sea until the fourth watch of the night. He may seem silent and austere, tarrying two days still in the same place, as if careless of the dying Lazarus. He may allow your prayers to accumulate like unopened letters on the table of an absent friend. But at last he will say, "O man, O woman, great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as thou wilt."

3. Wait for God! We are too feverish, too hasty, too impatient. It is a great mistake. Everything comes only to those who can wait. "They that wait on the Lord shall inherit the earth." You may have had what Joseph had when still a lad—a vision of power and usefulness and blessedness. But you cannot realise it in fact. All your plans miscarry. Every door seems shut. The years are passing over you with the depressing sense that you have not wrought any deliverance in the earth, Now turn your heart to God; accept his will; tell Him that you leave to him the realisation of your dream. "Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and He shall exalt thee to inherit the land: when the wicked are cut off thou shalt see it." He may keep you waiting a little longer; but you shall find Him verify the words of one who knew by experience his trustworthiness: "The salvation of the righteous is of the Lord; He is their strength in the time of trouble. And the Lord shall help them, and deliver them; He shall deliver them from the wicked and save them, because they trust in Him."

III. The Links in the Chain of Divine Providence.—First, the wife of Potiphar makes a baseless charge, which leads to Joseph's imprisonment; then, the young prisoner ingratiates himself with the keeper of the prison, and is allowed to have free access to the prisoners; then it happens at the very time that two state officials are thrown into gaol on suspicion of attempting to poison their royal master; then the verification of Joseph's interpretation of their dreams shows that he is possessed of no common power; then that department of memory in which Joseph's face and case are hidden becomes sealed, lest anything premature should be attempted on his behalf; then, after two full years, the king of Egypt dreams. To the casual observer there might seem a great deal of chance fn all this; but the historian, directed by the Holy Spirit, lifts the veil, and shows that God was working out, step by step, His own infinite plans.

The dream was twice repeated, so similarly as to make it evident to the dullest mind that something was intended of unusual importance. The scene in each case was the river bank; first the green margin of grass, next the rich alluvial soil. To say the least, it was a bad omen to see the lean kine devour the fat, and the withered ears devour the full; nor can we wonder that the monarch of a people who attached special importance to omens and portents should send in hot haste for the army of priests who were always in close attendance upon him; and who on this occasion were reinforced by all the wise men, adepts in this branch of science. But there was none that could interpret the dream of Pharaoh. "God made foolish the wisdom of this world."

Then, amid the panic of the palace, the butler suddenly remembered his prison experiences, and told the king of the young captive Hebrew. Pharaoh eagerly caught at the suggestion; he sent and called Joseph; and they brought him hastily out of the dungeon—the margin says, "they made him run." Still the king's impetuous speed was compelled to wait till he had shaved himself and changed his prison garb. Perfect cleanliness and propriety of dress were so important in the eyes of Egyptians that the most urgent matters were postponed until they were properly attended to. Alas, that men should be so careful of their appearance before one another, and so careless of their appearance before God! Many a man who would not think of entering a drawing-room if his linen were not snowy white is quite content to carry within his breast a heart as black as ink.

It is beautiful to notice Joseph's reverent references to God in his first interview with Pharaoh. "It is not in me: God shall give Pharaoh an answer of peace." "God hath showed Pharaoh what He is about to do." "The thing is established by God; and God will shortly bring it to pass." The hypocrite is quick enough to interlard his conversation with the name of God: no doubt this is owing to his belief that a true child of God will often do so; and there is some truth in the belief. When the heart is full of God, the tongue will be almost obliged to speak to Him; and all such references will be easy and natural as flowers in May. Oh that our inner life were more full of the power and love and presence of Jesus! If our hearts were inditing a good matter they would boil over, and we should speak more frequently of the things that touch our King. Joseph was not ashamed to speak of his God amid the throng of idolaters in the court of Egypt: let us not flinch from bearing our humble witness in the teeth of violent opposition and supercilious scorn.

The position of recognising Jehovah being assumed and granted, there was no difficulty in interpreting the consumption of the seven good kine by the seven lean kine, and of the seven full ears by the seven empty ears, blasted by the east wind; or of indicating that the seven years of great plenty should be followed by seven years of famine, so sore that all the plenty should be forgotten in the land of Egypt, and that plenty should consume the land.

Now that the interpretation is before us, it seems wonderful, not that Joseph gave it, but that the wise men of Pharaoh's court failed to discover it. But perhaps God ordered it that the diviners should be rendered stupid and "mad," so that an opportunity should be made for the advancement, to which, from his childhood, Joseph had been destined. In this, as so often befals, there was an illustration of the Divine words, "Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes: even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight."

Then, in the presence of the thronged and breathless court, surrounded by the evil eyes of the magicians, who could ill afford to surrender their prestige and place, or the rich emoluments of their office, the young Hebrew interpreted the royal dream. That dream was framed in a thoroughly Egyptian setting, and was connected with the Nile, whose waters were regarded by the natives with an enthusiastic regard, whether for their peculiarly luscious, refreshing, and nutritive qualities, or for the annual inundation which bore far afield the rich, fertilising soil. Indeed, for these and similar considerations the river was the object of idolatrous worship. The buffalo, a species of ox, well known anciently in Egypt, delights to stand in the water in hot countries, remaining for hours in that cooling bath, with all the body, except the head, immersed. The sight of horned cattle coming up out of a river would, therefore, not be a rare occurrence; and Joseph had no difficulty in carrying his audience with him, when he said that these seven kine—as also the seven ears of corn on one stalk, after the nature of that species of bearded wheat still known as Egyptian wheat—were emblems of seven years of great plenty throughout all the land of Egypt.

But perhaps the thing which gave Joseph most influence in that court was not his interpretation, but the wise and statesmanlike policy on which he insisted. As he detailed his successive recommendations; the appointment of a man discreet and wise with this exclusive business as his life-work; of the creation of a new department of public business for the purpose of gathering up the resources of Egypt in anticipation of the coming need; of the vast system of storage in the cities of the land—it was evident that he was speaking beneath the glow of a spirit not his own; and with a power which commanded the instant assent of the monarch and his chief advisers. "The thing was good in the eyes of Pharaoh, and in the eyes of all his servants. And Pharaoh said unto his servants, Can we find such an one as this is, a man in whom the Spirit of God is?" Oh, that we might carry with us, even into business relationships, the evident stamp of the Spirit of God! It were worth languishing, even in a dungeon, if only we might have time to seek it. But it is to be had on easier terms: "Ask and have; seek and find; open your heart and receive."

There is an interesting illustration given to us here of the words, "Them that honour me, I will honour." When Joseph had interpreted the dream and given his advice—little thinking as he did so that he was sketching his own future—Pharaoh said unto his servants, "Can we find such an one as this is, a man in whom is the Spirit of God?" Then he turned to Joseph and said, "Forasmuch as God hath showed thee this, there is none so discreet and wise as thou art: thou shalt be over my house, and according to thy word shall all my people be ruled: only in the throne will I be greater than thou. See, I have set thee over the whole land of Egypt."

It was a wonderful ascent, sheer in a single bound from the dungeon to the steps of the throne. His father had rebuked him; now Pharaoh, the greatest monarch of his time, welcomes him. His brethren despised him; now the proudest priesthood of the world opens its ranks to receive him by marriage into their midst, considering it wiser to conciliate a man who was from that moment to be the greatest force in Egyptian politics and life. The hands that were hard with the toils of a slave are adorned with a signet ring. The feet are no longer tormented by fetters; a chain of gold is linked around his neck. The coat of many colours torn from him by violence and defiled by blood, and the garment left in the hand of the adulteress, are exchanged for vestures of fine linen drawn from the royal wardrobe. He was once trampled upon as the offscouring of all things; now all Egypt is commanded to bow before him, as he rides forth in the second chariot, prime minister of Egypt, and second only to the king. What a comment is this on that rapturous outburst, on the model of which the Virgin Mother composed her happy ode!

> The Lord killeth, and maketh alive;
> He bringeth down to the grave,
> And bringeth up.
> The Lord maketh poor, and maketh rich;
> He bringeth low, and lifteth up.
> He raiseth up the poor out of the dust,
> And lifteth up the beggar
> From the dunghill,
> To set them among princes,
> And to make them inherit
> The throne of glory.

All this happened because one day, for the sake of God, Joseph resisted a temptation to one act of sin. If he had yielded, we should probably never have heard of him again; he would have been slain by the siren who has slain so many more strong men, and would have gone down to the dark chambers of death. No happy marriage, no wife, no child would have fallen to his lot. No honour or usefulness, or vision of the dear faces of his kin, would ever have enriched his life with their abundant blessing. What a good thing it was that he did not yield!

Let us stand firm; let us seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness; let us deny ourselves immediate pleasure for the sake of the far-off harvest of content; let us honour God by obedience to his least command; let us dare to say No; let us be willing to decrease. And then the tide will turn: God will not be unfaithful to forget; He will turn again and have mercy upon us, and will exalt us to inherit the earth.

And when that day comes let us ascribe all to God. I admire the names which Joseph gave to his sons. They show the temper of his heart when in the zenith of his prosperity. Manasseh means "forgetting"—God had made him forget his toils. Ephraim means "fruitfulness"—God had caused him to be fruitful. Be true! you shall forget your sorrow and long waiting; you shall be fruitful. Then be sure and give God the praise.

IV. The Parallel between Joseph and the Lord Jesus.—It is surely more than a coincidence. "Coming events cast their shadows before." The Holy Spirit, enamoured with the mystery of love which was coming, anticipated its most striking features in the life of Joseph. Joseph was rejected by his brethren; Jesus by the Jews, his brethren according to the flesh. Joseph was sold for twenty pieces of silver to the Ishmaelites; Jesus was sold by the treachery of Judas for thirty pieces, and then handed over to the Gentiles. Joseph was cast into prison, Jesus abode in the grave. Joseph in prison was able to preach the gospel of deliverance to the butler; Jesus went and preached the gospel to the spirits in the prison. The two malefactors of the cross find their counterpart in Joseph's two fellow-prisoners. Joseph, though a Jew by birth and rejected by his own brethren, nevertheless was raised to supreme power in a Gentile state, and saved myriads of them from death; Jesus, of Jewish birth and yet disowned by Jews, has nevertheless been exalted to the supreme seat of power, and is now enthroned in the hearts of myriads of Gentiles, to whom he has brought salvation from death and spiritual bread for their hunger. The very name that Pharaoh gave to Joseph meant "Saviour of the world"—our Saviour's title. Yes, and we must carry the parallel still further. After Joseph had been for some time ruling and blessing Egypt, his very brethren came to him for forgiveness and help; so in days not far away we shall see the Jews retracing their steps and exclaiming—as thousands are now doing in Eastern Russia—"Jesus is our Brother." So all Israel shall be saved!

We have now, therefore, to think of Jesus as seated on his throne, Prime Minister of the Universe, the interpreter of his Father's will, the Organ and Executor of the Divine decrees. On his head are many crowns; on his finger is the ring of sovereignty; on his loins the girdle of power. Glistening robes of light envelop him. And this is the cry which precedes him, "Bow the knee!" Have you ever bowed the knee at his feet? It is of no avail to oppose Him. The tongue of malice and envy may traduce Him, and refuse to let Him reign. But nothing can upset the Father's decree and plan. "Yet have I set my Son upon my holy hill." "In his name every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall confess that He is Lord." Agree with Him quickly. Ground your arms at his feet. "Kiss the Son, lest He been angry."

V. The World's Need for Christ.—You remember Pharaoh's dream. Seven buffaloes, which had escaped from the torturing heat into the comparative coolness of the water, came up on to the banks and began feeding on the sedge. Shortly after, seven lean kine came up, and, finding nothing left for them to eat, by one of those strange transformations common to dreams, swallowed up their predecessors. So the seven shrivelled ears devoured those which were rank and good. This is a symbol of a fact that is always happening, and is happening now.

Our rulers, like Pharaoh, are having troublesome visions just now. In Europe and in England weak things are destroying the strong; hungry creatures are devouring the flourishing and the fat; the sterile is swallowing up the fruitful: and there is no visible improvement. Those who know how much we spend each year for drink and for our army; for extravagance and show—will understand what I mean. Oh, it is grievous to see how much is being squandered to no purpose on all these things, when our toiling masses are sinking deeper and deeper into misery and need! And where is the cure? It seems beyond our reach. Our wisdom, with its parliaments, its learned articles, its congresses, seems at its wits' end and nonplussed. At this very hour, for want of something better, millions of men are under arms to keep the hungry and weak from further devouring the flourishing and fat. For God Himself is bringing Egypt to despair that it may learn the need of that Jesus who—like Joseph once—is now hidden from its view. Then these Bibles shall be searched for guidance, and places of Christian worship shall be crowded: and the Rejected One shall reign, and his bride shall be given Him. Then shall earth rejoice; for He cometh to rule in equity, and his reign is goodwill to men!

It may be that seven years of famine have been passing over you, devouring all that you had accumulated in happy bygone times, and leaving you bare. Do you not guess the reason? There is a rejected Saviour transferred to some obscure dungeon in your heart. There never can be prosperity or peace so long as He is there. Seek Him forthwith. Cause thyself to run to Him. Ask Him to forgive years of shameful neglect. Reinstate Him on the throne. Give the reins of power into his hand. And He shall restore to thee the years that the cankerworm has eaten.

THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Holy Spirit! heavenly Dove,
Come in power, breathe life and love;
Show the brightness of thy face,
Testify of Jesus' grace.
Cleanse each thought, control each word,
All thy gracious aid afford;
Then our lives henceforth shall be
Bright and beautiful in Thee!

We are dark, be Thou our light;
We are weak, be Thou our might;
We are sinful, make us pure;
We are wavering, us assure;
We are weary, give us rest;
We are lonely, be our Guest;
We are restless, end our strife;
We are dying, give us life.

Love implant in us, O Lord—
Joy in Christ to each accord;
In his Peace let all be blest,
With Long-suffering send us rest.
Gentleness and Goodness give,
Faith bestow that we may live;
Teach us Meekness every hour,
Self-control increase in power.

This thy fruit in loved ones grown,
Nourished is by Thee alone;
Thou the living Spirit art,
Unto us thy grace impart,
And when earthly fruit is dust,
Thine shall flourish in the just.
Lord! this fruit from Thee is found,
Let it in my life abound. Amen.

Children in Manchester.

A number of workers connected with different denominations in Manchester have for some time past felt the need of special efforts to reach the children of that city, and with that object in view have banded themselves together under the name of the Manchester Children's Mission, to work in harmony with the Children's Special Service Mission. Their first effort is to be made in North Manchester, where a large public hall has been taken for the purpose, in which Mr. Hutchinson, of the C.S.S.M., has promised to conduct a mission for children from October 8 to 15. A preliminary meeting to make arrangements was held in Gay-street Mission Hall on Saturday, August 27, under the presidency of Rev. F. J. Horsefield, rector of the Albert Memorial Church. Mr. G. R. Kirlew gave some details, showing that whilst the object of the mission will, of course, be the winning of children to Christ, it is felt that an indirect benefit will be attained by their bringing together workers from the various places of worship in the neighbourhood.

ASBURY PARK, U.S.A.—The Interdenominational Bible Conference at Asbury Park, under the leadership of Dr. L. W. Munhall, closed on August 16. The last day's sessions were more largely attended than ever. There was a Bible reading on the Cherubim by Rev. Dr. D. M. Stearns, of Scranton, and an address on the Second Coming of Christ, by Dr. Nathaniel West, of Cincinnati.

IN LUTHER'S LAND.

Among the green hills of Thuringia Luther made his translation of the Bible. At some hours' distance is Magdeburg, which the reformer called Gottes Kanzel (God's pulpit), but which Pastor Jellinghaus now describes as Satan's pulpit—because of the atheism and materialism which emanate from it.

Among these deeply-wooded mountains picturesquely nestles the little town of Blankenburg, overshadowed by the mighty ruins of the Greifenstein (said to be the largest ruin in Germany), where, in 1307, the German Emperor Gunther was born. The pine woods of the Schwarzathal and the pine baths make this a health resort, of which, in this respect, our own Bournemouth affords some example.

It has been my very pleasant privilege to spend nearly a week in this lovely region, under the roof of a lady of highest culture, socially and spiritually, living in primitive simplicity among her little family of adopted orphan children.

After thirteen years' experience of mission work in Brandesoda, in the province of Saxony (which many of our readers will remember), Fraulein von Weling, seven years ago, came to Blankenburg, possessed with the same desire that actuated the sainted William Pennefather, nearly thirty years before, to gather together on one platform the children of God that were scattered abroad in England. Thuringia is called the "heart of Germany," and here this Christian lady desired to see united together God's scattered children. She passed through the same experience as her English predecessor, inasmuch as all her friends said that it never could be done. These pioneers of manifested Christian unity had more discouragement then our great dreamer to put forth his dream. John Bunyan tells us that "some said, 'Print it, John,' and some said 'Don't.'" But there were none to say to these dreamers of unity, "Do it"; all said "Don't." The encouragement to give bodily form to their dream of unity came only from the Spirit within them. But the Spirit had his way, and as the first gathering together at Barnet was blessed of God and became the parent of a multiplying family of such conventions, so doubtless the Philadelphian seed planted among these smiling valleys and these fruitful hills will go on increasing until Germany echoes from end to end with the joy and praise of "united brethren" and "friends of God."

It was in 1886 that Fraulein von Weling removed o Blankenburg as affording a larger and more needy sphere of work. An old physician had lived for years in this house, and prayed that God would send some one to carry on evangelistic mission in the locality; and when Fraulein von Weling came seven years ago, the old physician's share of the work was done, and "he was not, for God took him." The house is now called "Alliance House," but the townspeople call it "The Holy House," and the people who dwell in it "the saints." Even the horse is called "The Holy Horse," sometimes in mockery, sometimes with respect. In cases of need and of illness people send to ask for prayer, and a strange awe sometimes seems to possess them, as though the saints were inhabitants of another world.

The work carried on by Fraulein von Weling is admirably aided by Pastor Gustave A. Kaiser, who enjoyed the advantage of a training under the late Professor Christlieb, of Bonn. He passed through a deep sorrow in the death of his young wife and their child, a few months apart, and this deeper training has enabled him to enter with sympathy into the trials and sorrows of the people among whom he labours.

Two years ago these friends commenced a paper on the lines of the Evangelical Alliance, called the Evangelisches Allianz-blatt, and which is issued from this Alliance House.

I might have said it is conducted on the lines of this paper, and its experiences are like our own, in continual testimony of blessing received in many ways by the children of God whom it holds together by ties of Christian love and labour, entirely irrespective of denominational distinctions.

I have not space, nor is it needful, to trace particularly the progress of the Conference during the past seven years, nor to reproduce the addresses during the past week. Enough to say that our well-loved and revered brother, Dr. Baedeker, a son of consolation, like Barnabas, has been their moving spirit; that Pastor Theodor Jellinghaus, of Gütergotz (one of the many Continental pastors who entered upon a new experience at Oxford in 1874, and since well known in Germany by his book on full present salvation through Christ), has been the chief speaker; that Pastor Ernest Gebhardt, whom they call the German Sankey, and in the words of his own hymn, "Immer fröhlich," "Ever Happy," has led the song and brightened the meetings with his smiling face and cheery voice; that while the character of the meetings has been—somewhat of Mildmay and somewhat of Keswick, it has been more of its own, and all of Christ.

Nine nationalities and as many denominations were represented by those who took part in the meetings, including Pastor Büttner, of Kelbra (at the foot of the great Kyffhauser, where Barbarossa is said to sleep), and several other Lutheran pastors; Mr. and Mrs. de Neufville, of Frankfort-on-the-Maine (of this gentleman and his remarkable mission-work in that city I shall have more to say in an early number; Col. Von Knobelsdorff, of Berlin, the leader of the advancing Blue Cross Gospel Temperance movement in Germany of whom also more to follow; the Baroness von Langenau, widow of a former Austrian Ambassador to St. Petersburg, who, having lost her husband and her only son, has devoted herself to the work of the Lord in Vienna, in connexion with the Wesleyans, whose cause she largely supports by her means and by her personal influence. Dr. John Gritton also represented the Evangelical Alliance.

Special attention was given to reports of the various missions represented, and to cases of successful individual effort. I must particularly mention the mission immediately connected with the Alliance House. There are here nine little boys and one girl, of ages varying from three to twelve, from all parts of Germany, and one from Ireland. This work, like all the rest, is carried on entirely in faith on God. Gospel meetings, prayer meetings, mothers' meeting, Sunday-school meetings for men and for young women, and other gatherings, are part of the ordinary work.

In connection with this is a mission among the large villages of the Schwarza valleys and hills, where an evangelist is stationed, whose Bible and tract distribution is a very effective addition to his work. The population is largely engaged in artistic porcelain painting, glass-blowing, doll making, and other forms of home industry. They are an intelligent people, but have been utterly indifferent to religion. After Reformation times there existed a severe orthodoxy; then came a century of a deadly rationalism; followed in its turn by a wishy-washy and lifeless form of orthodoxy. The people come, however, in numbers to the meetings, and often walk several miles to obtain a Bible. Here it is greatly desired to build a mission hall. Hitherto the meetings have had to be held in public-houses, and when some of the congregation would remain to drink, opponents have made use of this to discredit the work.

This Gospel testimony has not been given without results. For example, one man who has been brought to the Lord was the means of his sister's conversion, the wife of a miller in a distant village. The husband, though not himself having received the truth, not only consented to a meeting being held regularly at his house, but goes himself from house to house, and shows the greatest interest in getting the people in. He has given up doing business on Sundays, and is a hopeful case. From other distant villages come earnest requests that similar Gospel meetings may be established there also.

Hundreds of Italian navvies are laying railway lines in Germany, many in Thuringia. For the past two years advantage has been taken of this opportunity by our friends at the Alliance House, and the Gospel has been preached to hundreds, who receive it eagerly. On account of the frequent change of place, their countrymen in other localities hear of it, and letters come to the Alliance House for Bibles and Testaments for themselves and their comrades. Thus large numbers of these books have been circulated among them throughout Germany, for which the men willingly pay postage not only for themselves, but for their comrades. To our dear and zealous friend Mrs. Robertson, of Hampstead, this mission, like many others, is deeply indebted for Bibles for this free distribution.

The Italians are a sober people, but in Germany, having no homes, they naturally drift into the public-houses. It was an encouraging incident that on the morning of the day when a meeting was to be held in a dancing saloon the word was passed among them that nothing should be drunk all day, because the meeting was to be held at night.

The natural effect of all this is that every year there have been conversions in the Alliance House, servants, guests, and neighbours. The testimony of the tutor, a very experienced teacher, is that the orphans are remarkably different from other children, especially as to their clear perception of what is sin. They have their little prayer-meeting and Bible readings, and the present desire of most of them is that they may become missionaries. This delightful neighbourhood presents every attraction for a Christian holiday; for a health resort; for pedestrian excursions; and for a more lengthened sojourn by young men or others to learn the German language. Facilities exist in the Alliance House for this purpose. The terms are remarkably moderate, three and a-half to five marks (8s. 6d. to 5s.) per day, or for a longer stay from 21s. to 30s. per week. Whatever profits there may be, are devoted to the maintenance of the mission and the support of the orphans.

I can only express the fervent hope that many readers may avail themselves of these advantages, to the help of the work and their own benefit.

P.S.—There are more Blankenburgs than one. This is Blankenburg in Schwarzathal in Thuringia, Germany. R. C. MORGAN.

MISS MACPHERSON'S WORK.

MY DEAR FRIENDS,—It is with a very thankful heart I write to express my gratitude to you, dear readers of THE CHRISTIAN, who have sent contributions to this old-established work during the past year. May the sweet promise in Isa. lviii. 10, 11, be yours in rich experience. Dawnings of light, meridian clearness, constant guidance, fulness of joy, spiritual health, fruitfulness, making you a blessing to others.

The outlook of the coming winter, should it be severe, betokens an unusual amount of distress, as work and money are very scarce everywhere. Receiving and training destitute orphans, both boys and girls, has been our peculiar work for nearly thirty years, since we undertook the first poor boy from Mr. George Holland's day school. We exclaim with thanksgiving, "What hath God wrought!" Since then 5,730 have been carefully started in life, and superintended by correspondence and a yearly visit in Canada, mostly by a former Christian schoolmaster.

The following peep, by letter, into our Canadian Home this week shows how of one mind we all are for the children's individual and best welfare.

"Our children (the sixty-sixth party and fourth sent during the past summer) are finding homes gradually. The wee boy, I am glad to say, has gone to be adopted by a nice couple, who longed for a small boy. He was so shy of strangers, I was afraid his new 'ma' would get disheartened, so I brought a few other little fellows into the room, and they soon made themselves at home with her. A few candies did the rest. They write to say he is very happy. The Russian brother and sister are together; they were so pleased to go to the same home and where their Judo-German would be understood. Hettie B. has come for a holiday. The first thing, she said to me when we were alone, was, 'Can I be a Christian? I do want to be one, and have tried; please tell me how.' I thank God that she can now sing 'Happy day.' She speaks, looks, and acts as though she understands the meaning of it now. Another who was sent home from an unsuitable place by our visitors, and whom I am trying to teach to be handy in the house, said to me, 'I would never have gone to heaven if I had not been made to come back to the home,' and, poor girl, how much she had dreaded coming, for they had told her she would be punished. One little girl writes to-day, 'I am so happy, for I have so many aunts and cousins; more than I ever had in my life.'"

It is a very happy service, thus to give joy to the heart of Jesus Christ in toiling on day by day, receiving all from his bounteous hand and abounding "more and more." In Canada our applications were 600 the past season; we were able only to supply half that number.

We never contract debt, and endeavour to use most carefully the money sent for rescue work (£10 each child). Many needy ones are waiting to be taken in. Through the tested faithfulness of our God since 1866 the widows' fund has been a cruse that has never failed, and the weekly sixpence and bag of food, it is still as your almoners our privilege to dispense.

All last winter about a thousand a week of poor and needy children had a good dinner of soup and bread.

An invalid kitchen, a good nurse, a kind Bible-woman soothed the last hours of many a dying one amid these surging masses.

All was ministered prayerfully and for the Master's sake, and called forth tender gratitude on the part of the sick and suffering.

We crave an interest in your prayers that the hundreds of young men and young women who, upon different weekday evenings through the winter months, are formed into self-improvement classes by a staff of voluntary workers, should result in great spiritual blessing upon the surrounding neighbourhood. Yea, that during this winter may be seen much revival power and the Lord Jesus exalted in our midst as never heretofore.—Yours ever, most gratefully, ANNIE MACPHERSON.

Sea Side Papers.

DEEP-SEA SOUNDINGS.

From tides, and winds, and waves,
From shipwrecks of the deep,
From parted anchors here,
Pass over to thy rest,
The rest of God.
—Horatius Bonar.

Perhaps nothing has created more perplexity in respect of the earth that is to be than the announcement "there shall be no more sea." It is not that there would be no gain in the loss. It is easy to run the eye over many items of gain—real nuggets and no mere gold-dust—such as the absence of storms and shipwrecks, the deliverance from weary heartaches, and from suspense oftentimes worse than death, the saving to life and property; and yet if there would be gain in the loss, it seems no less certain there would be loss in the gain. The sea, which so despoils and devastates, enriches. The balmy breath of the sea has healing in its wings. And in how many aspects is the great wide sea companionable? It dovetails without effort into any passing mood or fancy. Though no sorcerer, it fascinates. In point of adaptation the sea is a chameleon, linking itself on to any variety of mental state, loosing you from your moorings, and bearing you out to sea until insensibly the sadness melts away, and the soul, like the sea all around, shimmers in the golden light.

It is hard to reconcile one's self to the loss of the sea—hard to believe that that which whispers to us so much now of Paradise and of God should have no place in the new heavens and new earth; hard to say "Farewell" to a companion which seemed almost instinct with conscious life, and in whose throb, whose rhythm, whose light-hearted ripple and sportive play with sunbeam we had so often found solace for care, and wing for inspiration! Must it be that the knell shall sound and the sea—the glorious sea, the home of romance, the pavement of Jehovah's steps, the ground gemmed so often with the crown jewels of heaven—be no more? Is the time to come when that image of God's immeasurable peace, a restful sea, shall no more hush our souls in repose, and bid us be at rest? The idea is hard to entertain.

We know, indeed, that there is another side. The weeping prophet says, "There is sorrow on the sea; it cannot be quiet;" and many to-day with the salt tears in their eyes utter the same moan. The sea forgets: she loses sight of distinctions that seem all the world to us. Her freaks are full of incredible cruelties. She washes from the deck, near the Lizard Head, a beloved son that five minutes before handed to the pilot a letter to take to his mother at a port almost within sight. The mother gets the telegram of the death and the letter telling of bounding life and home-sickness, by two messengers treading on each other's heels. We enter the shadowed home to weep and to pray. Where in the realm of tragedy can anything more heart-rending be found? And yet such like things are

THE SEA'S DAILY PERFORMANCES.

We believe it is John Stuart Mill who somewhere has given expression to this idea—the wording is our own—"Men are every now and then sentenced to death for deeds not half so extreme as occur in the ordinary play of nature's operations." Yes, and the sea is prime actor in the same. But we cannot miscall thee, O Sea. Thou art God's minister, and if thou tellest of his severity, and of his ways which are past finding out, thou tellest also of his goodness. Thou waterest the earth and enrichest it. It is clothed with verdure because of thy open hand. If wreck is in thy train, and thou takest much treasure to thyself, still what would the earth be without thee, O Sea, and how can there be a rejuvenated world if thou art buried?

Virtually the sea is the physical saviour of the globe. But for the sea "our fair green planet would become like the moon, a heap of brown volcanic rocks and deserts, lifeless and worthless as the slag cast out of a furnace."

Yet there is an evangel in the words "There shall be no more sea." The outgoings of the sea carry into force against the human race a penal enactment. The sea is the great instrument of separation. The sea has thrown an enormous stretch of waters between the races and families of mankind; and the human race, thus violently disrupted, has chosen many dissimilar points of departure; the weak have been left to struggle with their weakness, and the strong to grow stronger in their might; in some cases the tide of progress has ebbed, in others flowed, while nowhere on the habitable earth has there been any steady, strong pulsation of a common fatherland telling that the stock of humanity is one.

The evil incident to this state of things is not, however, altogether unrelieved. Better enforced separation where sin is than a union founded on irreligious confederation. It is too much forgotten that the fall of man, which was fatal to the bond of Divine sonship, was equally fatal to the bond of human brotherhood. The necessary consequence of man's departure from God was his separation from his kind. The fall, in fact, made it safer for man to be away from his fellow that in communistic relations with him. To stay together when God was forsaken; to raise a monument to human unity after unfurling the standard of rebellion against the Fatherhood of God; above all, to maintain an alliance in sin, fellowship in holiness being no longer in the circle of man's desires—would have been to let confusion become more confounded and human society

DRIFT INTO A PANDEMONIUM.

It is not, then, alone in justice, but also in mercy, that God has requisitioned the sea to stand as sentinel over man's misdoing. The sea which divides preserves, and the waters which keep apart the disjointed members of our race shall cease to be when the Healer of divisions shall have made all things new.

It is in the light of this truth the prophetic word in respect of the sea is to be construed. We should stultify the first principles of the Gospel did we not hail it as the pledge of eventual triumph over division, as God's ensign announcing the dawn of universal brotherhood on the earth. Hence the early Church had all things in common; while the baptism of the Spirit enabled her to make known, from the platform of a common stock, in the vulgate of every people under heaven, a common salvation. The Gospel involves the bridging of the seas, the union of hearts and hands now so distant, the interchange of fraternal greetings and pledges, whereby all the nations of the earth may know that they dwell beneath the same Father's roof.

In the new heavens and the new earth the sea is no more, for the like reason that time is there no more. Not that then duration has ceased to be. An hour will be an hour then as now. But time in the new earth will be no more because its mission will then be ended, its business done with for ever. So, we think, in regard to the sea. Like time, the sea has a mission which cannot enter the everlasting age; and when that mission is fulfilled the sea ceases to be. Its character is changed and its personality lost. But may we not hope that, like time, it will emerge again under another form and flow on for a new object?

Leaving this point, it is interesting to note that seafaring has an important part to play IN THE PROPHETIC SCHEME as it concerns millennial times.

Thus, Isaiah lx. 9, "Surely the isles shall wait for me, and the ships of Tarshish first, to bring thy sons from far, their silver, and their gold with them, unto the name of the Lord thy God, and to the Holy One of Israel, because He hath glorified thee." Without going into the ramifications of prophecy, we need only now point out, what few who have studied in this field will deny, that prophecy has two sides, a side appertaining to the Jews and another appertaining to the Gentiles; or, in other words, prophecy contemplates on the one hand the restoration of the Jews and the blessing in Christ of all nations. Paul's argument in Romans xi. is in effect this—If sentence against the Jews wrought in behalf of the Gentiles, how much more shall the return of the Divine favour upon them enlarge the circle of blessing to the Gentile communities!

But as we look forward to that time and try to focus the scene by means of the prophetic glass, we find that one important feature rises into bold relief, and that is that all nations are not in the same attitude towards the working out of the Divine plan. Some sympathise with, and others are antagonistic to, the Divine idea. Ezekiel xxxviii. and xxxix. should be carefully read on this point. Leaving all details out of account, the general fact is plain that the great northern nations represented by Rosh, Meshech, Tubal, and Gog are hostile to the Divine plan, whereas the maritime community of modern times, as set forth in Tarshish with her ships and young lions, are in sympathy with the same, and take action accordingly. Hence the prominence given to Tarshish and the Isles in Isa. lx. 9, and further, the place assigned them by Ezekiel xxxviii. 13, "Then shall Sheba, Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish, with all the young lions thereof, say unto thee (Prince of Rosh, Meshech, Tubal), Art thou come to take a spoil? hast thou gathered thy company to take a prey? to carry away silver and gold; to take away cattle and goods, to take a great spoil?"

The proof that identifies Britain with the merchant princes of Tarshish in prophetic Scripture may not be satisfactory to all; still, if this interpretation miscarries it is difficult to see how any other can hit the mark, or even suggest itself to the imagination. Either the proof is relevant, or we must hold the matter in abeyance till future results greatly alter the present condition of affairs among the nations of the earth.

Converging, then, these prophetic rays to a point, we see, certainly from afar, but yet with some distinctness, the outline of the general maritime future. The abundance of the seas, in the final issue, is on the side of the Lord. There is a coming to the help of the Lord against the mighty on the part of the leading maritime power or powers. If this does not mark out our sea-girt isle, we must await a development of things of which at present there is no promise. If it does, it is a happy augury.

James Douglas.

DR. NEWMAN HALL ON THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

Dr. Newman Hall, who was present at Keswick this year, thus describes his general impression of its nature and tendency:—

"I felt as I never felt before, the real unity of believers. While many discussions have taken place respecting methods of unity, here was the reality. There was no consciousness of any difference. We were in a higher atmosphere than that of denominational distinctions. No one thought of inquiring, 'To what Church do you belong?' The motto in front of the great tent was realised,—'All one in Christ Jesus.'

"Nothing was said by the speakers to indicate what church he represented. No such representation was attempted, but Christian brotherhood alone. In the fervent prayers and praises, and the vital truths expounded, all varieties of organisation and nomenclature were forgotten. Does not this indicate the best lines for Christian union?—not so much combining systems as blending hearts, so that variations of dress may the more illustrate identity of the living body it clothes?

"I was glad to have a misconception removed—that the doctrine of Christian Perfection was taught in a way unscriptural and impracticable. I expected to hear from at least one or two speakers that positive perfection of character was attainable by simple faith, just as forgiveness of sin and escape from its penalty. But what we heard from one after another was this—that true faith in Christ has its fruit in obedience and conformity to Christ—that for this we should watch and pray and trust, never content with present attainments, but ever reaching forth to something higher, and at our very best ackowledging how vast the distance between our moral condition and the perfect holiness of Christ; so that we shall never get beyond the need of the daily prayer, 'Forgive us our trespasses,' while never ceasing to go 'forward unto perfection.' It seemed to me to be the old truth I had always found in the Bible, and which I had always preached. The difference was that this doctrine was urged with a clearness, devoutness, persistence, and impressiveness new to my experience, and most helpful to my own soul. I think the general feeling of all present was that we 'sat together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus.'"

THE BASEL MISSIONARY SOCIETY reports an income for 1891 of £51,416 and an expenditure of £52,064. Nearly £12,000 of the income is collected in halfpence. The baptisms from heathenism at the various stations were as follows—in India, 351; in China, 113; on the Gold Coast, 614; in the Camaroons, 175. In connection with the Mission there are altogether 24,622 church members, and the total number of scholars is 10,934.

BLESSING IN INDIA.—This morning, writes the Rev. H. M. M. Hackett, we had a specially interesting baptismal service in our College Chapel at Allahabad. The Khansamah, his wife, and three sons were baptized. An engineer and his eldest son are coming in to be baptized next Sunday. The wife and children are to follow. It is a time of great blessing. A Bengali doctor, and also a teacher (a B.A.), with his wife, have been baptized. These family baptisms are the best by far.

REV. JOHN McNEILL IN SCOTLAND.

A North of Scotland correspondent writes:—The Rev. John McNeill has just concluded a three-days' mission in Elgin and neighbourhood. His visit will be long memorable. Some of us, like the present writer, had never heard Mr. McNeill before, and although our expectations were high, we can truly say, with one of our local papers not accustomed to gush, that "the half was not told." We thank God for the gift He has given his servant, and for the fruit of that gift at present amongst us. We shall follow him with our prayers, and we beg earnestly to commend him to the prayers of God's people everywhere, assured that there is nothing the devoted evangelist will value more than this. Mr. McNeill began work in Elgin on Thursday evening in the new Town Hall, which holds 1,200, and which, save a few seats at the back of the gallery, was full, inconveniently so in the lower part. He addressed with great point and power from Psalm cxix. 59, 60—"I thought on my ways," etc. Several hundreds stayed for the after meeting, a deeply impressive one, and evidence was given of inquirers being led into the light.

On Friday, the weekly market day in Elgin, an open-air meeting was held at 3 p.m., on the "Plain-stones," the most public place in the little city, where the High-street broadens into an open space, and around which farmers and country people meet. An audience of at least a thousand congregated about the preacher, a large proportion being farmers from twenty miles around and upwards. Mr. McNeill preached from Isaiah xlv. 22: "Look unto Me and be ye saved," etc. He referred at the outset to the interest attaching to the text in connection with Mr. Spurgeon's conversion, and illustrated in a happy and home-coming way what is meant by looking to Christ for salvation. He dwelt on the security guaranteed—"for I am God," etc.—introducing it most appropriately for his audience, and with a stroke of humour that told well, by reference to masters desiring a character of the servants they engaged, and servants sometimes of their intending masters. Many, we doubt not, carried away from this service seeds of Gospel truths in their hearts, to germinate and bear fruit unto life eternal.

Thursday night in the Town Hall was a great meeting, the hall filled in every part, and the preacher in splendid form. Blind Bartimeus was the subject. We had heard of it in Mr. McNeill's hands before, but it was another thing to hear it and to feel as we did, and as hundreds seem to do, the power of the Holy Ghost with the Word in our hearts. An increasing number at the after meeting professed to be seeking the Saviour, and an increased number to have found Him.

On Sabbath morning Mr. McNeill preached in the Free Church of Alves to a crowded congregation, in this way giving a benefit to a very wide rural district. In the afternoon he preached on the Lady-hill, Elgin, to an audience which those most accustomed to estimate reckon at between five and six thousand. The preacher stood near the foot of the hill, on its western side, the congregation dense around him, and straggling away more loosely up to the summit. His fine voice was heard in its lowest notes to the extremities. The subject was the twenty-third Psalm, on which he spoke for more than an hour, but all were held with solemn and rapt and ever-growing interest to the end. In the evening, after the ordinary church services, Mr. McNeill held his closing meeting in the Town Hall. The hall, passages, gallery, orchestra, and wide corridors were crowded, and many had to go away. All classes in Elgin, from the highest to the lowest, were well represented, and ministers of all denominations were present. The subject was the Passover night; a familiar topic, but there was nothing hackneyed in the handling of it. The cross, substitution, the blood and its redeeming power were made to stand out with a clearness and majesty most refreshing to the hearts of lovers of the old Gospel, and with conviction and persuasion—as an observer might judge—to the minds and hearts of many who had not seen the glory and felt the power of these truths before.

Among strangers present we observed Mr. James E. Mathieson, of London, presently sojourning at Cullen, who led in prayer the first night, fervently asking for a large blessing, which there is good evidence has been already granted, and which, we have no doubt, will further show itself. Mr. McNeill seems to have benefited much by his month's partial rest and holiday at Braemar, and goes at his work "like a giant refreshed." He has no doubt great natural gifts, both of intellect and imagination, can make happy use of Shakespeare, Tennyson, and other poets, and his University culture peeps out from behind. His illustrations are strikingly simple and apt, as well as original and elevated. His oratorical and dramatic power is delightful. But thank God for the high consecration of all, for the power of the Spirit, for the consuming earnestness, and for the simplicity and godly sincerity with which he seeks to lead men to the one Saviour. From Elgin he proceeds to Grantown for a three days' mission, and thereafter, we believe, to Ireland. May the Lord strengthen and uphold his servant, and cheer his Church everywhere by tokens for good through his labours!

MR. VARLEY'S FAREWELL.

Mr. Henry Varley, the well-known evangelist, left London for Melbourne on Friday last to overtake the Australian mail steamer of the previous week at Naples. He had not intended leaving England quite so early in the autumn, and was, in fact, engaged in evangelistic work in the West of England, when the tidings of the death of a beloved married daughter, in Melbourne, altered all his plans, and caused him to desire to rejoin Mrs. Varley and his family in that city as soon as possible.

The noon prayer meeting at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, was last Thursday improvised into a farewell meeting, where many friends who had heard of the informal gathering assembled to commend their departing friend to the Lord. Mr. Varley gave a brief address, first reading Ps. ciii., which he said drew a striking picture of the instability, change, and vanity of earth, and the unchanging stability of the things of God. Mr. Varley hopes after spending a few weeks in Australia to proceed to India, with a view of evangelising amongst the Brahmins in that vast empire. He hopes to commence work very shortly in Calcutta. Mr. Varley gave some touching incidents in connection with the early decision for Christ of his deceased daughter, and of her consecrated life. In closing his remarks, he spoke of his desire to leave England on the best of terms with all men. He had no hostile feeling against a single man, although he had felt bound to protest with all vehemence against the heresies of some modern teachers. He earnestly craved a sustained interest in the prayers of Christian friends that God would graciously strengthen him and use him for his glory in the proposed campaign in India. Very many earnest prayers were offered during the meeting for Mr. Varley, his voyage and mission, for Mrs. Varley and the bereaved family, and for the little baby girl who survives her mother.

THE LATE MR. WEATHERLEY.

There was a large gathering at Highgate Cemetery on Thursday last, when the remains of this faithful Christian worker were laid to rest. The various institutions with which he had cast his lot had brought him into touch with rich and poor alike, and it was evident that both classes were well represented around his grave. That he had been a friend to the needy, the grief of many present who were amongst the poor of this world clearly showed.

A contingent of lads from the Postal Telegraph Department, and another from the Homes for Little Boys at Farningham and Swanley, added the mute testimony of their presence to the esteem in which his work among them was held.

A short service had previously been held at his residence, conducted by Rev. Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission. In the cemetery chapel, Rev. Geo. Savage, a very old friend of the family, officiated. The speakers at the grave were Mr. Benjamin Clarke, secretary of the Home for Little Boys, Mr. Gerald Hunnybun, of Huntingdon, and Mr. Sykes. Mr. Clarke addressed a few words to the boys, showed that Mr. Weatherley's interest in Christian work was due to his love for God; and urged that the best tribute the lads present could give to his memory was to yield themselves to the service of the same Master.

Mr. Hunnybun spoke of a friendship lasting nearly a quarter of a century, and depicted the ever ready manner in which Mr. Weatherley had always taken the sorrows of others upon himself. He was now at rest, with Christ, and at home, but his influence would long remain.

Mr. Sykes followed with a reference to a work at Grafton-street, Seven Dials, in which Mr. Weatherley interested himself thirty-five years ago. Many a rough wild lad, brought under the influence of that mission, has grown up to manhood a credit to society, and a blessing to his fellow men.

Earnest appeals were also made to any standing by who as yet had not placed their trust in the Saviour who had been Mr. Weatherley's friend and guide in life, and his comfort in the hour of death.

Let me describe some causes of unbelief. A drowsy inobservance and carelessness which do not mind the concerns of the soul, or regard the means of God for its conversion. A bad judgment, corrupted with prejudicate notions and partial inclinations to falsehood.—Dr. Barrow.

DR. TALMAGE IN HYDE PARK.

For twenty-one years the Hyde Park Mission has carried on Gospel services in Hyde Park, and in recent years these have been held during the summer season each Sunday morning, afternoon, and evening, as well as on Tuesday and Saturday evenings. Amongst the dense throngs of pleasure-seekers resorting to the Park these services have awakened some attention, and, arresting the steps of numberless passers-by, have been the means of reaching many hearts, and leading them to the Saviour. Not a few now witnessing for Christ at home and abroad were first of all convicted of sin and aroused to a sense of need by the faithful words spoken in the Park.

Some remarkable gatherings have taken place during these twenty-one years, and strange scenes have been witnessed, but we doubt if the assemblage of Sunday evening has been hitherto paralleled. The announcement, widely made, that Dr. Talmage intended to speak in the Park on the eve of his return to New York sufficed to bring crowds anxious to hear the great preacher. The usual congregation numbers, it is computed, about four thousand, and this unwontedly large throng attracts the attention of the passers-by, who stop to swell the crowd. But on Sunday evening that number was doubled if not trebled.

Mr. Cook's choir, many of them, as was stated, themselves Park converts, mustered in full strength, and sang vigorously and well. A wagonette served as platform, with the large mission banner for sounding board and standard. After the opening service of song, led by Mr. Charles Cook, prayer was offered, and Psalm xxiii. read by Dr. Louis Klopsch.

Dr. Talmage stepped to the front, and having, by way of prelude, expressed his sense of the value of open-air preaching, and his appreciation of Mr Cook's work, delivered, in clear ringing tones, a racy address full of pungent points and direct home thrusts on the text, "Come thou and all thy house into the Ark." One could not but rejoice that so many listened so attentively to the Gospel so clearly set forth.

At the close of the service, Dr. Talmage and his friends adjourned to Hyde Park Hall, and addressed the congregation there, with the result that a large number sought an interest in the prayers of God's people, seeking that night to enter the ark of safety. Dr. Talmage very generously gave £5 towards the £100 needed to close the accounts of the mission free of debt; and his friend also gave £5. We should rejoice to know that this important work was clear of all liabilities. Mr. Cook's address is 6, Frithville-gardens, Shepherd's Bush, London, W.

We should add that Dr. Talmage was announced to deliver his farewell address in London in the Crystal Palace on Wednesday evening (7th inst.), leaving the following day for Belfast and Dublin, and embarking at Queenstown on board the s.s. Paris on the 15th inst. on his homeward voyage.

Shaftesbury Institute, Herne Hill.

During eight years 400 fallen girls have been rescued through this institute, and are in a quiet way doing well. The hon. directress, Mrs. Alex. Wm. Cunningham, 5, Railton-road, says:—"It often brings tears to my eyes when these poor girls come in to me, telling me their little difficulties, which, with God's help, are smoothed away; then, with a motherly kiss such as I would give my own daughter, God often enables me to send them away happy. It would be a great grief to me to give up this useful branch of the work, but I am completely crippled for funds." There is a Crêche for children, with an annual attendance of 4,029; and the work among lads has gone on with varying success during the year. Some of the elder boys have started a "company" for window-cleaning and are doing well at the industry which they have thus devised.

CAMBORNE.—The Town and District mission has had for a fortnight the assistance of the Misses Fleetwood, who have been on holiday, and whose singing has been the means of touching many hearts. We are looking forward during the winter for the great power of God to rest upon us. The Band of Hope and Sunday School is in a splendid condition, and the Gospel services on Sunday nights are crowded out.—G. W. Clegg

THE "BROAD AND NARROW WAY" PICTURE.—Mr. Frank Cockrem, Assistant Secretary of the Open-Air Mission, hopes to continue lecturing on the late Mr. Gawin Kirkham's large copy of this picture, and will be assisted, as Mr. Kirkham was, by Mr. Charles L. Young, of Mildmay. The lecture will be in aid of the funds of the Open-Air Mission, and applications for it should be addressed to Mr. Cockrem, at 14, Duke Street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

The Northfield Convention.

WITH AND WITHOUT MR. MOODY.

It is almost true to say that Mr. Moody discovered this superb New England village. At least, he has revealed it to the world. It is a typical place. Its one long, wide street, parallel to, and some distance back from, the Connecticut; with four rows of superb elms almost as fine as those of New Haven, would make the fortune of any town west of the Hudson. The hills and mountains on either side are very picturesque. The air is fresh and invigorating; the drives very attractive, provided there are frequent rains to lay the dust; and thus far the high prices and fashionable dressing of "resorts" have not invaded Northfield.

But Mr. Moody's school work has wonderfully increased the prosperity of the village. Indeed, the north half of the town, and a new street parallel with the old, as well as a good hotel, are the creation of these schools and their needs. Most people know of Mr. Moody only as the prince of modern evangelists; but his work as a practical educator will live long after his sermons are forgotten. His zeal and wisdom has created here two noble institutions in which some 600 girls and as many boys are being trained in excellent fashion, with the English Bible as the base of both education and character. The aim is to make the pupils self-supporting, apt in any and all of the affairs of daily life. "We want no boy at Mount Hermon," said Mr. Moody, "who can't eat soup with a one-tined fork." He must not be ashamed of manual labour, nor afraid to sleep on a haymow. But this does not mean that the education is solely, or chiefly, industrial. Mount Hermon graduates enter Yale with honour. The cost of each pupil is but 100dol. per year. I know of few places where money can do more good than in enlarging and endowing these schools. It is devoutly to be hoped that Mr. Moody's life may be spared until they are placed on a safe and parmanent basis.

Just now the Christian Conference is attracting the eyes of multitudes to Northfield. Mr. Moody is at work in England, and some of us who have been here repeatedly wondered how the meetings would go on without him, who has always been the centre and inspiration.

The attendance is hardly less than in former years. Several old and favourite speakers are here—Mr. Needham, Dr. Pierson, and Mr. Meyer, of London. Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, is presiding in Mr. Moody's stead. He is a noble man, of superb presence and charming manners. He is one of the most edifying preachers to be heard anywhere; but he lacks that almost indefinable something that makes Mr. Moody an ideal chairman. Dr. Gordon conducts the meetings; Mr. Moody pervades them; his mighty personality is felt in every part of every session. With him in the chair there are no long prayers, and a dull speaker does not get a second hearing. He is sometimes brusque and gives offence, which Dr. Gordon never does; but still every meeting goes. A study of these gatherings in successive years leads to the conclusion that to lead a great mass meeting, as to govern a city, one must be a good deal of an autocrat, and something of a tyrant.

Many people, who have not attended these conferences, think them simply gatherings of religious cranks, and avoid coming because they do not care to see an exhibition of riding hobbies. But no mistake could be greater. Of course some men and women come here with axes to grind. But Mr. Moody is notable not least of all for the most robust common sense. He is seldom deceived in any one, and he has abundant courage to say "No." And he is too wise to make this the place of propagating any peculiar tenet in theology.

A day and a-half—four meetings—have been given to foreign missions, for which occasion Dr. Pierson had gathered excellent speakers from different denominations and different lands. Brief mention of the starving people of Northern Siam drew 1,000 dols. from the audience, which, within twenty-four hours, was at its destination and doing its good work.

POINTS IN THE ADDRESSES.

"That great and blessed hope" of the second coming of Christ was held up again and again during the Conference. Dr. Gordon pointed to the Great High Priest within the veil of the heavens, whither He has gone and fixed the anchor of our hope, by and by to draw his believing ones in to Himself, as a vessel is drawn into the harbour. There in the Holy of Holies He stands as our Advocate, and we, waiting without, hear the tinkling bells of the promises which assure us that He is alive. It is ours to watch, to occupy till He come, to keep our garments always white, to purify ourselves even as He is pure.

Dr. A. T. Pierson considered the Second Advent in its Scriptural, Historical, and Spiritual aspects. He interpreted the seven parables of the Kingdom in Matthew xiii., as in combination a complete prophetic picture of this age and its transition to the millennial age to come, and pointed to the history of this dispensation as a fulfilment of the parable-prophecies. He deprecated the disposition to measure and glorify Christianity by statistical tables, the spirit that seeks to estimate quantity rather than quality. In this connection he mentioned the fact, discovered by personal inspection of the records, that the average increase of the membership of Spurgeon's church, during that great man's entire ministry, was 390 souls each year, or more than one per day, and that these were admitted only after the most careful instruction and examination.

Rev. F. B. Meyer's address on "Conscience" was both a revelation and an inspiration to many. He compared the conscience to the central jewel in the high priest's breastplate, on which was graven the name of God, and which grew bright with God's "Yes," and darkened with his "No," as they inquired of Him. So, he said, amid the jewels with which each nature is endowed, there is one most precious jewel in the heart of each of us, namely, the peerless jewel of conscience.

I think God refers to it when He speaks of the white stone in the Book of Revelation ii. 17. Throughout the book of Revelation the word translated "white" is not the whiteness of snow, but the whiteness of incandescent heat, and the promise seems to mean here that Christ will give to the man that overcomes, the stone, that is, conscience, bathed in the light and fire of his own glorious presence. To put it in other words, we may say that every man has in him the stone, but in most of us it is dim. But Jesus Christ gives to those who overcome a moral victory, a new light in their conscience, so that conscience comes to be a diamond saturated and bathed in the light and power of Himself.

Dr. Pierson delivered two remarkable addresses on the Word of God, speaking with a rush and velocity of thought and language that baffled the pencil of the reporter. The first was on "The Proper Attitude of our Minds towards the Word of God." His first remark was that the Bible challenges criticism, in connection with which he quoted and commented upon John v. 39, and vii. 12; Acts vii. 11; 1 Peter iii. 15. The province of reason, said he, is to weigh evidence; the province of conscience is to weigh right and wrong. Reason asks; 1st. Is this the Word of God? 2nd. What does it teach? 3rd. What relations have its teachings to me? The speaker dwelt at considerable length upon the limits of human knowledge as pertaining to the revelation of God's Word. 1st. There is much we are not to know. Deut. xxix. 29. 2nd. There are paradoxes presented without attempt to reconcile them. 3rd. Man lacks capacity to comprehend the ways of God. 1 Cor. ii. 11. 4th. Even in truth there is sometimes apparent contradiction. 5th. Our present experience supplies no adequate terms to express the things of God. 6th. There is much knowledge we are not yet prepared for. 7th. There are matters that will always transcend our comprehension. 8th. The Bible is a supernatural book, and therefore demands faith for its understanding. 2 Cor. iv. 3 4; Isa. liii.; 1 Psa. cix. 18. 9th. Scientific fact is not to be confounded with sceptical conjecture. One golden thought uttered by Dr. Pierson should be written on every preacher's heart: "Doubts are not public property, and should not be made public. Only certainties help anybody."

Dr. Pierson's second address was on "The Sevenfold Unity of the Bible." It was a brilliant address, of great breadth and depth and height. The sevenfold unity was specified as, organic; historic; didactic; prophetic; scientific; symbolic; and Messianic.

Rev. F. B. Meyer presented very winningly the great privilege of "The Filling of the Spirit." Here are a few of the thoughts presented:—

"If you were filled, five things would happen. First, Jesus Christ would become a living reality to you. The man who is most spirit-filled is most Christ-filled, for the Holy Ghost reveals Christ. Secondly, if you are filled with the Holy Spirit, you will have an undoubted assurance of your sonship; you will have over you a clear vision, and the spirit within will witness to the Saviour, and be an assurance of your relationship to the Father. Thirdly, if you are filled with the Holy Spirit, you will be cleansed from the power and love of indwelling sin; you will be tempted still, but you will find that your inner nature is like a tinder-box, which has become wet or damp. You know well enough how often you strike matches upon a damp tinder-box and they will not ignite; so when a man is filled with the Holy Ghost the Devil will still try to strike his matches upon him, but the man won't respond; he will be so saturated, so to speak, with the Divine influence that there will be no inclination towards the yielding of other days. I do not say that the old nature is eradicated, but I do say that it is kept as torpid as serpents and toads are kept in the winter. They are there, and when the conditions alter they wake up, but just so long as the conditions are kept icy and frosty they are torpid and dead. So the old nature is not eradicated from the soul, but it is kept so utterly quenched and still and inoperative that when temptation comes from outside there is no inclination to yield within. Then, fourthly, when a man is filled with the Holy Ghost he has marvellous power in witnessing for Jesus to others. Some of you who are listening to me perhaps shrink from entering into conversation with people about their souls; you have no power in testimony; you work in the midst of a number of ungodly men, and you never try to stay their foul talk. You have never gathered your child, your nearest, to you and spoken about the Redeemer. Why? Because you have never yet been filled. Because, when you are filled, at once the torrent flows forth. And, fifthly, if you are filled with the Holy Spirit you will be filled with love, perfect love."

"How are we to receive this filling? First, seek the presence of the Holy Spirit, and not the gifts of the Holy Spirit. If you have the former you also have the latter. Secondly, confess the sins of your past life against the Holy Spirit. Thirdly, there must be an intense desire for this great boon. God is not going to give to any one the power of the Spirit, unless there is eager desire for it. Fourthly, there must be fulness of surrender to Jesus; and lastly, we must receive the filling of the Holy Spirit by faith. (Gal. iii. 4)."

Dr. Pierson's last discourse was based on Eph. vi. 10-17, and was the fruit of thirty years of study on the high themes compassed by the text. He found the six pieces of armour in the Christian soldier's equipment exactly and marvellously adapted to meet Satan in six corresponding aspects in which the Word of God represents him, viz.: as Deceiver, Accuser, Hinderer, Liar, Tempter, and Destroyer. The whole armour of God is to be put on in order to meet the wiles of the Devil, and the equipment is so complete that not a single point is pregnable to attack. The head and eyes protected by the helmet of salvation against the Deceiver; the breast and trunk enclosed with the military vest of righteousness against the Accuser; the feet shod with alacrity of the Word of God to meet the Hinderer; the loins girded with truth against the Liar; the hand armed with the sword of the Spirit against the Tempter; and the shield of faith to cover the whole against the Destroyer's fiery darts.

Mr. Meyer preached on the last Sunday morning of the Conference, which was the closing day, to an immense congregation. The sermon was on "Knowing and Believing the Love of God." (1 John ii. 16).

On Sunday afternoon, Mr. H. M. Moore, of Boston, conducted a meeting for prayer and short addresses. Among the speakers were Col. Van Reussellaer, of New York, who represented the Grand Army Mission; Shire Kuroda, a young Japanese student; and Madame Tel Sono, the Japanese reformer, who told her pathetic story of life with telling effect, drawing tears from the eyes and money from the pockets of many for the promotion of her Japanese Christian Training School enterprise.

After an open-air testimony meeting on Round Top, the memorable pine-crowned knoll back of Mr. Moody's house, the closing service of the Conference was held in Stone Hall. Dr. Gordon, the beloved leader, having wisely and faithfully kept the trust committed to him by Mr. Moody, spoke his last good words. Then Mr. Meyer gave his farewell address, followed with a solemn act of consecration sealed with prayer and supplication. "Blest be the tie that binds," was sung, and with the benediction of God upon them, the assembled disciples passed out of the room, some of them to live new lives, and do better work than they had ever known.

I have left no room to speak of the beautiful and inspiring ministry of song in the conference. How could we have done without it? Perhaps many fail to realise how important a part was played by the high and holy ministration of our musical psalmists, Sankey, Stebbins, Towner. How the hearts of the great audience were moved and thrilled, comforted and calmed, lifted and strengthened often, by the breadth of holy song that filled the place of assembly. In many a soul sweet echoes will sing themselves over and over again as the days go by.

HOW AGNES FOUND GOD'S WORK.

Agnes Wood was in a great hurry one beautiful morning in the bright summer. She washed the dishes with speed, and sang joyously as she hastened about her morning work. The air was balmy, and the green woods looked fresh and delightful. Agnes gazed often toward them, for her mother had given her permission to go that day with Fanny Crosby to gather some of the flowers for the sick at the hospital.

"Poor creatures," said Agnes, "won't they be delighted to have some fresh wild flowers! Don't you think wild flowers seem to mean more and go deeper into your heart than the garden flowers, mother?"

"Yes," said Mrs. Wood, "it always seems as if the wild flowers come more directly from God than cultivated flowers; but, of course, it's only a fancy. I love to see them sprinkled over the green sod, as if they had felt a throb of the love of God away down in the earth, and fairly thronged up like happy thoughts. God writes sweet thoughts to us in the flowers."

Just then the bell rang, and Agnes bounded to the door.

"Here's a letter for you," said a neighbour boy. "I brought it from the office."

"Thank you," said Agnes. "Do open it, mamma. Let's see who it's from."

The handwriting was stiff and inelegant; but Mrs. Wood read:—

Dear Sary,—I'm a comin' out to your house to spend a few weeks. My health is very poor, and there don't seem to be anybody that wants me round. I can do odd jobs, and I know you to be a Christian woman. I'll be there Monday night.—Jane Morrison.

"Oh, dear!" cried Agnes, "what does she want to come for? It will spoil everything."

"Poor old lady!" said Mrs. Wood; "she has a hard, loveless life. We must try and make her comfortable. Let's see; where will we put her?"

Agnes's brow was dark. She was thinking to herself—"No wonder she has a hard life. She's no business to be so queer."

"Yes," said Mrs. Wood, rising from her meditation, "we'll clear out the store-room, and have it fixed comfortable by to-night. It is quiet and sunny, and will just suit poor Aunt Jane. Now, Agnes, if you could help me to move the things this morning—but, oh, you're going to the woods! Well, maybe I can manage it myself. I don't want to have you disappointed."

Agnes' face was very gloomy now, and her tears ready to fall. She knew her mother was not strong enough to undertake such a task. Duty certainly bade her give up her plan for flower gathering.

"I don't care," said Agnes. "It's too bad; but that's always the way. Whenever I think of some plan for doing good, somebody has to spoil it all. Of course, I can't go to the woods and leave you all that work to do; but I think it's real mean. She thinks she can come here whenever she takes a notion!"

"Why, Agnes, you grieve me very much. Perhaps God had a plan for you to do before you had made one. Instead of going away to find work, he has sent it right to your door. Remember, dear, poor Jane is one of Christ's little ones, and she comes in his stead. If our Lord were coming, wouldn't you fly to make everything beautiful for him?"

Agnes walked silently away to her room, tears of disappointment overflowing her eyes. But by-and-bye tears of repentance took their place; and after a while she ran out and threw her arms around her mother, and asked to be forgiven.

When Fanny Crosby called, Agnes came from the storeroom in dustcap and apron, and explained how a dear friend was coming, and she had to stay home to prepare for her. "And, oh, Fanny! won't you please bring me a bunch of flowers for her room? She's sick, you see. I don't know that she'll care anything about them, but somebody will, I'm sure," said Agnes.

Agnes scrubbed and polished the storeroom till it shone. Then the pretty single bed was put up, and made with great care. "If He were coming to sleep here," whispered Agnes, "I couldn't make it any better." The white bed and dainty pillow looked very restful. It was really astonishing how many beautiful ornaments Agnes found for Aunt Jane's room. She draped the white curtains with some of her own dainty ribbons, made a bright cushion for the little rocker, and an ottoman of a low box, spread down a bright piece of carpet for a mat, and robbed her own room of pictures for the walls. When Fanny brought the flowers, she arranged tasty bouquets for the bureau and stand. How fresh and sweet the little room looked, with a glimpse of the woods and sky through the window, and the flowers and whiteness within!

Aunt Jane arrived just at sunset. Agnes ran down the path to meet her. She felt a tender pity creep into her heart as she saw the slow, hesitating steps and the withered little form of the old lady. She was not any relation to Agnes, but she was known everywhere as Aunt Jane, "Oh, child," she exclaimed, as Agnes implanted a hearty kiss on her withered lips, "I didn't know's you'd be glad to see me. It's so seldom folks is nowadays. I knew your mother would. She'd be good to anybody."

"Here's your room, Aunt Jane. I fixed it all up for you to-day."

"It's like a peep inter the better land," said Aunt Jane, as she took off her spectacles and rubbed them. "Oh, dear! and here be some flowers," and Aunt Jane sat down and rocked to and fro, while the tears trickled down her furrowed cheeks.

"How sweet they be," she went on. "They make me think of home and when I was a girl. But they're all dead now and there's only me left. But God's alive yet, and he's sent me here for comfort."

Agnes hung around Aunt Jane all the evening with little, kind attentions, and at bedtime folded down the snowy coverlet of her bed, and put up her fresh lips for a kiss. Aunt Jane held her face between her hands, and said, "Bless you, child!"

Wasn't it a sweet night for Agnes? Her heart was full of peace; sweet words filled her mind. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto Me."—Our Young Folks.

ON THE SANDS.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Seaside Reports from Workers.

SOUTHSEA.

Services in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission have been held in Southsea during the month of August. They have been conducted by the Rev. Godwyn Storrs, assisted by Messrs. Dawson, A. de Candole, and Petch, and others interested in the mission. The morning prayer meetings have been bright and helpful, with steadily increasing numbers. More strength has been gained to go forth to the beach with the Gospel message.

At the opening meeting an address was given by the Rev. F. Baldey, Vicar of St. Simon's, on the word "Helps." The workers were reminded that they must be humble, earnest, loving, prayerful and self-denying, in order that their lives as well as their words should witness to the children.

The service at 11.30 each morning has been well attended by both children and adults, and great attention has been noticeable throughout. Each week a lantern service has gathered many together to listen to Gospel addresses.

Special meetings for boys and girls and members of the Scripture Union have been held; also two flower services in St. Simon's Church. By means of games in the afternoons and a weekly excursion it has been sought to reach the hearts of the young, such occasions affording opportunities for more individual and personal dealing.

Two old friends—the Rev. G. P. B. Kerry and the Rev. H. L. C. de Candole—were present during the last week, and were very heartily welcomed.

Only let us follow up all this seed-sowing with prayer, and God Himself will give the increase.

LLANFAIRFECHAN.

We have had some interesting meetings which, although not very large, have been attended with blessing. Two nurses' meetings were much appreciated. The concluding girls' meetings were times of decision to several, and it is hoped that there is yet fruit to be gathered in. On Wednesday, August 17, a meeting was held on behalf of Aunt Esther's Cot Fund (Mildmay Mission, Bethnal Green). Dr. S. R. Webb presided, and Miss Symington gave an interesting account of the work among East-end children; the collection, although only 100 were present, realised £4 3s. At the Lantern Service (Thursday, August 18), all the Chinese lanterns to be bought in the place were en évidence; two addresses were given, and the solo, "There is a green hill," effectively rendered; the singing was good, the children having previously learnt the hymns by heart; about 500 or 600 were present. Wednesday, August 24, we gave up to missionary meetings; in the morning three short missionary addresses were given, and in the evening Dr. S. R. Webb, aided by a man of Central Africa described his future sphere of work on the Congo, exhibiting several interesting objects. The last boys' meeting and the last girls' meeting were blessed to not a few; at the praise meeting elder ones also testified to good received during the mission. The farewell meeting on Sunday afternoon was a delightful gathering—600 present; the weather was perfect and the attention was good. An address was given on "Kept by the power of God."

DEAL.

This year our services have been held for only a fortnight, but have been very well attended and very encouraging. We commenced on August 9, and continued until August 21, the attendance increasing from day to day.

We have been much interested this year by a kind friend, who has from time to time set the children things to search out from their Bibles, offering them prizes. Some of the questions have been really hard, but in no case have they failed to be answered. Towards the end we offered a prize for the best definition of a Christian. The answers to this question were remarkably good, and showed a real practical knowledge of the Christian life in not a few cases. The answers proved so good that it ended in six prizes being distributed. The answers, taken altogether, formed a very good basis for an address on the last Sunday afternoon's gathering.

WORTHING.

The weather since we last wrote has been rough and boisterous, but we have been able to hold our services on the beach regularly. Now that the month is nearly at its close, we thank God for giving such fine weather, as we have only been driven indoors by rain on one occasion. Our closing Sunday afternoon service in the Assembly Rooms was a quiet, solemn, and earnest season, and although we missed many little friends who began the month with us, others filled up the ranks, and so gave us an attendance of nearly 300.

The indoor evening meetings have been times of much earnestness, especially among the boys; and our hearts were filled with thankfulness as one after another told us of blessing received.

EAST BRIGHTON.

The services here have kept a deepening interest to the end. We had our farewell meeting last night (August 30) in a spacious drawing-room, lent by a lady who has heartily supported our little mission. Sixty persons attended, in spite of threatening weather, and a very pleasant evening was spent.

I have not often seen so many with faces showing such deep interest and happiness as assembled on Wednesday morning for an extra-final meeting on the beach. Our attendance has been generally from 100 to 140, besides a large number who stood on the stone groyne and listened. On Sunday afternoon every seat in St. George's Mission Hall was filled for a children's service, and more than 15s. was given by way of offering for missionary work. One lady says, "You have been the means of blessing to——"; and many similar expressions testify that God has indeed blessed our services, and so the happiest holiday I have ever spent comes to an end.

RAMSEY, ISLE OF MAN.

Services were held in Ramsey by Mr. H. B. Claxton, from 21st to 30th August. Commencing with a prayer meeting on the evening of 20th, services were held daily both morning and afternoon on the sands when the weather permitted, in one or other of the schoolrooms, lent for the purpose, when the weather was either wet or too boisterous for outdoor speaking. The meetings were on the whole well attended; the Sunday services held in the Mooragh Park drawing together large audiences both of young people and adults.

A special feature of this year's services was a tea provided for the poor children of the town, at which about 550 were provided with a good tea, followed by races and other sports. On Saturday, 27th, a large party of young people, accompanied by their friends, paid a visit to Bishopscourt, the residence of the Bishop, where they were received and addressed by the Bishop (copy of the Bishop's address enclosed). Farewell services on Monday, 29th, concluding with a missionary address by Col. Oldham, illustrated by limelight views on the life of Bishop Hannington brought the services to a close.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.
SEASIDE SERVICES, 1892.

Children's seaside services are being continued at the following places:—Mr. E. Arrowsmith, at Eastbourne, to September 14; Mr. Henry Hutchinson, at Bridlington Quay, to September 10; Mr. W. H. Roberts, B.A., at Llandudno, to September 11; Mr. A. G. Dodderidge, at St. Leonards, to September 10.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Sun., Sept. 11, 1 Sam., v. 1-8; Mon., Sept. 12, vi. 1-16; Tues., Sept. 13, vii. 1.17; Wed., Sept. 14, viii. 1-9; Thurs., Sept. 15, viii. 10-22: Fri., Sept. 16, ix. 1-14; Sat., Sept. 17 ix. 15-27.

An Irish Hostelry.

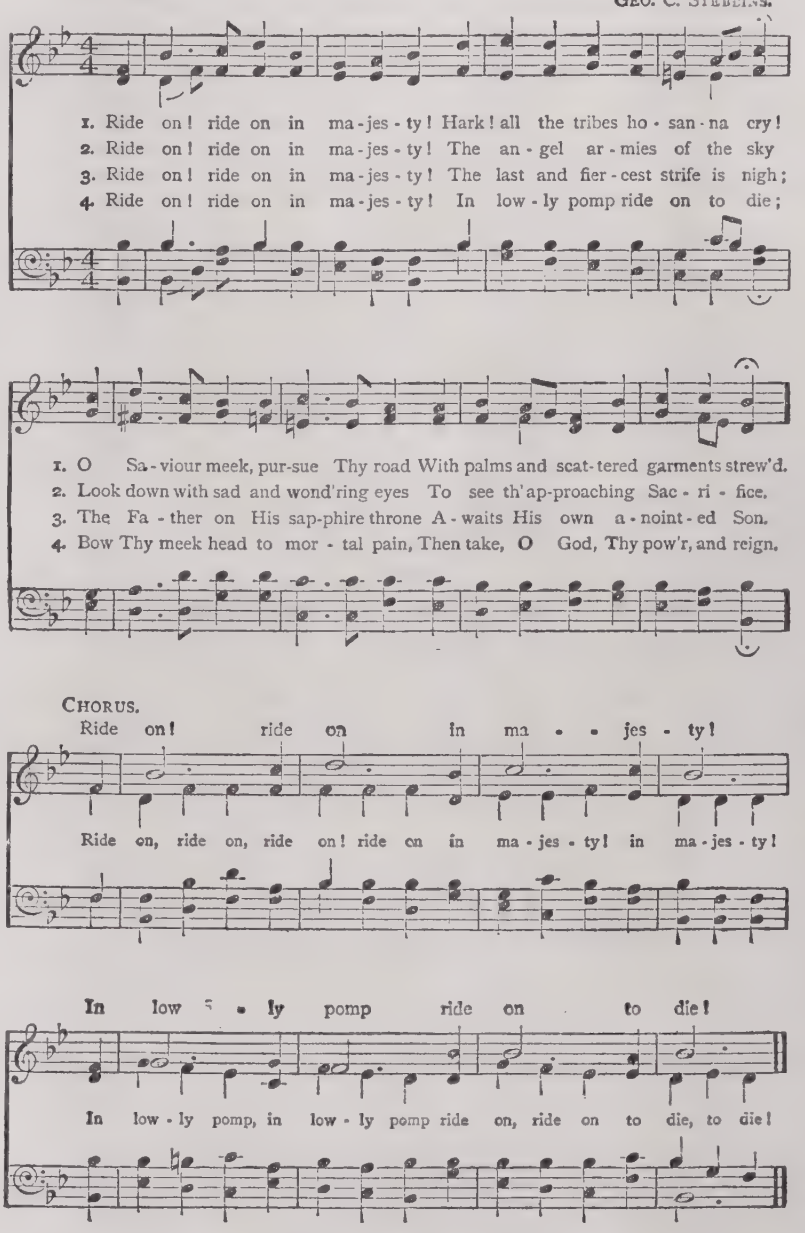
Farmer Patrick, being of a social disposition, is fond of going to market, and to fair. He lives a few miles out of the town, so, of course, Biddy, the mare, is harnessed, and her master drives in to do his bargaining, whether buying or selling. Biddy must be stabled, but where? Why, to be sure, at the public-house; nowhere else can the farmer find accommodation for his beast, not to say for himself. Mr. Boniface is shrewd enough. He does not impose a heavy fee for the stabling, but he expects Pat and Tim and the rest of the "bhoys" to drink something "just for the good of the house." The good-hearted lads readily fall in with this arrangement. They proceed to treat one another, and the poteen flows so freely that the good of the farmers and their families is certainly not furthered, whatever may befall "the house."

Now Pat is not a fool, but he hates to be stingy and mean; and so he sacrifices himself on the altar of good-fellowship. Temperance folk are down upon him for his weakness, and rightly enough. But what do they do to help him, if he wishes to steer clear of the whisky and keep a cool, steady head for his marketing? Very little, as a rule, we fear. An ounce of real help is worth a cartload of pity. Some of the good people in Coleraine seem to have found this out quite lately, and they are putting their discovery into practical shape. The other day, when Mr. Moody was in that northern Irish town, he was greatly interested in a building close to the square, that is approaching completion, and will shortly be opened as a hostelry, where all the legitimate needs of the farmer, for his horses and himself, will be met, without any resultant temptation. It is really a wonder that the same sort of thing has not been set on foot in every market town in the three kingdoms. Let all temperance reformers who read these lines take note, and let them, so far as they can, go and do as a wise Christian lady in Ireland has done.

For the whole experiment in Coleraine is being carried out on the initiative and at the cost of one lady, who has got the means and the heart to dispose of them in this sensible and altogether admirable way. She is a benefactor of the New Testament order, for she keeps herself entirely out of sight. Nobody knows her identity, but the gentleman to whom she has entrusted the responsibility of executing her plans is Mr. R. Huie, a leading business man in Coleraine, who was Mr. Moody's host there and showed him over the new premises.

What the name of the establishment is to be has not been decided; but Mr. Moody's suggestion that it should be called the Coleraine Coffee Palace is a good one. For there will be a bar and restaurant, where tea, coffee, and many non-alcoholic refreshments will be supplied. It will also be in the nature of a social club, whither the country folks and the town folks can resort and transact business, or spend the time in innocent recreative ways. The plans have been framed on a generous and attractive basis; the place, we believe, will be made as pleasant as it ought to be, and carried on as cheaply as self-support will allow. If the publicans are not beat on their own ground, it will not be the fault of the promoters of this excellent hostelry.

The crux of the thing lies in the stabling arrangements. These appear to be on quite a gigantic scale for such a small town; but we understand that it is an important marketing centre, and there are markets four days a week. There will be stabling for about 200 horses, with due accommodation for the vehicles. Everything is well ventilated and according to the most approved pattern, and there are ample concomitant conveniences. Mr. Moody and the other friends who looked through the place were simply delighted.



One feature of this modern hostelry ought not to be omitted. When country people visit these rural towns, no lack is more felt than of some quiet, safe, and attractive resort where ladies can go and rest or wait while their brothers or husbands are transacting business in the market-place. Coleraine is to have that lack removed. Rooms are being fitted up in the new Coffee Palace, at considerable expense, where ladies will find repose and refreshment such as they will appreciate.

As we have already observed, let would-be benefactors to their fellows, and stewards of wealth, go and do likewise. Instead of leaving their means to be squandered or misappropriated after they are dead, let them give it while they are alive, and can make sure that their wishes shall be attended to. If any reader desires hints or further information, let him or her apply to Mr. R. Huie, grain merchant, Coleraine, Ireland. G. R.

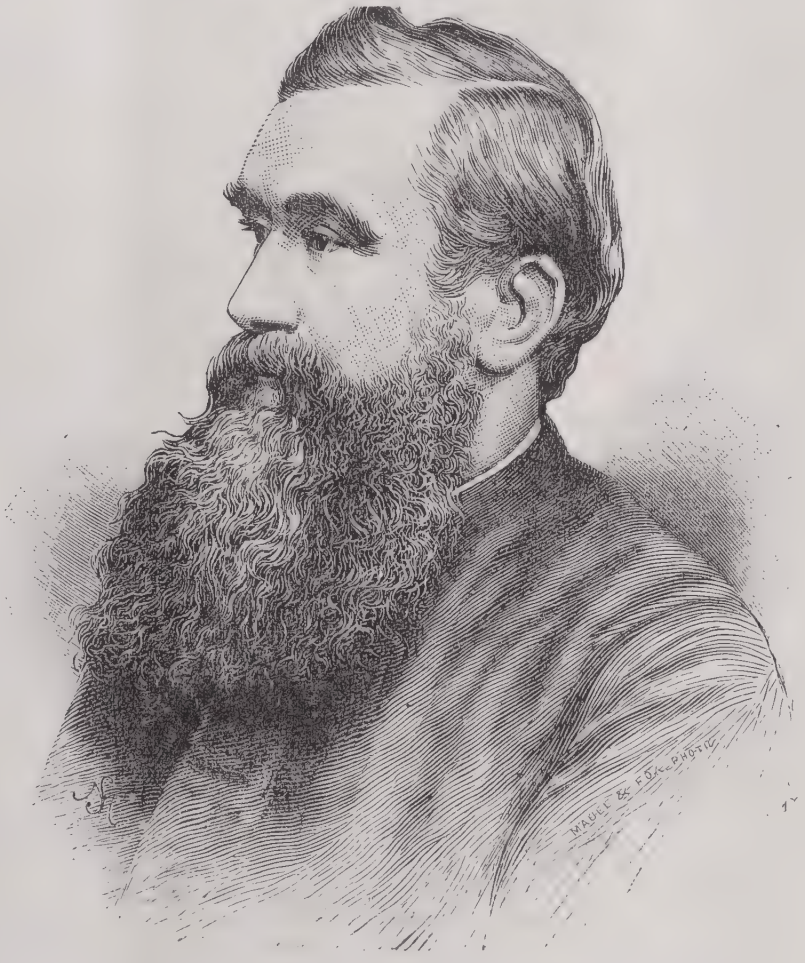
THE LIVINGSTONIA MISSION.

Dr. Steele, of the Livingstonia Mission, Nyassaland, reports in his quarterly letter a further advance among the now peaceable Zulu tribe, the Ngoni. Another chief, Mperembè, had been gained over. Dr. Steele, accompanied by Mr. M'Callum, before the departure of the latter on furlough, visited the lately fighting, superstitious African. The messenger who preceded them with a gift was told to leave it at some distance off, lest there should be "medicine" in the parcel to harm or to kill. Only one other chief now remains in Ngoniland to open his kraal to the Gospel. The people are eager for instruction, and Dr. Steele calls for more missionaries, adding, "I have another item of interest which will rejoice all who prayed and laboured for the mission in Ngoniland, and the Church could not better show its love and gratitude than by sending more workers.

"We had lately a memorable Sunday at Njuyu, when in the midst of a crowded audience nine persons stood up publicly professing their faith in Jesus, and, renouncing heathenism with its superstitions, were received by baptism into the Church. Eight of them are males, and all teachers; the ninth is a woman, and the wife of our head teacher, one of our first converts. She is the first of our Ngoni women to take this step; others are fast following. One gratifying thing, too, is the fact that she can read the Scriptures and write. On the same Sabbath the Lord's Supper was dispensed, and thus a day of joyful remembrance was brought to a close. The native church now numbers eleven at Njuyu—a little company; but it will grow, as every fresh addition will lead others to consider their ways.

"A Bible-class — or hearers' class, as it is called at Bandawé—was resumed some time ago, and the success has been satisfactory. One day is for men, another for women. The thought forces itself upon one at times that many of the people imagine that the way of salvation is by going to school and learning to read the words of God. But the hearers' class removes this impression, and there they are shown that all, learned and unlearned alike, must love, trust, and follow Jesus Christ. Those sufficiently instructed in this class may, on their applying and being considered fit, be allowed to enter the catechumens' class. Some attending this class are undoubtedly in earnest about the things of God. Many under the influence of the mission have lost faith in their own beliefs, such as sacrificing cattle and praying to the departed spirits. It may be done by some of them above referred to, but more from respect to custom and fear of others than from any real belief in it. Many of the ridiculous notions of the white man's power are being slowly undermined. A few days ago a number of the late chief's wives came to visit me and beg cloth. They came to beg cloth, but instead they received a good sound sermon."

REV. SAMUEL MATEER, F.L.S.,



MISSIONARY IN TRAVANCORE, SOUTH INDIA.

THE veteran servant of God whose portrait we give to-day is known throughout the whole native state of Travancore as "the poor man's missionary," and is, perhaps, the best selection that could be made to illustrate what is meant by "a good all-round missionary." Versatility and adaptiveness, freedom from cranks which waste time and consume a man's best powers of thought, are qualities which in the run of years bring the greatest amount of success. In Christian countries a man may flash, meteor-like, through the community and in a short time raise many to a higher level of the Divine life. In heathen lands, the man who can be patiently active achieves most. He must be a self-forgetful man, who thinks not of fame, but is absorbed in efforts for the good of the dark souls around, one who is terribly earnest and alive to the spiritual destitution of heathendom, who tends the flock carefully, observing growth, thinking of how each nascent development of the new life may be strengthened and utilised for further effort and advancement, conning cautiously the possibilities in the various grades of caste and how one race may be benefited without any detriment to another which lives beside it. Where only one tribe or race is dealt with, it is easier to proceed. But the question of uniting into one harmonious fellowship people whose ancestors for centuries have been held apart by the inexorable decrees of caste or by racial distinctions is one of which we can but faintly understand the difficulty. When opportunities long looked for arrive, the patient toiler must be fired with zeal and energy equal to the occasion, and plans born of experience and knowledge must be carried to a successful issue. Above all, the missionary must be ever conscious that the all-present, ever-working Spirit is his active co-partner and guide. To maintain this consciousness amidst the deadening influences of heathen life, and deprived of that communion with God's people which a Christian country affords, is very difficult. Significant proof of this is afforded by the frequent shortening of the period which societies allow their missionaries to remain abroad without taking furlough. These requirements find expression in the career under our notice.

The following brief résumé of Mr. MATEER'S services can at best possess only the significance of a "half-told tale," and conveys no idea of the real life—the constant work under pressure of discouragements, anxieties, hopes at best partly realised, failures sometimes feared, often unexpected, the sense of utter loneliness, which is keenest when trying to climb some mountainous difficulty, and the temptation to give way to those pessimistic thoughts which open the gate to despair.

SAMUEL MATEER was born at Belfast. On his conversion at the age of sixteen he became an active worker in the Sunday-school, in cottage meetings, and other forms of usefulness. Becoming specially interested in China, he made an offer to the London Missionary Society for service in that country. When his period of study at Bedford was over there was no opening in the China Mission, so he was sent to Travancore, in South India. The labour he has been able to perform and the successes achieved, show that the directors were divinely guided in this appointment. Mr. and Mrs. MATEER left England in October, 1858, and five days after his arrival in Pareychaley he took charge of that large district, then comprising eighty-one congregations, forty-eight schools, and four thousand three hundred native Christians. In September, 1861, just as the work had become familiar, and preaching in the Tamil language easy, Mr. MATEER had the districts of Trevandrum and Quilon added to that of Pareychaley. This meant an increase of twenty-two congregations, seventeen schools, and 1,600 Christians scattered over an area about the size of Kent. Here also an additional language, the Malayalam, had to be acquired in the midst of incessant activities, and in this treble charge he worked until March, 1863, when the Rev. G. O. Newport relieved him of the care of Pareychaley.

Whilst Mr. MATEER has regarded it his first duty and pleasure to preach to the people in their own languages, he has laid himself out for vernacular work in every form, literary, educational, and pastoral. In 1867 he published a volume of Tamil sermons, and in 1875 a similar one in Malayalam, for the help of native preachers and young missionaries. He also edited for three years a Malayalam magazine for children, besides preparing lessons in botany in the Tamil tongue and sundry tracts and minor productions for various classes. In 1868 the illness of Mrs. MATEER necessitated a visit to England, where he preached and lectured much, and prepared his first book on Travancore, entitled "The Land of Charity."

After another period of active service Mr. MATEER was ordered home in 1881. The extreme debility from which he suffered was removed after a period of rest at Bournemouth. He utilised this time in the preparation of his book, "Native Life in Travancore."

During this later period of service, although the congregations and schools had very largely increased, yet his familiarity with the native languages and the details of pastoral superintendence enabled him to devote a considerable proportion of his time to evangelistic work among the caste people in the form of lectures on the life of Christ, illustrated by lantern pictures and lyrics in native metres and tunes, accompanied by a band of youthful musicians. Three reading rooms were also opened in the Trevandrum District and one in Quilon. They do duty as club-houses, and afford opportunities for the missionary to get at and influence the higher classes of the Hindu population. During this time also his latest work, "The Gospel in South India," was published. In the early part of 1891, after a serious illness, Mr. MATEER was sent home by medical advice, furlough being at the same time due by the recent regulations of the Society.

By the side of the work of Mr. MATEER among the caste population should be put the story of his loving help to the poorest and most degraded of the people. Up to the time Mr. MATEER assumed charge of the mission, the barbarous people in the northern parts of Pareychaley, such as Pulayars, Vedars, Kuravars, and Hillmen, had almost escaped the notice of the missionaries. Their condition was such as people in England cannot realise. The Christians among these people have lifted a corner of the veil and show us somewhat of the state in which Mr. Mateer found them. "We were slaves both to men and demons. The grossest tyranny under which our masters kept us, and the services of blinded bondage which they exacted from us before the light of Christianity shone upon us, are known to all. Having no independence, we wandered among forests and jungles as wild beasts. We worshipped the sun as our chief god, and were given up to gross idolatry. We were houseless, wandering savages, having no fields nor any property, and quite unable to appreciate any good work. In short we were counted as dogs, being called by the degraded name of Puliars."

The pressure of work from such an immense district would have been counted by many a sufficient reason for not turning aside from the work already taken from other hands to care for these poor savages. But the true missionary spirit is shown by the fact that when Mr. Mateer's sympathetic heart went out to these miserable ones, he counted not the cost, but followed them into the jungles and forests fearless of the risks and regardless of the discomforts, and persistently toiled for their enlightenment. The details of this work cannot be told here, or the varied and curious duties which fell upon him. Although unfeeling people thought he was going out of his way to trouble about such, and nicknamed him "Pula-padre," the Lord has honoured him with remarkable success, and all classes of native Christians unite in calling him "the Apostle of the down-trodden races."

Mr. Mateer did not think his work done by the proclamation of the Gospel. His practical nature seized upon everything calculated to help in the uplifting of these people. Let the people speak for themselves.

"You did not disdain to enter our hovels and know all our social and domestic life with a view to improve it."

This by no means exhausts the blessings conveyed at the hands of Mr. Mateer to these outcasts, and he pursued his efforts in their behalf until all the rights and privileges enjoyed by the highest were accorded to them, and they were made eligible for all forms of Government service.

It is surprising that so much success has been achieved in Trevandrum and district with the limited means and very small accommodation for worship. In the capital the handsome little chapel will scarce hold half of the ordinary congregation, while it is utterly insufficient for district gatherings of Christians for united communion, or missionary lectures and evangelistic meetings, without any space being allowed to heathen who might desire to be present. In other districts, especially Nagercoil, there are buildings suitable for these purposes.

It is absolutely essential that this district, comprising nearly 10,000 Christians, should have a building with a seating capacity of more than 200; and the modest intention of these people is to double the size of the present chapel and renew the roof at a cost of £250, out of which the congregation has already raised, with some self-denial, the sum of £30. Mr. Mateer feels that this is the most urgent want of the mission, for in Travancore, where the classes of society are so diverse, so mutually antagonistic and repellent, that personal contact or even close approach to certain classes is regarded as polluting, people ought not to be unnecessarily crowded, especially Hindu visitors. This account would be incomplete without reference to the loving and indefatigable exertions of Mrs. and Miss Mateer in school work, as well as in other branches of missionary labour. It must be remembered that at present more than half the population can only be directly reached by lady agents.

Mr. Mateer has always paid great attention to the improvement of the service of song in Divine worship. He compiled and edited a collection of Malayalam hymns in the usual English metres, and also lyrics in Indian metres and tunes. The first edition, published in 1866, contained only thirty-six lyrics. The sixth edition, in 1890, has a fine collection of 250 pieces, and is highly popular throughout Travancore.

Before leaving, he prepared elementary lessons in Tonic Sol-fa in Malayalam and Miss Mateer published nineteen Indian tunes in staff notation.

We cannot enumerate the many local appointments held by this busy missionary. For many years he has been a member and secretary of the Malayalam Bible Revision Committee, and he has also helped forward the work of other societies. Our first duty now is to pray the Lord of the harvest to restore to health this noble worker, and send him forth to a richer gathering of souls than he has yet made.

The chief impression gained even by a cursory review of the labours of Mr. Mateer, is that in his stalwart frame we perceive an equally strong spirit, burning with zeal, filling year after year with intense activity, yet in simple humility acknowledging himself the slave and debtor of Jesus Christ. The raison d'être of his missionary career can be thus expressed :—

"End of my every action, Thou
In all things may I see;
Accept my hallowed labours now,
I do them unto Thee."

NATIONAL PROTESTANT CONGRESS. — The official programme of the National Protestant Congress which met last year at Brighton, and which is to hold its meeting this year at Portsmouth, from October 17 to 20 inclusive, has been issued. The subjects include the following:—"Protestantism," "The Testimony of our Lord to the Old Testament Scriptures," "Romanism, the death-blow of Liberty," "Protestant and Romish Missions contrasted," "Rome unchanged," "The progress of Priestcraft during the last half-century," "The Revival of true Religion." Among the speakers will be—Revs. Canon Bell, D.D., Charles H. Waller, D.D., Canon O'Connor, Joseph O'Shea, D.D., Clement Clemance, D.D., J. Gelson Gregson, W. Darlow Sarjeant, and Verner White, D.D., Sir Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B., Sir Robert Lighton, Colonel Sandys, M.P., Mr. James Inskip, Dr. Barnardo, etc. Ladies' meetings in connection with the Woman's Protestant Union will be held during the Congress week

THE PRINCE OF PREACHERS.*

THE GRACE OF FAITH.

It is time that attention be drawn to that which by the grace of God, made him, more than anything else, the mighty power he was as a witness to the truth. We refer to faith in him considered both as a gift and a grace. We draw the distinction between grace and gift in respect of faith; for the two by no means necessarily inhere in the same subject; nor where they co-exist do they necessarily do so in like proportions. It would appear that the gift of faith may exist where the grace of it is unknown (see Matt. vii. 22, 23, and 1 Cor. xiii. 2). On the other hand, while the grace of faith always carries along with it some measure of the gift, that measure may be so exceeding small that even the grain of mustard seed may seem a mountain in comparison. How often does faith shine as a grace, while as a gift it has no lustre! Some who rely absolutely on Christ's redeeming blood, know little or nothing of faith as a relative power. It is beyond them to attempt great things for God, or to count on great things from Him. They could not stand on the sublime heights of faith as a gift, like Joshua, who, according to exact astronomical reckoning, dared to suspend the calendar for twenty-three hours and twenty minutes. They have never said to yonder mountain, "Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the depths of the sea." Strong by faith as to the Gospel ground of pardon, they are not strong as witnesses—not strong, Elijah-like, in the faith that can, at will, shut and open the heavens.

Mr. Spurgeon was strong in faith in both connections. The grace of faith was mature in him. Had it been otherwise, the evidence would have appeared; for nothing is more easily betrayed than the little faith of a gracious soul. Where assurance is lacking, the sigh, the tear, the groan, the note of uncertainty as to the final issue, the shadow on the countenance—these and such like things will bespeak it. Alas! how many gracious souls languish out half their days in Doubting Castle!—"cellar Christians," as the negro defined them, instead of "house-top" ones.

Now, in common with not a few, who could not otherwise compare with him, Mr. Spurgeon had an intense personal hold on the Gospel foundation. He believed through grace that Jesus "was delivered on account of his offences, and raised again on account of his justification"; or, as he loved to put it, "because his justification was complete." To God be all the glory of this! Assurance is the standard principle of faith; and with its attainment natural endowments have nothing to do. That this gifted man had his habitation in this region we have every reason to believe. He knew the forgiveness of sins; he had the taste of pardon in his mouth, and the joy of it in his heart: in Christ he stood complete.

The reflex value of this upon his ministry cannot be told. In listening to his sermons the felt presence of the grace of assurance seemed to be everywhere. One could detect it in the joy of the Lord, which was his strength; in the accent of conviction that rang in the proclamation of the glad tidings; and in the skill with which he could deal with cases and make the way plain to those in need of guidance. While we distinguish between the grace and the gift of faith, we question if faith as a gift ever takes rank as a soul-winning power by itself alone; or, where the grace of faith is of low degree. "Upon this rock," says Christ, "will I build my Church"—not on Peter's confession only, but on that confession as the outbreathing of the man in Christ. It is through faith the Holy Spirit is pleased generally to work faith. Where the preacher's interest in the Gospel is ardent, there is a certain contagion attaching to his communication. He can then say "My Gospel"; and the very fact that he can say it is one reason why the Gospel comes "not in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance."

RATNAGIRI.—It is reported that on Sunday, July 3, a young man of the Bhandari caste was baptized in the Presbyterian Church at Ratnagiri. The hou was crowded with spectators, and after the servic his Hindu relatives made a violent effort to take him to their house. Quiet was restored only by the coming of the police superintendent and the presence of his men.

THE WORLD'S FIELD.

For all practical purposes there is no child of the King who has not a corner in this vast labouring ground. Idlers, who at this "eleventh hour," are still needing to heed the stirring call of the Lord of the Vineyard, "Why stand ye here all the day idle?" and further bidding them, "Go work to-day in My vineyard"—may now well rise up and respond. Many are heard to lament, "I cannot go forth." Granted that is even so. What then? Is not a corner of work lying close at your elbow? What about that portion of "The World's Field" still untouched by you? That which comes within the sphere of your influence, and which does not necessitate your "going forth," but only an abiding sense of the claims and responsibilities of work ready to your hand. Let us not err in thinking such claims insignificant, and therefore to be ignored. They are God-sent. Being unmistakably such, shall we not see to it to-day that we joyfully apply our God-given powers to the fulfilling of that which lies nearest to every one of us?

How often do we hear "home-claims" discussed, as though there were any doubt of their legitimate hold upon us! But oh, what a field is here, what untold work to be done with tact and unobtrusiveness! Could anything be clearer? Who p'aced us where we are—in our exact positions and surroundings, amid present circumstances? Surely He, who is all-wise and cannot err—He who has his child's best interests at heart. Do we feel in our present sphere misunderstood? Then let us be assured, once for all, that to do the work He has assigned us, and fulfil his intentions regarding us, it is not necessary—though very delightful—to be fully understood. Some are, it may be, craving for this, forgetful of the fact that our Leader Himself was never fully understood, yet did He accomplish the work given Him to do, and has handed down his everlasting sympathy to his brethren who suffer in like manner.

Perhaps the work for our doing is that which lies distastefully close to us, and so often is neglected in the straining after other more noticeable and congenial work. Can we, dare we, pick and choose, and trifle lightly with his commands whom we have chosen to reign over us? He also has chosen us to be vessels meet for use in his own way, and has divinely appointed our work and surroundings. Is it whispered, What waste of spiritual energy upon unheeding and unspiritual minds? Put the suggestion far away, for there is no waste in God's kingdom, and amongst other things even this is, in the end, made to praise Him, though the process may be slow. There, where the work is so quietly done, and done as the natural and "nexte thynge" to be done, is often where it is the deepest, and bears most lasting result.

How encouraged, then, should those be who perhaps have felt the call, "Go ye into all the world," and in the joy of acknowledging that command have left unnoticed, or partially so, the equally imperative part of the "orders"—"beginning at Jerusalem." Then when the earnest heart—so eagerly longing to "go"—has been "hedged in" by what were thought to be "difficulties," hindrances, or "stumbling-blocks," the latter command of the "home-work" to be done first has been revealed in full force, and the "marching orders" placed in their proper degree. So, often, "The World's Field" to some may be "beginning," continuing, and ending at Jerusalem, without much opportunity of reaching or "going forth" to other and distant parts of the field. Yet who shall say to what circle this quiet ministry does not reach of those who have found that the "home" land, lying so close, presents such a wide range of possibilities, and field of earnest, diligent work probably undreamed of in other days?

To those who have seen and recognised their Lord's appointing in the order of work, as in all other things, comes great encouragement. "For this cause we faint not," and though often the surroundings and circumstances are not such that we can rejoice in, or in our poor blindness should have chosen for ourselves, nevertheless are they our Father's appointed bit of "The World's Field," where by-and-by the results will be to the praise and glory of God, possibly in greater proportion than if we had been given our heart's desire, and placed out of uncongenial surroundings, amid the bustle of work of pleasanter character, more calculated to attract the praise of men. For "God seeth not as man seeth." Only let us be up and doing; and at once! The need is great, the time is short.

And the least we do for Jesus
Will be precious in his sight.

INDIANS IN CANADA.

THE N.Y. Independent says in the course of an interesting article:—

One of the "foreign" missions carried on by the Presbyterian Church in Canada is that among the Indians of the North-West. The work lies wholly within the limits of Manitoba and the North-West Territories, where there is an Indian population of 25,743. According to the last returns of the Indian department these are classified, so far as religious belief is concerned, as follows:—Protestant, 8,086; Roman Catholic, 3,459; Pagan, 11,566. From this it appears that, while missions have done much for the aborigines, more than half their number have not yet been reached by the influence of the Gospel.

The difficulties of the work are neither few nor small. The Indian is essentially superstitious. This characteristic has been taken advantage of by the Roman Catholic Church to influence the red man. The influence of the native medicine man is also very great, and as it is invariably exerted in opposition to the missionary, it is a serious obstacle to the work.

There are sixteen industrial schools in the North-west, of which eight are under the control of the Presbyterian Church. Last winter five were filled to their full capacity, as determined by the Government school inspector. In addition to the simple instruction in the English branches, the girls are taught to sew, weave cloth and other useful household arts. The boys are taught gardening and handicrafts which will be of service on the farm.

The Presbyterian Church has eleven missions and six ordained missionaries, some of whom have a considerable proportion of Indian blood. They are assisted by twenty-one missionary agents, such as teachers, matrons of the industrial schools, etc. There are eleven Sunday schools, with 284 scholars, and in some places the Indian children attend the regular English Sunday schools. The Indian communicants number 196. At Bird Tail there is a full session of Indian elders. Prayer-meetings are held at many points, and it is affecting to hear the simple prayers of some of the people in their native language.

The pioneer of this work was Rev. Jas. Nisbet, who laid its foundation at Prince Albert, on the South Saskatchewan, twenty-five years ago. He died in 1874. Rev. John McKay, Nisbet's brother-in-law, and his interpreter at the outset, may be considered the Nestor of the mision. He was a native of Edmonton, and being one of themselves, probably knew more of the Indian character, and how to deal with him, than any other man. His recent death was a serious loss. One of the best friends the missionaries have is the old chief, Mistawasis, who, with his band, occupy a reserve forty miles north of Duck Lake, a name familiar in connection with the last rebellion. He is over eighty years of age, and has been for upward of ten years a church member. Previous to his conversion he was a great war chief and hunter, and practised polygamy. On his conversion he put away his second wife, and with his first wife was baptized. There is a population on his reserve of 168. The men and women come to church neatly clad and wholly free from the usual unkempt appearance of the Indian. They sing their hymns in Cree, led by an organ, the gift of a church in Toronto. Many of them have regular family worship.

Steps have been taken to establish a mission among the Indians of British Columbia, who number about 34,000. Something has been done for them in the past by other churches, but it is now proposed to deal with them as a regular branch of the work, and the first missionary has been sent.

Contrary to the generally prevailing opinion, the Indian population of Canada is increasing in numbers, and it is evident that where they abandon their nomadic habits and adopt the white man's manner of living they increase. Civilisation does not decimate them, but has the contrary effect.

THE AMERICAN SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION gives very encouraging reports of its work for the past year. One thousand and sixty-four Sunday-schools, with fifty-nine thousand scholars, have been organised in places otherwise destitute of all religious advantages. Aid was given to over ten thousand other schools, besides six thousand Bibles and nine thousand Testaments were given or sold. The missionaries report over six thousand conversions and two hundred and sixteen churches have been developed. Who can estimate the wide-reaching results of this one-year's work?

MR. MOODY'S BIBLE INSTITUTE.

I WAS much interested in reading the notes in your issue for August 18, on this noble Institute, referring especially to the male students' portion of the establishment. With your permission, I should like to add a few words on the other half of the Institute, which is devoted to female students, where I had the privilege last winter of spending some weeks as a guest.

This portion occupies three adjoining houses opening on to La Salle-avenue. It is the dwelling-place of about fifty female students, young ladies varying greatly in character, determination, gifts and education, but all united in the one desire to be of service to the Saviour, who has loved them and given himself for them.

The household is governed, and "mothered," in the true sense of the word, by Mrs. Capron, formerly for many years a missionary in India, who now brings all her varied experience, her practical good sense, and intense love of souls, to aid in perfecting the Institute as a home for workers. "I want," she said, "all my girls to look on this house as the model of a Christian home. I want all the details to be such that they can look back upon it as their example for their after life." And this aim is admirably fulfilled.

The greater part of the housework is undertaken by the students, some attending to the sitting-rooms, others to the staircases, etc., others to the meals, and interchanging week by week, so that the work falls heavily on no one. All the work is done heartily "as unto the Lord." If there had been twenty hired servants in the house there could not have been greater punctuality, clean'iness, or nicety in all its arrangements. And then the workers were so cheerful, even in the hardest time of the year—the depths of a very cold winter. It was pleasant to see the bright, happy faces gathered round the breakfast table in the early morning. After breakfast we gathered for family prayers, where the part-singing, to which Mr. Moody pays so much attention, was a great treat, and the feast from God's own Word and prayer sent us out prepared for the work of the day.

All the students attended the morning lectures in the men's department, returning for the mid-day meal. After dinner all gathered for a few minutes in the sitting-room, while Mrs. Capron gave us the text for the day, followed by prayer. The afternoon was spent in writing out notes, taking extra lectures, or singing classes, or visiting in their allotted districts. On one afternoon in the week a mothers' meeting is taken at the Chicago Avenue Church, and constant are the rejoicings over souls won to Christ in that meeting. In the evening (except on Saturday) nearly all scatter to their mission work in different parts of the city; only Mrs. Capron and her loving helper, Miss Strong, usually remaining ready to help with tender sympathy and counsel any who came to them.

The whole spirit of the Home is that of Christian love. My friend, Mrs. Walker, and myself arrived as complete strangers, but nothing could exceed the kindness of our welcome. The whole household made us feel at home at once, and all entered heartily into sympathy with our special errand in Chicago, the extension of the Christian Police Association. In the house one felt that the Lord was reigning. During our stay I never heard one cross or murmuring word, or saw one sign of inconsistent conduct.

In Chicago all nations meet, and during the next two years there will be exceptional openings for bringing the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ to visitors and immigrants both from the east and the west. Workers, filled with the love of God and desiring experience in mission work, combined with Bible teaching, could not do better than spend some months in the Institute, where, if accepted, they can board at moderate cost. All particulars may be learned on application to Mrs. S. B. Capron, 232, La Salle-avenue, Chicago, U.S.A.

Yours truly, in the Lord's service,

CATHERINE GURNEY.

RIO HARBOUR MISSION.—All who take an interest in our seamen will be glad to hear that the Lord has raised up one chosen and fitted by Himself to succeed Mr. Wesson, who died at his post of yellow fever at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in March last. Mr. Williams sails for Rio, God willing, on Wednesday next, 14th inst. Prayer is earnestly asked for God's protecting care, and that wisdom may be given him to counteract Romish superstition and intolerance, and every other form of evil, by preaching Christ. A brief memoir of Edward E. Wesson will be forwarded to any one desiring it, by applying to Colonel Hobbs, Carlisle, Hon. Sec. of the "Wesson Rio Harbour Mission."

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

The annual narrative of this excellent mission gives many cheering incidents, illustrating the genuine results of the work. The retirement through ill-health of the devoted superintendent, Mr. George Hatton, who for so many years has laboured unceasingly and fruitfully, is recorded with deep regret; all will, however, feel well assured that the appointment of his faithful co-worker, Mr. William Wheatley, as his successor is a satisfactory guarantee that "the whole circle of operations will be carried on in the spirit and with the vigour which have hitherto characterised the work and the workers."

In opening, the committee say: "The year that has closed has not been without its trials and anxieties, yet we have much to praise God for; and as we look back on all the way He hath led us, we can humbly and devoutly 'render unto Him the glory due unto his name.'

With mercy and with judgment, the web of time He wove.
And aye the dews of sorrow were luster'd with his love.

We thank Him for the band of devoted workers who have been gathered round us; we praise Him for their steady continuance in well-doing; we bless his holy name for the access granted to hearts and homes, and for the many souls saved, and render devout gratitude for the hearts stirred to provide the funds necessary for the carrying on of the far-reaching and widely diversified operations connected with the St. Giles' Christian Mission."

These agencies may be conveniently grouped under five leading heads, though each includes many branches:—1, the General Mission work; 2, the important work among the Children; 3, the Prisoners' Mission and Home; 4, the Boys' Homes and Preventive work; 5, the Women's Homes and Rescue work.

Details, with many instances of blessing, follow with regard to each of these branches, but here we cannot possibly enter upon particulars. Suffice it that the mission chapel with its various branch mission halls are shown to be in full operation, and to have been much blessed both outdoors and indoors. The six Sunday schools associated with the mission are reported on by Mr. Goodwin. The average attendance has been 1,464, while many cheering tokens have been granted of real result.

The prisoners' branch, the preventive work among lads, and the women's rescue work and home, have been remarkably fruitful in winning souls from sin and crime. The possibilities are, humanly speaking, only limited by the prosaic question of funds. The cases given prove that very many have been rescued, and are now leading honest and industrious lives, who, but for the helping hand lent by this mission, must have gone on treading helplessly the sad downward course.

The report concludes in these words:—"We thank God for souls saved, wanderers reclaimed, criminals reformed, fallen ones rescued, and despairing misery relieved. We thank God for our willing and devoted workers, and for our generous and sympathising friends; but we also, in looking forward, realise that much remains to be done, that the need is great and pressing, that still lost and endangered ones are calling for help and pity, and, in recording the past, we desire with all earnestness to enlist general and hearty aid for the future. The workers are full of hope, knowing what God has done among the poor and perishing, the criminal and fallen, the children and the adults, by means of the Mission; but they wait hopefully and eagerly for the supply of the funds, which in such a service are so absolutely necessary for its effective prosecution. We venture to believe they will not look in vain for the liberal aid of those who know how great is the need in poverty-stricken and sin-blighted St. Giles's and how richly the efforts already put forth have been rewarded. The work is great, and the necessity for large and liberal aid is peculiarly pressing. We ask prayer and sympathy, and we ask also generous gifts that this mission work may go on winning many from sin and sorrow, and lightening in no small degree the misery and vice of this great city." Full information may be had of the Superintendent, Mr. William Wheatley, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

A CHINESE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.—In connection with the Bukit Timah congregation near Singapore, there are thirty little attap-roofed houses scattered about in the jungle in which there is no idol, no opium and no gambling. These thirty houses and small plots of ground adjoining, planted with pepper, are owned by Christians, and represent a small Christian community of considerably over a hundred people, men, women, and children. The catechist visits the people in their homes, and they are regular in their attendance on Sundays at the services. Whenever the missionary (Mr. Cook) goes there, over forty of them gather for a noon-day service

THE PRISONS OF NORWAY.

Sailing from Southampton to Hamburg en route for Norway, I was enabled to call at H.M. Prison, Portsmouth, and visit a convict in whom I am interested. He has been in prison nineteen years out of a life sentence, and when I visited him some year or two ago it was the first visit he had received for sixteen years.

Two of the men convicted with him—also for life—who were the principals in the crime, have been released, and I am petitioning the Home Secretary on his behalf. His brother is a clergyman in America, and I have good hopes that he himself has been brought to the truth since his imprisonment. I may add that his offence was one against property, and the sentence was considered a very harsh one. His character during his nineteen years' imprisonment has been most exemplary.

At Christiania, we found in the fortress 191 criminals well cared for and tolerably well fed. In one cell I counted sixteen books, besides a Bible and a Scripture roll, hanging on the wall. In the church a beautiful picture of Christ, with the text, "Come unto Me," was hanging under the pulpit; whilst above was an equally good representation of the Prodigal Son in the arms of the Father. The whole place was thoroughly clean. M. Richard Petersen, the governor, was away; he has been able to pay particular attention to the importance of the cells in the Norwegian prisons being as airy and light as possible. He has more than once protested against the inhumanity of "caging" persons in small and dark cells, which only tends to drive men mad. Great care is exercised in seeking to bring every prisoner under distinct spiritual teaching and influence, with the result that large numbers of those who are discharged do not return to their criminal practices, and are not seen in prison again. When England acts upon these lines she may reckon on similar success!

At Bergen we visited the miniature model prison, containing some twenty-seven inmates. It was a picture of cleanliness, and the governor, who had been recently appointed, was certainly a good specimen of a courteous Norwegian. A Christian and an abstainer, his influence was seen throughout the gaol, and he rejoiced at seeing others interested like himself in the reform of criminals.

I find to my great astonishment that there are (apart from convicts) something less than 320 prisoners in the whole of Norway. This is phenomenal; and thus this country must certainly have—in proportion—the least number of criminals of any in the world.

Norway was formerly one of the most drunken countries in Europe, but in more recent years it has become an exemplary temperate nation. The reason is that all who are licensed to deal in the spirit trade are bound to pay the whole of their profits to the municipality, less 5 per cent., and, added to this, the sale of alcohol and the proportion of its vendors have been placed under the control of the wishes of the population of each particular district. The result is, that drunkenness and crime are much less frequent than formerly. Thus there are comparatively few prisoners, and a considerable revenue is yielded to the municipality for the support of the improvident classes. The sale of spirits is entirely prohibited on Sundays, and after five p.m. on Saturdays.

At Trondhjem, in the north, we went through the gaol, and thought it had a home-like appearance. The Governor had, from his own garden, supplied each ward with flowers; hanging on the walls were portraits of the mothers, wives, and sisters of the prisoners; whilst in one or two cases I noticed musical instruments, evidently the property of the men, and here and there was a cat purring against the legs of a convict. The Governor had one serious fault to point out to us, viz., that there was no Criminal Lunatic Asylum in Norway—hence it became necessary to keep in solitary confinement continually those who were insane.

In one of the cells here we saw one poor deranged prisoner, and for whom we could but feel very sorry. There are only thirty criminal lunatics in all Norway, but though the Governor has several times called attention to this needed reform, yet the Government plead poverty as their reason for not building so essential an institution.

On the whole, I have been pleased with what I have seen here, specially with the fact that each prisoner is supplied with the Word of God, and that the Gospel is brought to bear with evident success upon the life and character of all the prisoners.

FIRST FRUITS.—The first-fruits of the Berlin East African Missionary Society was lately baptized at Tanga. He was a refugee who had been ransomed by the missionaries, and he is distinguished both by intelligence and earnestness in pursuing the Christian course.

RABBI LICHTENSTEIN.

I send you the latest information about Rabbi Lichtenstein, knowing that many of your readers are deeply interested in his person and work. During the time that his latest literary production (now ready for the press) has been nearing its completion, the conviction has grown upon him that the period has nearly come, when it will be desirable and more consistent, to sever his connection with the Synagogue, and give up his position as officiating Rabbi.

The Mission Directors of the Irish Presbyterian Church, hearing of the Rabbi's present attitude, and being convinced of his conversion, his zeal and love for Christ, have, at their meeting in August, unanimously appointed him to work with us in Hamburg. This information will be gratifying to those who were hitherto concerned about the Rabbi's temporal affairs, and also to those who know that Hamburg is a splendid field for his operations. We earnestly solicit the prayers of Christ's disciples for the Rabbi and his future work.

Rabbi Lichtenstein is a unique character in modern church history. Since he took an open stand for Christ his faith and rectitude have been tried in the severest manner. Only a short time ago he wrote me that if Job's tempter was skilful in the use of instruments of torture, his tempters were not less inventive in invective. First he had to sacrifice his earthly all, then he experienced the keen pangs of spiritual separation from one of his nearest and dearest. Further, when comparative poverty and the loss, in a measure, of his domestic peace did not weaken, but rather tended to deepen and strengthen, the roots of his conviction and devotion to his Saviour, the glitter of gold and promise of affluence tried to blind his clear vision of truth and rob this Samson of his curls. A Jewish deputation has, at least, twice offered him a splendid income if he promised not to speak or publish any more about Christ, but no! how could the lipsbe silent, when the heart is full to overflowing? Not only Jews, even Christians' over-zealous Christians, have by munificent offers endeavoured to win him to their ranks; but the truth that has made him free he wishes to proclaim unfettered and in a manner that seems to him to be the most effective one. In all this he has, by God's grace, been more than a conqueror. No wonder then that Jews as well as Christians, from far and near, have gone to Tapio Szele to make his acquaintance.

A good lady in England, who wrote to me last week, said how delighted she would be if she had been privileged to have given Rabbi Lichtenstein that copy of the New Testament which was the means of his conversion. I believe there are many who understand and even share that lady's feeling. The Rabbi's conversion belongs to the past, but we can help him in his endeavours to lead his brethren to Christ, namely, by spreading his writings and publishing those which he has now ready for the press.

There exists a council for the free distribution of the Rabbi's writings, Mr. R. Cory, J.P., Oscar House, Cardiff, being the hon. treasurer, while I am hon. secretary. Many parcels of the booklets have already been sent to missionaries and Christian workers among the Jews, and many more would gladly be forwarded on application.

We have received some generous contributions for this object, but far from what is necessary for a wide circulation of Judaism and Christianity and for the publication of his new work. This is a grand opportunity to help the Rabbi to spread his masterly presentation of the Gospel. The Rabbi says:—"The Jews are awaking out of their long slumber; there is a great stirring amongst them. The iron is hot, let us strike it; let us cast out the precious seeds of truth, that they may bring forth fruits for eternity, and that Christ may be satisfied."—Yours sincerely,

Arnold Frank.

A SUCCESSFUL GOSPELLER.—Dawn, the organ of the Christian Literature Society, gives the following:—I inquired of Mr. Hoskins, an American missionary, as to the large accessions from heathenism in the north-west. His account of the movement was very encouraging. He told me of an old peasant, who, after his conversion, succeeded in committing the first chapter of John's Gospel to heart. After his harvest was gathered in, the old man would go forth, year by year, round the country repeating to the villagers the Gospel he had learnt, and in this manner, during the last eight years, he had brought over 400 of his countrymen to embrace Christianity and receive baptism. His knowledge of the Gospel now extends much beyond the first chapter; and the words he preached so effected his own mind that Mr. Hoskins said the very character of John, the beloved disciple, now shone in his appearance. Such are the men who will bring India to Christ.

Mr. Moody in Ireland.

THE BELFAST MISSION.

Every circumstance of the Belfast meetings has been of the most gratifying sort, with one exception—the weather. From the point of comfort that was about as bad as bad could be during the greater part of last week. Day after day a dull canopy of black clouds overspread the sky, and these emptied themselves out on the city with pitiless perseverance. The visitor from a less humid clime began to wonder if it ever did anything else but rain in Belfast, and he got little satisfaction from catechising the natives. "Yes; it rains pretty often here. The people are accustomed to it, and they do not mind it." So it really seems; for the rain did not very greatly affect the evening attendance at the great wooden pavilion. Let the downpour be as great as it had a mind to, the hall was filled all the same—except perhaps a few seats in out-of-the-way corners. On the Monday evening Mr. Moody said he was glad when he saw the rain, because he knew that those who came would be in earnest, and something would be done. He might have repeated the remark over and over again on successive evenings. More earnest and attentive crowds one could scarcely conceive.

The wet weather not only tested the spirit and temper of the people, but it really appeared to be providential in keeping down the attendance within workable limits. What overflows there would have been, with the inevitable disappointment, if the skies had been sunny, the experience of last Sunday afternoon and evening amply proved. Nine or ten thousand souls is a grand assemblage to be hanging on the lips of one man; especially when all are well within the sound and influence of his voice. This square wooden shed is a masterpiece of construction so far as its acoustic properties go, and Mr. Moody confesses that it is far the best building of its kind he has ever had the privilege of speaking in. The very fact of its being here, at the time when it was needed for this mission, is not the least noteworthy token of a Divine over-ruling hand in the affairs of men that modern Irish history has revealed.

Great crowds flocking to hear a famous preacher is no uncommon spectacle in this curious and novelty-loving age. But the experiences of the past week have shown that curiosity has had little to do with it. On the first Sabbath afternoon I overheard a conversation among a little group of people in the dispersing multitude; it was to the effect that the novelty would soon rub off, and the attraction would cease to a great extent. The remark showed great ignorance both of the eternal, unchanging needs of the human heart and of the glorious provision that God has made in the Gospel of his grace for satisfying these needs. At any rate, whatever motive may have brought the masses of people together night after night, the after meetings have abundantly shown that, as of old, the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation to those who believe.

In his discourses, Mr. Moody has seemed to excel himself every time. Of course, he has no time to frame or evolve new addresses; but there is no need. His sermons have become so interwoven with the very fibre and texture of his being, that every time he speaks he is, as it were, pouring forth the warm blood from his capacious heart, and the hearers become transfused with his simple unquestioning faith and his vivid realisation of the things of God and of the unseen world. In addition to that, his preaching is so far removed from the region of mere theory and ingenious speculation, and is so charged with practical bearing on the daily life of toiling, moiling, sinning, suffering men and women, that it finds its way to the universal mind and conscience by the very momentum of its inherent truthfulness and suitability.

A MEMORABLE SPECTACLE

it has been to see the way in which the ordained ministry of the city and surrounding districts has rallied to the meetings in the Convention Hall. Every evening they have sat in serried ranks along the front of the great platform, listening with interested and concentrated attention to the burning utterances of the evangelist. Their numbers have kept increasing, so that the choir has been pushed backwards to make room for them. It is a pregnant fact in itself that from three to four score of these spiritual leaders of the people, belonging to all Evangelical denominations, have night after night been drinking in the teaching and spirit, and watching the methods by which Mr. Moody gently and skilfully leads the people, through contrition and spiritual concern, on to the great decisive action of the will that we term conversion. As to names and sects and parties, they are totally unknown and disregarded! A stranger looking at the array of gentlemen in clerical attire would not get the faintest hint from their appearance or their speech in prayer to what section of the Church Universal they belong; except in the case of good Archdeacon Seaver, whose ecclesiastical breeches bewray him, but who stands on his church dignity as little as any man who ever had to "perform archidiaconal functions," whatever they may be.

In one of his Bible readings in St. Enoch's Church, Mr. Moody dwelt with unconcealed glee on the growing spirit of manifested unity that now prevails among those of different religious communions. He said he could remember the time when even at a meeting on behalf of the Bible Society no minister could stand up to speak without hedging his position and asserting his denominational fidelity. There was condescension enough in one of those ancient speeches to sink the whole meeting. Nowadays it was very different. Though he was speaking at the moment in a Presbyterian church, Mr. Moody thanked God, greatly to the amusement of everybody, that he had not met a Presbyterian for a long time; ministers of all the churches were known as Christians and nothing more. There is no great daring in the assertion, I imagine, that infinitely more is being done, by this visit of Mr. Moody to our shores, for the real "Reunion of Christendom" than a decade of Grindelwald Conferences can hope to accomplish.

All the ministers are not on the platform, however. There are still some timid gentlemen of the white neckcloth who have not got further than the outside fringe of the crowd. They are of such as belong to "the cult of the jumping cat," to use an expressive if somewhat vulgar simile. If the mission, by any fortuitous mischance, were to fall short of success, they would make haste to justify their cautious attitude and say, "I told you so." Now that fruition is not a matter of doubt, it is to be hoped that they will launch off into the flowing tide and give the movement the benefit of their hearty co-operation, as well as get for themselves the blessing that a mere critical onlooker cannot reasonably expect.

THE AFTER MEETINGS.

Reference has been made to these, but they deserve more detailed notice. These after meetings for inquiry and personal dealing are really the heart and soul of this work, and it is a remarkable thing that the regular pastorate fight so shy of them as a rule. Of course it would be possible to stereotype the after meeting, as the ordinary church service has become largely stereotyped, and been, therefore, shorn of a full half of its spiritual utility. In the Bible Reading I have already alluded, to Mr. Moody observed that one reason why there are so few conversions at the regular church services is the personal strifes that have come in between members of the same church. But he might have given, as a still stronger reason, the absence of any systematic attempt to bring conviction up to the point of conversion. One can suppose that even with Mr. Moody's own powerfully direct and simple Gospel preaching, if he took no steps to garner the fruits there would be comparatively little to show in the way of swelling the rolls of church membership. So long as a man has not "committed" himself in a definite way to the faith and service of Christ, the devil has an excellent chance of retaining him. When will ministers learn this and act accordingly?

It is not an easy matter to manipulate an after-meeting successfully in such gigantic assemblages as those that have crowded the Convention Hall. There is no suitable building near enough to the hall, especially in these wet evenings, into which to draft the anxious and the undecided. So the meetings for inquiry have been held under the same roof as the larger service. The inquiry work began on the Monday evening somewhat unexpectedly. The evangelist had spoken to Christians that evening, and, except indirectly, little had been said to arouse spiritual concern. A meeting for prayer was called at the close. When it was going on, and while requests on behalf of relatives or friends were being presented, a lady rose to say that a sister sitting beside her desired prayer for herself. Quick to seize the opportunity, Mr. Moody voiced the request, and asked if there were not others throughout the building who desired to present themselves for prayer. There were a great many responses. Here was a genuine indication that the Spirit of God had been at work, and with the wisdom born of experience Mr. Moody at once changed the complexion of the proceedings from a prayer meeting to one for personal dealing. After getting a large number of individual responses, he asked all the anxious ones to move across to one corner of the floor, now empty. This was done, and the work of hand-to-hand dealing began. With a good supply of workers the results were most encouraging, and on that first week night the stamp of God's blessing was given by quite a number of decisions. Mr. Moody had thought that probably on such a wet evening only earnest Christians would take the trouble to come, and addressed himself to them. But his Master was better to him even than his expectation, and the reaping work began.

It has gone on in increasing volume every evening since. Perhaps the most apparently fruitful occasion has been on the evening when Mr. Moody preached on the necessity of the new birth. The numbers of those who rose that night to ask a place in the prayers of the believers were so great that all estimate of them was lost. To all human seeming the work of conviction and the spirit of anxious inquiry have been very real. The fruits already gathered have been valuable enough to justify the special effort, but what has been experienced up to the date of writing these lines is only regarded as the first fruits of a blessed and plentiful harvest.

YOUNG MEN'S MEETINGS

are held every evening in Rev. G. Shaw's Presbyterian church near by, at the close of the addresses in the hall. They are chiefly intended for testimony, and with the view of getting the young converts to take a stand among their fellows and open their lips for the Master. They are in charge of Mr. Seagram. On the Wednesday, as Rev. John Robertson, of Gorbals, Glasgow, was passing through the city, he was asked to address the young men. A great company gathered in the church, and listened with the deepest interest to Mr. Robertson's discourse, which was thoroughly characteristic of him. It was a series of illustrative pictures, drawn mostly from his own experience, all told in the most vivid and realistic but homely way, each picture giving emphasis to some thought in connection with the preciousness of Christ as the one who has given his life for the sin of the world. In the later meetings of the week there have been testimonies given by some who had come to the point of decision since the mission began. Inquirers have also been dealt with, and many added to the roll of the converts.

One of those who testified at the first meeting for young men was Mr. Robert M'Cann, who was one of the fruits of Mr. Moody's visit to Belfast some eighteen years ago. He has since been well known as a Y.M.C.A. secretary in the city, and latterly as travelling secretary for the Association throughout Ireland. He is now on the eve of starting for India to fill a similar post in the Bombay presidency. He left Belfast on Thursday evening, and at the meeting that night special prayer was made for him in the great meeting by Dr. Williamson at Mr. Moody's request.

THE BIBLE READINGS

on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday afternoons were held in the largest Presbyterian church in the town, St. Enoch's, in the northern district of the city. The place will seat over 2,000 people, and has been crowded each day. Mr. Moody's addresses have been varied in topic, but all in his most stirring vein. The subjects were:—"The Elements of True Prayer," "Threefold Grace," and "How to Gain Assurance." Words have been spoken calculated to reach the hearts of saint and sinner alike. Following the address there have been touching prayer meetings, and also meetings for personal dealing, when the workers have found happy occupation in helping the troubled or doubting or hesitating souls into the clear light of conscious trust and peace.

THE GOSPEL IN SONG

has been well to the front throughout the week. The fine choir (which is 400, and not 300, strong, as I stated in mistake last week) has given a service of praise for half an hour or more each evening before the regular meeting began, and their hearty, intelligent rendering of the hymns has afforded a great treat to all who have an ear and heart attuned to the music of the Gospel. The choir-singing has been interspersed with solos by Mr. Burke, whose fine and highly-trained voice floods the great building with rich notes of praise and melodious Gospel message. One evening he was accompanied by Mr. Vance in the singing of that expressive song, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow." On another occasion the male choir sang splendidly, led by Mr. Vance. Mr. Moody, who enters into the song with all the enthusiasm of a connoisseur, varies the programme now and then by asking the people in the gallery to take up a chorus on their own account, and it is surprising how readily they pick up unfamiliar strains.

THE PRESS REPORTS

of the mission deserve special mention. The wide-awake secretaries of the committee early bespoke the good offices of the daily press, and these have responded in a very praiseworthy way. Not only have the tone and spirit of their critical observations been of the most friendly kind, but they have given fairly extended and well-condensed summaries of the addresses from day to day. Mr. Moody has not been slow to express his appreciation of this action. Not that he is anxious on his own account to have his addresses reported—quite the contrary. But he sees that the reports of Gospel texts and appeals through the medium of the press will go into many strange places and into distant corners of the country where his voice could never be heard. I have not seen in any of the papers an unkind or discourteous word about the meetings, which in view of some past experiences in other parts of the kingdom is much to be grateful for. Your weekly contemporary, the Belfast Witness, has given special and lengthy accounts.

FRIDAY EVENING MEETING

was a memorable time in a week charged with solemn and gladsome memories. There was an immense audience in the great hall, to whom Mr. Moody preached on "Confessing Christ." His words were manifestly winged home by the Spirit to the hearers' hearts, and at the close of the moving discourse, the meeting seemed as melted wax, ready to receive the impression of the Divine sealing. He had, in his address, made a strong appeal that all the young men who had been blessed during the week, or who were then willing to confess Christ, should go to the men's meeting in the church and bear testimony before their fellows. Then, after prayer, and before the assemblage broke up he was moved to throw down a challenge to all in the great congregation to declare their desire to confess Christ on the spot. The effect was almost electric. The responses came at once in growing volume from all parts of the building, some in loud firm tones, others in the accents of fear and trembling. It was one of the most remarkable and affecting expressions of feeling that I remember ever to have witnessed at the meetings held by the evangelist. Mr. Moody himself was greatly overcome, and the awe of God seemed to be resting on the whole assembly.

There was a large and deeply interesting after-meeting, at which many were conversed with and led up to the point of definite decision. Meantime the area of the Presbyterian Church in Fitzroy-avenue was filled with a throng of men, and another unforgettable time was experienced. After a song by Mr. Burke, sung with great pathos—"Welcome, Wanderer, Welcome"—Mr. Seagram read a passage and threw the meeting open for brief testimonies. These came fast and thick, mostly from young fellows who had been converted on some of the bygone evenings of the week. Every evening had its quota, but the great majority said that it was on the Tuesday evening that they had stepped over the line. On that evening Mr. Moody's subject was "Sowing and Reaping," and these testimonies showed that his message had found its mark in many a case. Others who spoke said they had been brought to know the Saviour months and even years ago, but they had never openly confessed Him till now. This was Mr. Moody's last meeting of the week, and it was a fitting crown to all that had gone before.

LAST SUNDAY'S MEETINGS.

With his omnivorous appetite for work, Mr. Moody planned four meetings for Sabbath morning, forenoon, afternoon, and evening. His suggestion that there should be a service at 11 a.m. for "non-churchgoers" was cordially agreed to by the Belfast ministers (with a single exception), at a meeting specially convened, and they warmly entered into his plans for getting the tickets of admission into the hands of the right class of people, of whom there is a great body in the city. As the sequel proved, Mr. Moody's anticipations were fully realised and the meeting for the "lapsed masses" was probably the most fruitful of any yet held in the great Convention Hall.

THE WORKERS' MEETING

at eight o'clock was not so large as on the opening day, a week ago, for good and sufficient reasons. Still, it was a splendid congregation to which Mr. Moody addressed himself in earnest exhortation that all should bring a willing offering of their very best to the service of God during the remainder of the mission. There is plenty of work for all to do, and God only expects from his servants what they have. The speaker showed, from many Scriptural instances, how God condescends to make use of the weakest and most unlikely instruments when they are freely given into his hands. The discourse was interspersed with appeals to all the Christians to seek to be the agent in leading some soul to the Saviour during the coming days of the special effort. The untold issues for good that might come out of the conversion of a single boy or girl were dwelt upon, and many must have been the holy resolves that were made, in the strength of God, to a re-dedication of self and substance to the blessed service of Jesus Christ.

THE NON-CHURCHGOERS

turned out in strong force at eleven o'clock, and there must have been some 6,000 or 7,000 persons present. The seats on the platform, usually filled with ministers, were crowded with a motley throng of men, women, and children. The choir was very meagre, as most of the members were at their own churches, but there was some fine solo-singing from Mr. Burke and Mr. Vance, and both sang with exquisite effect the grand Gospel message, "Though our sins be as scarlet they shall be white as snow." The audience joined in the hymns a little too freely for them to be exclusively outside the pale of church influence, but undoubtedly a great many of them were of this class. Mr. Moody took up the subject of Christ seeking the lost. Into this sermon he introduces the story of the healing of blind Bartimeus and the finding of Zaccheus. To the amplification of these narratives he brings in the aid of imagination, and the result is a very graphic picture of the seeking and saving mercy of the Saviour. Some of the illustrative incidents towards the close of the address are extremely pathetic, and the deep impression made on this mixed audience was easy to be seen. The sermon being ended there came the drawing of the net; and once again the power of the Gospel message, simply, tenderly, and faithfully told, to reach the most careless human heart was exemplified. When Mr. Moody asked all who desired prayer to rise, the response was truly marvellous. In all parts of the house the people stood up without any prompting. Mr. Moody referred, with much feeling, to the number of grey-haired men who stood. Some two dozen or more of these venerable brethren rose to their feet. But there were all ages and both sexes among the anxious, and when they came to be gathered into one corner of the building they must have counted over 600 men, women, and children. Mr. Moody addressed them briefly, and again secured from the most of them individual and ready expressions of resolve to part with sin and receive the seeking Saviour. Backsliders were mingled with those who for the first time came to the cross for pardon. It was an intensely pathetic and heart-stirring sight; and if Mr. Moody had held no other meeting in Belfast than that one he would have been well repaid for visiting the city. The names of all the enquirers were taken by the workers and, doubtless, they will be looked after and brought within the shelter of some church fold. Certainly Mr. Moody was more than justified in his anxiety to hold this service specially for the non-churchgoers.

TEN THOUSAND WOMEN

or thereabout crammed the hall at three o'clock in the afternoon. The throngs had been so dense on the previous Sunday afternoon and evening that it was arranged to have a meeting for women only this afternoon, and one for men in the evening, so as to relieve the pressure. The weather had greatly improved, and the sun shone brightly on the scene. The male choirs sang sweetly, and Mr. Burke discoursed in thrilling strains of the boundless love of God to sinners lost. It was on this grandest of themes that Mr. Moody dwelt in his address, and there was a hushed attention as he told out the old, old story. His words appeared to find a ready entrance into the hearts of some of his hearers as he spoke of the drink habit, and the way in which it cursed family life. There is great excitement just now, he said, over the cholera, though only a few comparatively have succumbed to that scourge. But we think far too little of the havoc that strong drink is working every day in our own land. Belfast certainly has much need to bestir itself in this matter. The whisky shops are very plentiful, and their effect can be seen in the streets any day in the cursing, fighting and reeling men that one meets, alas, on every hand. Only this very Sabbath morning, while on the way to the early meeting, I was pained to see a group of women, with shawls over their heads, evidently under the potent influence of alcohol, and showing a strong disposition to be quarrelsome. As one remarked to me the other day, on seeing two men who had been exchanging blows separated by the police, the great whisky distillers have much to answer for.

But to return to the women's meeting. The area of the hall was filled with some 6,000 sisters for the second meeting. After prayer, Rev. H. Montgomery gave a delightfully simple and clear address on the way to enter on the Christian life. Then Mr. Moody himself spoke for a little, and proceeded to call for the customary expression of a desire to be prayed for, or of resolve to yield heart and life to God. All count was soon lost of the numbers who gave response from all parts of the house, as well as from the platform. The third or conversational meeting was again a large one and for some time the workers were kept busy talking, either to individuals or to groups, and giving friendly guidance in this momentous crisis in their spiritual life.

The experiences of the afternoon were virtually repeated in the evening, only that the audience was made up of men instead of women. The sharp arrows of truth flew right and left as Mr. Moody came to close grip with the question of besetting sin—how it steels the heart against conviction, and leads a man to procrastinate till the day of mercy passes and the Spirit ceases to strive because of being persistently grieved and resisted. Again the harvest was plenteous, and a busy time of reaping was found in the after meeting.

were held in the Exhibition building afternoon and evening, and were conducted by Mr. Merton Smith, who had come over from Scotland on the preceding day. He had a congregation of some 800 men in the afternoon, and nearly as many women in the evening. At the latter meeting especially there was a good contingent of seeking souls, and quite a number of clear decisions. Mr. Burke sang at both the overflows, which gave him a total of six meetings during the day. That meant an expenditure of energy which only those who have tried it can understand. Such a day of Gospel sowing and reaping Belfast has not seen before in its history, so far as living memory goes, and one of the Monday morning papers was right in describing it as a "red-letter day" in the spiritual annals of the city.

An accident happened to Mr. Moody on the Saturday, which happily was not attended with very serious consequences, though the escape was a somewhat narrow one, humanly speaking. He was proceeding on an open side-backed car to one of the railway stations. The driver, being in undue haste (a failing to which these Irish Jarvies are frequently prone), the car came into collision with a cart. The splash-board on which Mr. Moody's feet rested was greatly damaged, and an ugly rent was made in the upper of his left boot. The foot itself was grazed a little, but it is expected that a day or two's careful treatment will stave off any permanent injury. The jaunting car is a delightful institution so long as you can count on the discretion of the driver and the sure-footedness of the horse; when either of these fails the risks are considerable. The Irish Jehu seems only second in dash and sangfroid to the Parisian cabman.

NOON PRAYER MEETINGS

were commenced in Donegal-square Methodist Church (Rev. Wesley Guard's) on Friday, and will go on to the close of the mission. They are in the capable and judicious hands of Mr. W. Robertson, f the Carrubbers-close Mission, and the proceedngs are full of interest. At the meeting on Monday here was a very good attendance, and many notes f thanksgiving were sounded for blessings received ither individually or in the person of friends hrough the meetings of the Sabbath and the revious week. Mr. Merton Smith gave a very ungent and practical talk on the power of kindness n the Christian character and life.

This week, from Tuesday onwards, there will be our meetings a day. Mr. Moody, however, will nly speak at three. At 10 a.m. he is to address neetings of ministers and workers in Dr. Williamon's church in Fisherwick-place. As cheap excurion trains are to be run from outlying places, the fternoon Bible readings are moved from St. Enoch's Church to the great Convention Hall, where there re also to be the usual evening assemblies. At the ime of writing it is not absolutely fixed, but it is xpected that Rev. John McNeill will follow Mr. Moody here, commencing a week of meetings in the arge hall on Sunday next. At the end of that time robably the purchaser of the hall may have to mplement his engagement to pull down the structure. It is a thousand pities it could not be allowed to emain standing so long as the people will resort hither in their thousands to hear the message of ife.

As stated last week, Mr. Moody begins two days' ork in Dundalk next Sabbath. Tuesday will be iven to Armagh, and the three last days of the eek to Cork. On Sabbath, September 18, he visits imerick for two days. One day is all that he can ive to co. Kerry, the place of meeting being Tralee. hen he goes for two days to Waterford and for ne day to Clonmel, in co. Tipperary. This closes p his work in the south of Ireland. It was intended to ave given the last week of the Irish mission to Dublin, but it seems there is a considerable difficulty n getting the use of Hengler's Circus, and Mr. Moody is not disposed to go and work in any maller building which would simply be crowded y Christians every time, and no chance left of etting at the careless masses. If the Dublin rrangement finally falls through, a week's mission ill be planned for the west of Ireland, brief visits eing made to such places as Sligo, Enniskillen, alway, etc. This will be quite new ground for Ir. Moody, and many are hoping that the west will ot be overlooked.

Perishing Men in Australia.

Many outcasts have found a friend in Rev. W. L. Morton, who has recently removed his good work rom Malvern to Hope Lodge, Balnarring, Victoria. There are now forty men in residence with him, and he occupations which they once followed range rom the profession of physician to the labour of a arpenter. The industries in which the rescued men ngage are largely connected with farm life. A ypical case was that of an Englishman, formerly a urgeon dentist in extensive practice, but recently ischarged from a gaol hospital, where he had been aken as the result of long drinking habits. He onfessed that all his life he had neglected the aviour's love. After spending a little while on the arm, his fast failing health necessitated return to he hospital. When told plainly that his days on arth must be very few, he said to Mr. Morton, "You have had many disappointments, but you will neet one of your men in heaven." Asked about his itle to such a blessing, he replied: "I yield to esus all He claims." A few days before his decease, e said, "Oh, that I might live a little longer. My ife has been given to the world; and if my days ould be prolonged, I would do something now for Him against whom I have fought so long."

REV. GEORGE INNOCENT.—Writing in reference to he death of this devoted missionary, already noticed n these pages, his father says he himself had just eturned from a mission tour, during which he had isited the stations in which his son George had aboured, and where he had just admitted by baptism ver sixty converts, most of whom had been led by he influence of his son to forsake idolatry and seek alvation in Christ. It was very grateful work, nd these converts, with many others, were so gladly nticipating his early return. "Oh!" he says athetically, "I could wish I had died in his tead. He was so equipped for the work, while I m nearly worn out and useless." The close of the etter shows how he and other bereaved ones are rying to bear up bravely under this crushing afflicion.

TRUE STORIES—SIMPLY TOLD.

Mr. and Mrs. Bill, of the Qua Iboe Mission, West Africa, send to the secretary of the Mission, Mr. D. C. Hamilton, 43, Laburnam-terrace, Belfast, a few cases of conversion, which they think will interest many.

"The first is a young man named Effion Utip. I hope to baptize him in a few weeks. He is one of two who stole a number of manillas out of the mission-house about two years ago. Since I came out this time he has been a most regular attender and attentive listener at all the services. A few weeks ago he came to David, after one of the services, and told him that he wished to follow God. David brought him to me, and I asked him why he wished to follow God. He answered that through hearing God's Word he had become convinced of his sin, and wished to follow God, so that his sins might be taken away. He mentioned a number of sins which he had been in the habit of practising—among the others, gin-drinking and uncleanness—and said that he had left them all, and was determined to obey God's Word. He has been receiving instruction since, and seems a case of real conversion.

"Another is that of Etie, one of the first converts. She came evidently in deep distress about her soul. Her cry was, 'Muquañkpo mi ediwak eti eti—nyum nditiene Abasi, kpan Enye ada mö efep.' 'My sins are very many; I want to follow God that He may take them away.' She came for instruction, and after a short time found peace in Jesus. She was full of joy, and her face showed it, and still shows it, for a period of over two and a-half years. She has been one of the brightest and happiest of our Christians, always ready to testify for Him, and always ready to obey his will when she had learned what it was. She has made several determined attempts to learn to read her Efik Bible, but it is too great a work for her. She is between forty and fifty years of age.

"Another case I must mention is that of John Ewaienau. He is a native of Impanek, and the first fruit of that town. He came under the influence of the Gospel mainly through the school work carried on at that town by Mr. Bailie. He used often to come in a canoe all by himself to the mission station that he might learn the way of salvation. He is the son of one of the most important families in his town, is of a quiet disposition and very winning manners, and from what we have seen of him, promises to be a most decided and useful member of our church. Less than a fortnight ago he came to me. He had just come down from the market, and brought seven manillas, a collection he had received at a meeting he had held up the river. He gathered the people on a Sunday, reading to them from God's Word, and then speaking to them about their eternal interests. The people were well pleased, and asked him to come back and tell them more. This was at one of the towns of Ndiya, about thirty miles up river.

"I have given you three of the bright cases; these have never caused us any doubts, Some others, however, are not quite so satisfactory. They are not so full of zeal nor so ready to confess Christ. Two of them—young men—wish to be married to heathen wives. We cannot sanction that, and we are in much trouble about it. I intend calling the whole church, explaining to them what God's Word says on the subject, and asking them what course we ought to pursue in case these young men persist in marrying heathens. The case is hard. There are a number of young men of marriageable ages, but there are no young women to whom they might 'pay their attentions.'

"God's Word seems plain on the subject: 'Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers.' One feels at a time like this how much they need a friendly counsellor. However, the Lord has promised wisdom to those who seek it, and He will not fail to guide us aright in this crisis. The decision will form a precedent which will be acted on hereafter, so we must be careful. We are now making our bed; we shall have to lie on it in future. May it be such that our consciences will rest at ease, and may God's will be accomplished. It is wonderful the difficulties like this that crop up.

I am very busy just now with inquirers; some eleven or twelve are wanting to be baptized. I am not yet sure how many of these we shall be able to accept. It is most difficult to form a judgment in some of the cases. There is one old man; he has been coming for instruction for about a year now, and certainly if regular attendance and close attention went for anything, he must be a Christian. Sometimes he seems bright enough, and at others very dull. He does not seem to be capable of grasping much; but he maintains that, as Jesus has died for him, he will follow Him and be saved by Him. I know of nothing against the old man's life. He is most persistent in his desire to be baptized, and I am almost inclined to think that we ought to receive him in spite of his small powers of acquiring knowledge."

A MISSIONARY CHURCH.

The Bishop of Tasmania, who is now on a visit to the Mission stations throughout Melanesia, has issued a remarkably suggestive pastoral letter, in which he says:—

"It is hardly necessary to remind you that the Church of Christ is a missionary church. That is its first note. If you look at the 'Church in miniature,' as, for instance, we see it when it was grouped round the Lord at the institution of the Lord's Supper, it is remarkable that everyone present was a missionary. One man, indeed, banished himself from that august band, and he was a man of restricted sympathies. It was he who once complained that some money spent on the Lord was wasted because it was not spent in a certain conventional manner. It is clear that such a character was quite unfitted to be the founder of a church which was nothing if it was not missionary. Most true it is that however good our will may be we can never accomplish all our desires. But that is not the question. The question is whether we have the will, whether we take interest in, and are glad to pray for, all for whom Christ died. Of course, I have often heard men and women, who ought to know better, say that we have enough to do at home; we need not trouble ourselves about others. It is simply a case of restricted sympathies, and, knowing how hard it is to be fully sympathetic myself, I can only humble myself and confess that a great many of us are very far removed from the Spirit that is in Christ Jesus. I should like to say, also, that all the arguments applied by people of restricted sympathies to the curtailment of the work of Christ's kingdom at the present time apply to the case of the Apostles and of the Lord Himself. And this is because there has been no break in the continuity of the life of the church. It is doing now, either better or worse, what it was doing in the days after Pentecost. There is no doubt whatever that there were many men of restricted sympathies in those early days who were just as contemptuous of the Apostles for leaving Palestine as some of us are now of churchmen for leaving their native land and its comforts. All we can answer is, that if we had the Spirit of Christ, we must do what Christ did; that is think of everybody, and work for everybody. There are, again, many people in these days who encourage Missions in savage places because they believe in the civilising influence of good Englishmen. They like to hear of savages 'clothed and in their right mind,' taught to read, and write, and plough, and farm. But their sympathies go no further. They do not always believe that Christ is the one only Saviour. They have a feeling that Christ is for the white races, and Mohammed is good enough for some black races, Buddha for others, and so forth. Naturally, these persons hold loosely by the definite creeds of Christendom; and yet we welcome their help to civilise savages by the help of Christian men. God proportions our difficulties to us in his own way To some He permits bodily temptations—to others intellectual. . . . . My earnest hope is that I may receive a great benefit myself by having been in contact with the work of Christ's church in the very outposts, and by having been able to watch the influence of the Holy Spirit not upon members of settled churches only, but upon those to whom the great message has come as an altogether new thing. God helping me, I may be able to lay to heart many invaluable lessons, and may become more of a missionary myself. For it is always one of the subtle dangers of a pastor with a settled charge, that he may forget 'to seek for Christ's sheep which are scattered abroad.' Absorbed in the routine of a parish, he forgets many who, though under his charge, never claim his attention, and ignore and neglect all means of grace. But I also trust that when I have obtained a full knowledge of the subject I may be able to rouse enthusiasm for this great work."

THE PAREYCHALEY MISSION.—In this central district of South Travancore good progress has been made during the past year, the number of adherents being increased by 662, with the addition of three or four new congregations. There appears to be a wide field for Gospel labours, both in the northern and western part of the district, among the poor outcast pariahs and Pulayas; but the want of funds to support agents prevents the gathering of these people for God.

PARIS.—The Anglo-American Y.M.C.A., 160, Rue Montmartre, Paris, has always a good time on Sundays, but when a friend drops in and kindly takes the afternoon service for young men it is doubly good. Mr. Yeo, of Bedford, did so on Sunday week, speaking on the words, "I am ready to preach at Rome also . . . for the Gospel is the power of God." We were (writes one of the workers) all so grateful, and were so glad to find he was gratified to find such a bright homely spot in this gay city. We heartily invite young men to visit us when in Paris.

Letters to the Editor.

NUMBERING THE PEOPLE.

Dear Sir,—Among the beautiful and helpful sayings reported at a recent conference, I was pained to see one which I fear will be more a hindrance than a help. I mean the quotation from a well-known and honoured worker that he had computed there were not more than ten millions of regenerated human beings in the world.

Is this attempt to calculate the number of the faithful a scriptural one? When the apostle saw the heavenly vision of the blest, he looked on "a multitude which no man could number" (Rev. vii. 9). If he was not permitted to number them in heaven, is it likely an uninspired man on earth could?

And is it right, or reverent, to try to do what only God can do? Who else can "search the reins and the hearts"?

When the words of the Lord were put into the mouth of Balaam, he said: "Who can count the dust of Jacob and the number of the fourth part of Israel?" How much less the number of those who are distinguished not by outward nationality but the "hidden man of the heart"?

There were 7,000 faithful ones in Israel where Elijah thought he only was left. Are we wise or more discerning than he?

The Temple of God in Solomon's time was built without sound of axe or hammer, each stone brought silently from its place. Surely this was a type of what is going on now in the true Temple, of which that was only a type.

It is these attempts to decide what God alone can know, that has brought evangelical teaching too often into contempt, not that they are any part of it in reality, but so many true and zealous servants of Christ speak unadvisedly in these matters. Let it be enough for us to do all we can to promote the increase of that company of all faithful people, and leave the numbering to Him who cannot err. One day we shall see the glorious company complete, and perhaps find many more than some of us expected.

I remain, yours faithfully,

A Constant Reader.

REV. N. A. MORJICKIAN.

Dear Sir,—Having read the account of Rev. N. A. Morjickian's labours given in your issue of August 25, I communicated with him through Dr. T. W. Brown, and have had the great joy of hearing him preach twice in the Mission Hall, Chiswick. The evening subject was "From Mount Ararat to London on the Wings of Faith." I most cordially commend this dear brother to the sympathy of the Lord's people, specially stewards of his wealth. Our poor people have given the largest collection ever taken on one evening, namely, £3, to assist him in the effort he is making to procure £250 for the erection of a church in which the congregation he has gathered in Armenia during the past two years may worship God. I trust Pastor Morjickian may have many pulpits and platforms placed at his disposal during his brief stay in England, so that the sum needed may soon be made up.—Yours gratefully, Chiswick. Robt. T. Smith.

"INSTRUCTING THE YOUNG."

Sir,—I am glad to see from your paper that there is such a desire for the training of the young in the distinctive principles of Evangelical Protestantism. There should be no difficulty in getting them well up in the Romish controversy, and we cannot attach too great importance to this, and especially in these days when Rome is putting forth all her strength and all her seductions to win by foul or fair means the ignorant or the undecided.

One of the best Protestant Catechisms is by the Rev. R. P. Blakeney, LL.D., D.D., Vicar of Bridlington, Yorkshire (98,000). It sells for 2d., and is a masterpiece. The Reformation Society has made large grants of this to teachers of Bible-classes, and it has also given many prizes to successful competitors. I have used it for several years in my Bible-class, and can warmly recommend it. The Protestant Alliance, 9, Strand, and the Protestant Institute, 38 and 39, Parliament-street, Westminster, issue it, along with the Reformation Society, 20, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Then there is a larger work, "Blakeney's Manual of the Romish Controversy." It is sold at 1s.

I shall only mention another. It is Dr. James Begg's "Handbook of Popery." This has done good service.

There are many others, but these are well known and well tried. They come within the reach of all, and give a thorough training in this most important controversy. Were these circulated and taught in our homes and classes, the Roman traitor would be driven out of the Protestant Church, and we would have the flowing tide of Popery arrested in the nation. Above all we would have more earnest, intelligent, decided Christians.

Yours truly,

Jas. Calder.

THE CLAIMS OF SWITZERLAND.

The conventions for mutual edification are quite a feature of the times, and doubtless have been a blessing to many. But do we not often need to be reminded that after all the best quickener of spiritual life is practical work for the Lord? No doubt there has often been active work without real life, but real life always languishes when it finds vent only in talking or meditating.

In Keswick we know the outcome of the conferences (and a most blessed one) has been increased work among the heathen. But now we are beginning to hold conferences in Switzerland. Has this beautiful country to which we resort for health and enjoyment no claim on us?

There are many truly excellent Christians there who could be cheered by our sympathy and active help, and our way is too often to ignore such. But I may venture to name two or three ways in which British Christians might give tangible tokens of sympathy and confer a real blessing with a little trouble in contributing.

In the fine season there are numerous shepherds and dairymen scattered over the mountains, out of reach of ordinary ministrations, and too far to be reached by busy and overworked pastors. Evangelical societies are trying to supply the want, but they are poor, and substantial aid is needed, and many such districts could be supplied with an itinerant evangelist were means forthcoming.

At Evian, and at Thonan, on the Savoy side of Geneva, in the interesting district of the Chablais, where the Gospel was driven out in the days of Louis XIV., two pairs of devoted Christian ladies are respectively working; as for example, Miss Lorrett and Miss Wilson at Thonan, the Misses Wellington at Evian. A few weeks or months' help from some lady able to speak French and pay her expenses would be invaluable at either place. But in any case, contributions to the necessary expenses of hiring rooms and distributing books, etc., for which their own means are taxed to the uttermost, are much needed.

Above all, and this I had means of observing personally only a few months ago, the country is flooded with Italian labourers, who come over to work on the roads, etc. These men are often very intelligent, but, unless previously under evangelistic influence, as ignorant as heathens. They are favourably placed for receiving the truth, and gladly accept Gospels when they can read. At one time a good work was carried on among them; now, those who did it are dispersed or dead, and except one colporteur who was lately at Zurich (I know not if he is still there), there seems no one to speak a word to them or care for their souls. In working for them, we are also working for Italy. If a few tourists would contribute to the support of a colporteur, the Waldensian Church would probably be able to find one.

With respect to this work, and also that in Savoy, Mr. Buscarlet, the Scotch pastor at Lausanne (his address is Pratolino, Lausanne), would give information.

The Israelites of old were bidden to "pray for the peace" of the country where they were carried captive; shall we ignore the claims of the one which we visit for our pleasure?

The Strangers' Rest.

At the monthly workers' meeting held on Friday evening, Mr. Isaac briefly recounted some of the happy experiences of the past month, telling of sinners brought to the Saviour, of backsliders restored. Mr. Vernon Charlesworth, of the Stockwell Orphanage, followed with an address on the experiences of the disciples, who went fishing on the Sea of Galilee after the Lord's resurrection. A missionary party from Norway and Sweden, studying for mission work in China, were present, and two of the ladies bore testimony to the blessing they had received at the "Rest" whilst working amongst the sailors of their own nationalities. They asked for prayer on their behalf that their labours amongst the Chinese might be blessed.

A POOR PARALYTIC.—It is noted that the four converts baptized this year in the Tan Tok Seng Hospital (Singapore) are the result of the consistent life and earnest teaching of a poor paralytic patient, who for some four years has never been able to leave his bed.

SAILORS IN GRAND CANARY.

I should like to give your readers an account of the work here among sailors and others visiting Las Palmas. Our institute, opened in December last, is much appreciated by the men. We have a large reading-room, also a refreshment-room and bedroom for officers and sailors when required. We hold Gospel meetings every Lord's Day evening in the large room; on week nights, when the men can get ashore, we have magic-lantern entertainments, with singing (most of the sailors sing Sankey's hymns), and occasionally concerts, when resident English friends assist. There are various simple games. The Institute is always open until 10 p.m., when we close with a short Bible-reading and prayer. The men seem very happy, and we often have to say, "Now, friends, it is time for you to go on board." Some of them said the other evening, "This is a fine place, just like home; how good it is of people to think of us chaps." We supply them, when they wish, with tea, coffee, lemonade, cake, and other refreshments. Since the Institute has been opened two drinking-houses have been closed, one by the death of the proprietor, the other by financial losses.

Sometimes a few Spaniards come in, and are pleased with the singing, and gladly receive Gospel tracts; but they are very ignorant of spiritual things, as the following incidents will show. I was returning from the town one day in a tartana, or small cart, when the ringing of a bell and a man carrying a red banner in front of a priest announced that the latter was on his way to administer extreme unction to a dying person. The cart stopped, and all alighted; at the request of the driver I did the same. They then removed their hats and kneeled on the road until the priest had passed. Seeing me standing, they looked very angry and said: "Are you an infidel? why did you not kneel?" I said, "No, I am not an infidel; but why did you kneel?" "Oh," replied one, "because God went by; the priest carried Him in a little box." I asked, "Do you not know that God is a Spirit and is present everywhere? Besides, He is almighty. Do you think, then, He would allow a man to carry Him about in a box?" He and his companions looked amazed and said, "Does your religion teach that God can see everywhere?" I said it did. "Then," said he, "your religion is better than ours, for I only think of God when I see the box." I then explained to them the reality of God's presence and the fulness of Christ's salvation.

The other afternoon a poor woman came to me in great trouble. "Oh!" she said, "do give me something to pay for a mass. My little girl is dying, and I cannot pay for a mass for her soul." Wringing her hands, she sobbed, "What shall I do?" I told her the Lord Jesus loved little children, and would save her daughter without money and without price. He wanted her to come to Him, not to the priest.

We are patiently sowing the seed. I visit the ships daily with tracts, selling the Scriptures and dropping a word for the Master as opportunity occurs; I distribute about ten thousand tracts per month. The sailors are generally glad to see me come on board, and often say, "Have you got anything for us? You are just the man we want to see."

There are but few English residents, and we have to look to friends in England for help to continue the work. The treasurer, Col. Morton, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, will gladly give any further particulars of the work. E. W. Searle.

Port Luz, Las Palmas, Grand Canary.

Our Railway Men.

Amongst the many readers of The Christian, are there not some who will help forward the work amongst the Metropolitan Railwaymen? The need of workers who will send monthly packets of Gospel literature is great. A large number of men are unsupplied on the Inner Circle, and if the way opens, the new stations to Aylesbury will be taken up. The company have helped forward the mission in many ways. A hall has been erected on their property at Neasden, in close proximity to their repairing works, and the meetings held in it are largely attended. Miss Jackson, 28, Topstone-road, Kensington, will gladly send the names of men for packets, giving all particulars, or to receive subscriptions from friends unable themselves to supply packets.

MR. S. GILLESPIE PROUT, well known to our readers as having on more than one occasion come to the help of distressed miners and their families in Wales, writes that he is visiting the scene of the recent colliery disaster, and would undertake to receive and distribute any funds entrusted to him for the relief of those in need. He may be addressed, Aberkenfig, R.S.O., Glamorganshire

Temperance Notes.

A drunkard is one who has been an unsuccessful moderate drinker.

Mildura, a New South Wales town, where the sale of drink is prohibited, has 4,000 inhabitants, but only one policeman.

Mrs. Andrew and Kate Bushnell, world-evangelists of the W.C.T.U., have been having most encouraging meetings in Adelaide.

A millionaire brewer of New York recently objected to the issue of a drinking licence for a saloon near his mansion.

A sad scene occurred the other day in Manchester City Police-court, where a poor woman charged with drunkenness fell dead in the dock.

It is said that a league has been formed among the students of the University of Pennsylvania to do away with wines at class banquets.

A strong total abstinence movement in the western provinces of Russia is in progress. In one province there are no less than sixteen active societies.

France, once so sober, is now at a loss to know what to do with her topers. Cheap bars and absinthe easily explain the increase of alcoholic madness.

The Rappel states that there are now throughout France 440,000 establishments open for the sale of intoxicating liquors. In Paris alone there are 27,000.

At the annual Brewster Sessions at Melton Mowbray the Nonconformist minister of the town successfully opposed an application for an off licence to a brewery.

Mr. J. Buckley, of Douglas, who has just died, was an ardent temperance reformer. He had attained the age of eighty years, and had been for sixty years a total abstainer.

Mr. A. F. Hills, a member of the Buckhurst Hill Temperance Union, at the Epping Brewster Sessions offered compensation to the amount of £250 to a local publican if he would close his house, but the offer was refused.

The London County Council, which has, as one of its duties, to manage four lunatic asylums, decided to run these asylums on abstinence principles. The result is that the patients, most of whom are there through drink, are greatly improved.

Every Sunday afternoon the W.C.T.U., of Atlantic City, N.J., hold a beach meeting in the merry-go-round building which is kindly offered them for the purpose. Different speakers address the meetings, and in this way many are reached who would not attend services elsewhere.

A bill has passed both branches of the American Congress, making it a violation of the prohibitory law to sell malt liquors in the Indian country. For months these have been openly sold, and all the attempts to suppress the nuisance were unavailing until this law was passed.

In the Prohibition town of Millville, in the State of New Jersey, two policemen are found amply sufficient to watch over the ten thousand inhabitants, the majority of whom are working men and their families. A generation ago, the town was specially noted for its intemperance.

At the West Ham Brewster Sessions Rev. W. Skinner said that nothing give the ministers of the various churches more pain at heart, and so effectually tied their hands and work, as the way in which the young people connected with the churches were surrounded with the temptations of drink.

It is stated that amongst the ranks of the Sydney unemployed was discovered the other day an ex-Cabinet Minister, who had taken a prominent part, some twenty years ago, in welcoming the Queen's second son to Australia. Drink was the cause of his downfall. For a long time past he has been a regular frequenter of the Sydney "doss-houses."

The Salford magistrates do not consider the Chief Constable's report satisfactory. Taking the population at 198,000 or 200,000, there had been 1,050 public-houses, which represented a licence for every 188 persons. Allowing that two-thirds of the population were persons who could not be called adults, it gave a licence for every 63 adult persons. The convictions for drunkenness, 2,311, represented a conviction for every 85 persons, or a conviction for every 28 adult persons.

The Newcastle Daily Chronicle says:—"There is not a European Government which has not before it, in one form or another, this problem of increasing gravity: 'How to put down drunkenness?' The German Government Bill, which is said to have the earnest support of the Emperor, contains two noteworthy provisions—one appointing guardians for habitual drunkards, and the other making a publican responsible for the safe conduct home of every drunken person on his premises. There is to be no 'chucking out,' and when a vehicle is required to take the drunken man home, the licensed victualler, if need be, must pay for it in the meantime, but is entitled to pursue the drunkard for the debt. This is an original contrivance, truly."

Personalia.

Rev. A. Tomory, whose work among Jews in Constantinople has been so remarkably blessed, is now compelled to resign.

Rev. James Henderson, after labouring for many years at Constantinople as minister at Pera and as missionary to the Jews, has returned home.

Dr. Dale, we are glad to learn, is much better. He hopes to be able to preach in his own pulpit on the third Sunday in September. It will then be nearly five months since Dr. Dale's serious relapse.

Mr. McCann, of the Belfast Y.M.C.A., left Belfast last Thursday night for India, where he has been appointed by the central council, Exeter Hall, London, to labour for at least the next two years among British young men in that part of the world.

Rev. G. W. Olver sails for India on his missionary tour to morrow (Friday). Miss Olver, who accompanies her father, proceeds to Bankura, Bengal, where she will take charge of a boarding school, and assist her brother in his noble work among the Santals.

Rev. F. B. Meyer has safely returned from his visit to Northfield. He hopes to rest a space before resuming work. We may add that he came in the same vessel as Miss Frances E. Willard, who intends spending a short time with Lady Henry Somerset, and lending her aid in the consolidation of the temperance work in which she so earnestly labours.

Mr. J. Crofton Rainey, well known to many of our readers in connection with Gospel work, is leaving Paignton, South Devon, where he has laboured for some years, for the neighbourhood of Oxford, where he proposes to carry on farming operations, and engage in local Gospel work as opportunity may arise. His address will be, after Michaelmas, Baldon, near Oxford.

Rev. Joseph H. Bateson, who has been acting as secretary of the Army Temperance Association in India, has visited all the branches of the association in Burmah, the Madras and Bombay Presidencies, and the majority in the Bengal Presidency. There is now an increase on the year of seventeen branches, and 983 members, making a total of 171 branches and 16,576 members.

Dean Fremantle celebrated his eighty-fifth birthday on Wednesday in last week, receiving numerous congratulations on the auspicious event. The dean, though feeling the infirmity of increasing years, yet retains his mental vigour, and preaches in the cathedral with his accustomed clearness and power. He has now been Dean of Ripon sixteen years, and enters his sixtieth year of ministerial life.

Mr. Thomas Spurgeon's ministry at the Tabernacle continues to be very highly appreciated. The impressions made during his first month's services have been deepened by those which have followed. It has now become quite a common experience to hear the expression, "Well, really, this morning's discourse (or this evening's sermon) has excelled all that he has previously preached." For the time of year the congregations have been very remarkable, especially on Thursday evenings.

OBITUARY.

SUKHMAN—FIRST BHUTAN MISSIONARY.

Only in our last issue we gave some account of the Church of Scotland Mission in British Bhutan, and already tidings have been received of the death of the first evangelist, the Bhutian lad who, being converted, declared he felt God calling him to go to his own people in Bhutan. His holy enthusiasm, we are told, roused others, and he was set apart with prayer and fasting to lead a little party. Already his labours had been greatly blessed; but, as Mr. Kilgour writes:—"Once more God has consecrated his work by a grave. The first Bhutan missionary has fallen, and that in the most inscrutable manner. 'Sukhman, catechist, dead—cholera,' was telegraphed last night. Truly God's ways are not our ways; but we know from past experience in this Mission how God buries his workmen but carries on their work. Still it is tragic."

WE NEVER KNEW.—A native worker in India says:—One morning I had about a dozen Mohammedan women, to whom I read of the "King's Great Marriage Feast," and when I spoke of the wedding garment I heard a woman behind me saying to another, "What wonderful words are these! Just listen, did you ever hear anything like it? Here we have been living for years, and no one ever spoke to us about it. We never knew of this." As I heard, my heart ached, and I thought of the thousands of immortal souls around us, who are living in misery and utter ignorance, and dying in darkness with the painful cry on their lips, "We did not know," "We were not told."

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. George Hefford is holding an encouraging tent mission near Willesden Junction.

Rowrah.—Mr. Bunn, a Joyful News evangelist, has conducted a successful evangelistic mission here, and many signs of blessing have been apparent.

Mr. George Back has been conducting a special mission since July 20 in Dunton Green, and Greatness, Kent. The outdoor and indoor services have been blessed.

Long Compton.—A fruitful mission is being conducted here by Mr. Stephen Bryant, of the Evangelisation Society. The meetings are well attended, and the results up to the present are very encouraging.

Exmouth, Devon.—Mr. Levi Powell, of Torquay, has been conducting Gospel services on the sands at Exmouth. The gatherings have been very large, and the interest taken great. God has given much blessing.

Ireland.—Rev. Jas. Kirkwood has been conducting a successful series of Gospel tent services at Dungannon, and Mr. Wilson, of the Edinburgh City Mission, has been holding evangelistic meetings at Markethill, co. Armagh.

County Down.—An evangelistic mission has been conducted the past two weeks in the neighbourhood of the Mealough (co. Down) by the hon. secretary of the Ballynafeigh Y.M.C.A., Mr. R. McMaster. The Holy Ghost was felt to be working in convincing power in the hearts and minds of the people.

Rev. B. Fay Mills.—A great blessing is following all the meetings which this evangelist has been holding on the Pacific coast. "The tidings," says the Occident, "are all of one tenor, indicating the aroused ardour and the invigoration of Christians, the happy union of Christian effort, and the ingathering of multitudes of souls. Mr. Mills's methods have been tested and approved. They have, with those who have laboured with him, passed beyond the range of serious criticism. The Spirit of God plainly owns his work."

Dr. Newman Hall was on an evangelistic mission last week in South Wales, not far from the scene of the recent calamity. He held three services on Sunday, August 28, at Aberdare, the afternoon meeting being in the large Temperance Hall, which was crowded, chiefly by men. On Monday evening at Cardiff; Tuesday at Treherbert, at the head of the Rhondda Valley, when the church was thronged with miners; Wednesday, Merthyr Tydvil; Thursday, Pontypridd; and to Barmouth and Llandudno for the next four Sundays. Evangelistic meetings followed the sermons, to which most of the congregation remained, and several persons held up their hands as requesting prayer for their conversion.

Colportage-on-the-Sands.—For another season Messrs. F. Saunders and H. A. Hall have spent the month of August in a mission at that seaside resort, Cleethorpes. Day after day gospel hymns have been sung, and testimony borne to the grace of God. The staple part of the work, however, has been the sale of Bibles, Testaments, Gospel books, and Scripture texts, etc. Excellent Lord's Day afternoon meetings have been secured, and the Gospel has been delivered to both visitors and excursionists. The word has evidently been with power to the unsaved. God's backsliding children have been restored and strengthened. The bookstall and the singing have formed a rallying point for the daily gathering of Christians, who have borne testimony to the refreshment aud stimulus received.

Pentonville Lads.

Only those who know the lads of this neighbourhood and their surroundings can realise how tremendous are the odds against them, yet how earnestly some long for a better life, however rough and careless they may appear to be. Hence the thorough appreciation which they have shown in regard to "The Red, White, and Blue Christian Institute for Lads," which has been established at 19, Cumming-street, and 15, Collier-street, where the hon. sec., Mr. E. W. Dresser, is ever ready to welcome lads who want a friend, Physical welfare has been promoted by the new holiday camp at Swanage, near Bournemouth, while various clubs for bodily and mental benefit have been started and well maintained. Sunday services are being better attended, and it is believed that the "ten minutes' straight talk" in the gymnasium on one Saturday in each month has done much real good. The state of the finances, however, constitutes a grave difficulty in continuing the institute.

Sin is usually seconded with sin; a man seldom commits one sin to please, but he commits another to defend himself.—Dr. South.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

BY REV. F. B. MEYER.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 11.—NUMBERS XXVIII.

How careful is this repetition of the institution of the repeated and ever-recurring sacrifices. Though they had been already instituted, these directions go again carefully over the ground; and in this we learn the necessity for the methodical maintenance of the outward observances of worship and religion. We may be in danger of thinking that because all our time and being are God's, that therefore we are absolved from the demand to set apart specific periods and acts for God. It is impossible to maintain a close walk with God without exercising great care as to such matters. Many who have received great blessing at specific conventions and revival meetings have lost all, and have grieved the Holy Spirit by slothful inattention to these details. We ought to give God time each day to speak to Him, and to hear his voice to us. We should, like David, sit before the Lord. We should, like Gideon with his fleece, spread ourselves out for the dew of the Holy Spirit. We must confess our sins, and seek the daily cleansing of the blood. There should be no slurring of the Rest-day; no forgetting of the daily and weekly provision of the meat-offering of his flesh, of the oil of the Holy Spirit's grace, of the burnt-offering of consecration, of the strong wine of love. The counterpart of the Passover is the death of Calvary; and it is a wholesome practice to observe the Christian year, with its periodic opportunity for considering the precious death and burial. All this is described as the food of God (ver. 2 R.V.): as if God Himself feeds with holy joy and satisfaction on the devotion and love of his people.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 12.—NUMBERS XXIX.

"No servile work." How often does that phrase occur in these chapters, in connection with these solemn days, in which the Passover is commemorated. There was, of course, a necessity for this, that the people might be gathered from all the land, and have time for the due consideration of these mighty themes. But surely there is a further lesson for ourselves. We are reminded that the Son has made us free, that his blood has set us free from all servile labour in the direction of our salvation, that we serve not in the bondage of the letter but in the freedom of the Spirit. We are indeed slaves in the deepest sense; but we have not the spirit of the slave; we serve with the glad free spirit of sons. It is a strange paradox, that in the same epistle (Galatians) where the Apostle describes himself as branded with the marks of the slavery of Jesus, he says, "Thou art no longer a bond servant, but a son, and if a son, then an heir through God." What a blessing it is to realise also, that even where servile work is required by the circumstances of our lot, yet we need not cherish a servile spirit, "He that was called in the Lord, being a bond servant, is the Lord's freedman." We should daily live as those who act as they do, not because of the wages we get, or the obligations of our state, but because we do all for Him, who has appointed the tasks of our life, in doing which we may serve Him. God emphasizes the fact eleven times that these special sacrifices were to be in addition to the ordinary ones, showing that it is wise to have special times, and to make special gifts, altogether in addition to and without interfering with those that are our usual practice.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 13.—NUMBERS XXX.

There are questions in the lives of us all in which we have to deal with God alone, such as faith in his Son, communion with Himself, obedience to his declared will; but there are other matters, such as are chiefly dealt with in this chapter, which are not universally obligatory, such as resolutions to dedicate a certain proportion of time, or money, or strength to the service of God, and in these our attitude must be determined by the claims of others, who stand in natural relations to us. With the Jew, silence was consent, and, supposing a vow was made in his presence by wife or daughter, and he did not object, it stood. In some cases amongst ourselves, this form of tacit consent may be deemed sufficient, especially in cases where direct request would stir up bitter hostility. It is very reassuring to notice the frequent repetition of the words, "The Lord shall forgive her," from which we may infer only the gracious consideration of our Lord, who never holds us to compacts which we may have made without due thought of all the circumstances that life might bring. The high demands of the home-life must be always put before ceremonial or voluntary vows. True religion binding us to God, binds us also to men, honours human love, and sanctifies every relationship, making it even easy to forego a cherished purpose at the call of the home life.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 14.—NUMBERS XXXI.

There are days in life when the knife must be used. It seems terrible when those hours come, but they are profitable, inasmuch as they save us from the worm and the fire. It may be that Midianites are lurking in our hearts, dear Lord; that have seduced us before now with sin, and if we harbour them, they will repeat their hellish work. Yet show us who and what they are, and if our hands are not strong enough to cut out the gangrene, then do the work Thyself, for Thou art a merciful and faithful High Priest, and Thou knowest us altogether. It is a significant saying, that what could abide the fire should go through it (ver. 23). So evil were the Midianites, that their possessions must needs be purified ere they could be appropriated, and nothing but fire baptism could avail for all that could endure it. Is not this a glimpse into God's dealings with us? He will not allow any of us to be tried either in the furnace of affliction, or in that of temptation, beyond what we are able; but where he detects ability he will subject us to the keenest discipline that we can sustain. Water for what cannot sustain fire, but fire for all else. It is remarkable to notice that out of the spoils there were rich gifts made to the Levites and the Tabernacle; thus it is that the temptations and failures of our life may be so transformed by the grace of God as to yield Him tribute. Where sin has abounded, grace has over-abounded. Out of gravestones, he has made stepping-stones. Our sad and evil experiences have taught us how to help others.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 15.—NUMBERS XXXII.

There are many Christians who are eager about "their cattle." They are content to avoid the Jordan-flood with its death to the self-life, if only they may build sheep-cotes, and cities, and provide for their little ones. They are redeemed indeed, and have passed through the wilderness experience, but their best life is hindered by their devotion to material and personal interests. Theirs is the heritage beyond the Jordan. They are afar off from the seat of the worship of God; they yield few deliverers or heroes; they are increasingly alienated from the noblest life of God's people; they are earliest open to the assault of the foe; they soon fade into the desert clans. Do not fear to die, oh soul of man, or be too hasty to take thy portion. The true life lies on the other side of death, that arrowy Jordan which some so dread. Thou canst not ascend unless thou dost first descend. God fills up from the bottom. Looking at this picture from another stand-point, we learn that we should ever hold ourselves in readiness to sacrifice our own comforts that we may bear the burdens of others, and succour them. No regiment of the army of Emmanuel can take its ease till victory is sure all along the line. The needs, defeats, and victories of each belong to all. Responsibility is response to ability. What we ought to do we can do.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 16.—NUMBERS XXXIII.

The encampments of Israel are here passed in review. Little more than names as they are enumerated, but each at the time was all important. And in the thought of God each name suggested the special sins, and mercies, and needs that made it memorable. But though much of what had happened had altogether faded from human memory—the tears, the anguish, the hunger, the heartbreak—each place had woven some threads into the fabric of their life as a nation, or as individuals. Some day the stations of our lives will lie behind us thus, as the hills, over which we had been climbing, in the serene beauty of a summer evening We may not then be able to recall the various incidents which, when they were transpiring, made each spot vitally important. Most will have mingled in one marvellous result of goodness, and mercy, and discipline, and blessedness, and each will have left its own definite and specific record. Let us not lose heart at any one spot, or sink down to die. The cloud moves on, the long list of stopping-places grows daily less, the programme is visibly shortening, the end must come. But till then there will never be a halting-place without manna, and water, and cloud, and sufficient grace, and some dear blessings which prove the nearness and tenderness of God. Let us never forget that life is but a pilgrimage, and every stopping-place but one in which to pitch a tent, and all because we see the land and the city. But let us have no compromise with the habits and sins of the world around.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 17.—NUMBERS XXXIV.

It was easy to mark out the inheritance of Israel in the Land of Promise, but let us rejoice that no hand can put limits to our inheritance in Jesus. We are blessed with all spiritual blessings in Him. The love of Christ passeth knowledge. We may apprehend, but we can never comprehend its lengths, and depths, and breadths, and heights. There are no boundaries to that fair heritage of glory which is ours, as joint-heirs with the Son of God. The sun never ceases to shine upon our empire. And here is a testimony surely to the divine origin of the Gospel, that it understands the infinite needs of man, and makes provision for them. Its joys are unspeakable and full of glory. Its peace passeth understanding. Its strength is all power. Its measure is beyond all we ask or think. Arise, oh Christian soul, and walk though thine inheritance in the length and breadth of it. It is all thine own. Every place on which thou shalt set thy foot, and claim by thy faith, is for thy enjoyment and wealth. Be of good cheer, all things are thine, life or death, things present or things to come, because all that the Father hath are the Son's, and thy Brother has shared all his goods with thee.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, SEPTEMBER 18.

REVIEW OF THE QUARTER'S LESSONS.

GOLDEN TEXT: HEB. ii. 4.

THE period of time covered by this course of lessons is only about a year. The progress of the Church of Christ during that brief period is nothing less than miraculous. The hundred and twenty who gathered in the upper room at Jerusalem (Acts i. 15) received in one day an accession of three thousand members (ii. 41), and this number was soon increased to five thousand (iv. 4). Beside all this the Gospel had spread to Samaria (viii.), and was doubtless carried by the Eunuch into his own land.

This growth is the more miraculous considering the many difficulties the Church had to encounter. The fact recorded in the first lesson—the ascension of Christ—might seem to render any further progress impossible. What could compensate for the loss of his personal presence? The ecclesiastical authority of Jerusalem was bitterly opposed to them, and had persecuted Peter and John (iv.), committed the whole company of apostles to prison (v. 17, 18), put to death one of their members (vii.), and followed up this with a bitter and cruel persecution (viii. 1-3). Were not these difficulties enough to crush the infant Church?

The Golden Text explains the miraculous progress. The ascension of Christ was followed by the descent of the Holy Spirit (ii. 1-4), who witnessed through the apostles to the resurrection of Christ with such boldness and power that none could resist them. The need of every worker to-day is to be filled with the same Spirit.

Power in witness-bearing was not the only effect of the Spirit's presence. Within the Church there were two manifestations of the Spirit's presence. He bound the whole company together in love, so that they rejoiced to bear one another's burdens (iv. 32). And he acted in judgment upon every form of evil (v. 1-11), and upon mere pretenders (viii. 18-24).

From this series of lessons learn: (1) That the work of the church in the world is to bear witness for Christ; (2) that the presence of the Holy Ghost is the all-important condition of successful witness-bearing; (3) that He must accepted as the spirit of love and judgment in believers, if He is to use them for the conviction of others; (4) that responsibility for this service rests, not upon the apostles and leaders only, but upon all the church; and (5) that where He is present no opposition, however powerful, can prevent the church's progress.

All-day Prayer for Israel.

As a considerable number of your readers in this and in other countries are in full sympathy with us in Jewish missions, may I be permitted to ask that Christians who love Israel will seek to assemble together in the towns and cities, and even villages of Great Britain and Ireland, and also on the continent, and in the United States and Canada, on Friday, September 30, for united prayer on behalf of Israel? In Mildmay, at the Conference Hall, as formerly, we propose to hold four meetings, 9 a.m., 11 a.m., 3 p.m., and 6.30 p.m., on that day, and shall be glad if a host of Israel's friends in London and in the provinces will unite with us at Mildmay. Those who cannot unite with us in person might have meetings of their own on the same day. There never was more need for united believing prayer. The Gospel is being widely preached to the Jews. The New Testament distribution is wonderfully owned of God. The troubles of the Jews are increasing in every land in consequence of the cholera alarm. "The time of Jacob's trouble" is setting in, and the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. We hear already the sound of abundance of rain, and we pray the Lord to awaken the Church to a united continuous and believing cry, on Israel's behalf, for those "showers of blessing" God has promised. This will bring down blessing, not on Israel only, but also on the church and the world, and will give joy to the heart of our precious Lord.

Dyspepsia.

No medicine acts so readily upon Stomach Weakness as Guy's Tonic. By bracing up the walls of the organ, increasing the quantity and improving the quality of the gastric juice, the highest digestive efficiency is maintained. The appetite returns, digestion is quickened, and assimilation is rendered perfect.

Rev. Stephen Harper writes:—

"WESLEY MANSE, ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.

"DEAR SIRS,—I hereby desire to express my extreme indebtedness to you for the speedy and great relief and benefit my wife has derived through taking Guy's Tonic; her sufferings from indigestion were very severe, and her loss of appetite protracted. For several months she could not take a meal without pain; in fact, she was very rarely free from pain during those months, but your first bottle restored her appetite and greatly alleviated her sufferings, and she is fast regaining her wonted energy and brightness of spirit; she now takes her food with pleasure, and has no discomfort after.

"Please accept our most cordial thanks for your excellent remedy, also for so promptly forwarding the other bottles as desired.

"I remain, on her behalf, yours gratefully and sincerely,
"STEPHEN HARPER."

Should you have failing health, do not hesitate, but procure Guy's Tonic at once. The most obstinate, chronic, and complicated maladies are yielding daily to this matchless medicine. Guy's Tonic can be obtained of all Chemists at 2s. 9d. per bottle, or by post from Guy's Tonic Co., 4, Ludgate Circus, London, E.C.

THE MOST SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT IN THE WORLD

"I WAS SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."
So writes a grateful Patient to
MR. C. T. CONGREVE,
relative to his case of
CONSUMPTION

"YOUR MEDICINE IS PRICELESS"
FOR THE TREATMENT OF CONSUMPTION & ALL CHEST DISEASES, AND
RESULTS OF INFLUENZA.

Read Mr. CONGREVE'S Book "ON CONSUMPTION, Etc.," which may be had, post free, for ONE SHILLING, from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All patients should read the Book first.

Mr. Congreve is always willing to meet the cases of those whose circumstances are such as to need a reduction.

THE FORTY-FIRST SERIES OF CASES.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
"A LIVING WONDER"—
ADVANCED CONSUMPTION—CASE OF MR. JOHN NATTRASS.

This patient resides at Weather Hill, Stanhope, by Darlington.

A friend, Mr. THOS. POTTS, of WASKERLY, to whom the case is known, applied to me on his behalf, June 20, 1890.

The patient's illness commenced five months before this with influenza, which was followed by inflammation of the lungs and pleurisy. The cough was severe; expectoration now green and purulent; secretions all wrong. For four months the flesh had been wasting all over the body, and strength declining; swellings of the feet and ankles at night. "The doctor reports him to be in deep Consumption."

In this pitiable state he commenced with my treatment, under advice by letter.

In a month there was no improvement, except a slight difference in the expectoration.

In two months a little gain of flesh and strength.

After the fourth month there was marked improvement. And then he gradually and steadily improved, and got over the winter fairly well. For thirteen months from the commencement he persevered, with the reward of established health.

Twelve months after ceasing the treatment, he writes me (July 12, 1892):—

"I feel it my duty to yourself, and to all who suffer with Consumption, to acknowledge what your treatment has done for me. My friends call me 'a living wonder.' In my extreme state, after being attended by a clever and kind-hearted doctor, I was pronounced to be in an incurable Consumption. My body was reduced to a skeleton. Those who visited me looked upon me as at death's door, and left me saying, 'He won't be here long.' However, I commenced with your medicine and persevered. And the result has made myself and family happy beyond measure. I was never healthier than I am now. I have continued my employment with pleasure. I should be glad for my case and recovery to be published.—JOHN NATTRASS."

N.B.—I find that altogether sixteen letters were written to this patient, from Coombe Lodge, and as many supplies of medicine forwarded direct, which is far the best for all to do who suffer from anything beyond a simple cough or cold.

INTRODUCTION.

CHARLES HADDON SPURGEON was in no respect ordinary. He was great as a man; great as a theologian; great as a preacher; great in private with God; and great in public with his fellow-men. He was well versed in the three things which, according to Luther, make a minister: temptation, meditation, and prayer. The school of suffering was one in which he was deeply taught.

While a powerful loadstone to draw men, the attractive force in him was not selective, as in the case of the magnet; but miscellaneous and diffused, as in the case of the earth. John Ruskin could appeciate, while the common people heard him gladly. Large-souled though he was, he had a mind that was a meet associate; and, best of all, he knew the truth, and to the last upheld the banner of the Reformation.

The following chapters aim to supply an original Sketch and Portraiture of this distinguished servant of the Lord Jesus. The work is based, for the most part, on information obtained at first hand. For years the writer has had exceptional opportunities of converse with the great preacher; seen him under varying conditions; and heard him descant, at least scores of times, on matters of personal reminiscence, as well as upon numerous points of theological interest and inquiry. No apology, it is hoped, is needed for drawing upon sources that are personal and private. The seal of confidence is in no case broken. The Christian has nothing to conceal; and, in this case at least, what has been spoken in the ear may well be proclaimed from the housetop.

That this tribute of affectionate regard for the memory of Charles Haddon Spurgeon may bring glory to God, and be a means of grace to the reader, is the earnest prayer of

THE AUTHOR.

WORKS BY REV. DR. CULROSS.

JOHN, WHOM JESUS LOVED.

A SKETCH OF THE CHARACTER, WRITINGS, THEOLOGY, AND INFLUENCE OF THE BELOVED DISCIPLE. By Rev. James Culross, M.A., D.D.
With Eight Chromo-Lithographic Views. Tinted covers, 2s.; cloth boards 2s. 6d.; Presentation Edition, Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON wrote in The Sword and Trowel:—

"Preachers abound, but divines are few. The printing press pours forth a mass of matter, but a real book is a phenomenon. We count ourselves happy, for we have met with a divine in Dr. James Culross; and in his work entitled 'John, whom Jesus Loved,' we have found a book. Many writers are mere echoes of other men's voices—they imitate the good steward in bringing forth things old, but things new are quite out of their way. One of the excellences of Dr. Culross is the freshness of his thought. The dew is on his branch; he is no withered bough of the autumn forest. His mind allows young flowers to break through its soil after their own fashion, and to blossom in their own sweet way.

"It is altogether without reserve that we recommend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."

"Behold I Stand at the Door and Knock."

CHRIST'S MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH AT LAODICEA. By Rev. James Culross, M.A., D.D. Printed Covers, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.; Presentation Edition: With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece. Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 2s. 6d.

"Another 'gem of purest ray serene' from the deep waters of our brother's teeming mind. He possesses a ripeness of thought and a beauty of expression which, in our judgment, are scarcely equalled, and in not one instance surpassed by those of any other living teacher known to us."—The Sword and Trowel.

CHRIST'S MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH OF EPHESUS. By Rev. James Culross, M.A., D.D. With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece. Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 2s. 6d.

"We do not know higher-toned or healthier devotional literature, of the evangelical type, than is represented by this and Dr. Culross' previous works. This work is instructive, suggestive, full of spiritual force, and at the same time strong and manly. We heartily commend this book for the refreshment of our busy teachers."—The Sunday School Chronicle.

DOCTORS RECOMMEND REAST'S PATENT

INVIGORATOR CORSET.

FOR

Ladies, Maids, Girls, & Boys.

THE LANCET, July 23rd, 1892, says:—"We have had submitted to us a specimen of 'Reast's Patent Invigorator Corset.' It claims two important qualifications. First, that it tends to prevent tight lacing, so common and so injurious, and, secondly, that it lends support to the shoulders by means of straps which cross over the shoulders and thus afford valuable assistance to persons who are weak in the chest, or who have a tendency to stoop. We have submitted the truth of these statements to practical test, and the corsets have been found to be a great comfort."

PRICES: Boys & Girls', 4s.6d.; Maids', 5s.6d.; Ladies', 5s.6d., 6s.11d., 7s.11d., 8s.6d., 12s.9d.; Specialite Long Waist, 9s.11d., 12s. 9d.; High Bosom, 7s. 11d.

THE VERDICT.

A leading London Tea Broker says:—"I have this day tasted 'Blue Cross' Pekoe Souchong against a Golden Tip Tea which recently sold at almost its own weight in gold, and have no hesitation in stating that, for drinking purposes, I consider 'Blue Cross' Pekoe Souchong better tea."

HENRY MARTYN,

Saint and Scholar, First Modern Missionary to the Mohammedans.
1781—1812.

With Portrait and Illustrations. By GEORGE SMITH, C.I.E., LL.D., author of "Life of William Carey," "Life of Alexander Duff," etc.

"A book which ought to find a place on every minister's bookshelf and in every church library."—The Independent.

"Dr. Smith fills up with healthy human detail what before lay in bare outline. We have here a Martyn who can talk, laugh, and fall in love like other people, but who, while relating himself wholesomely in this way to the rest of his fellows, in what was special to his character and his work, still rises to heights that pierce the heavens."—Christian World.

"Henry Martyn is fortunate in his biographer. Dr. George Smith was for many years editor of the famous journal, The Friend of India, printed, published, and mostly written in the same district of Serampore with which the names of Carey and Marshman will ever be associated, and in which Martyn himself was destined to labour."—Daily News.

"The whole biography is brightened up with local colouring that could only be introduced by a writer who had himself spent years of usefulness in India."—The Scotsman.

"It is quite unnecessary to believe strongly in missions in order to follow with deep interest the life of this modern Anglican saint, for it is not so much the work he did which makes his biography valuable, as the heroic and indomitable spirit with which he finished what was given him to do."—Glasgow Herald.

AIDS TO BIBLE STUDENTS.

"A remarkable work, packed with information, and invaluable as a simple and easy handbook. Indeed, the ingenuity that has succeeded in squeezing so much into the space deserves all praise. Scores of items combine to astonish the reader. The editing has been carefully done, and a very trustworthy and wonderfully complete and sufficient book is the result."—SCOTTISH LEADER.

THE BIBLE REMEMBRANCER:

A VALUABLE HANDBOOK TO THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS. Sixty classified Headings, with copious Scripture references.

The whole of the work has been carefully revised, and a large portion entirely re-written; while several new features have been introduced, rendering this Edition one of the most comprehensive companions to the Bible extant. To the Sabbath-school Teacher or Local Preacher it is simply invaluable.

Among the prominent features may be mentioned:—

A Complete Modern Atlas of Bible Lands, consisting of FOURTEEN Choice Coloured Maps, containing the result of the most recent research.

An Analysis and Summary of the entire Scriptures—by which any Biblical incident can immediately be traced.

The Words of Christ; the Miracles, and Prayers and Thanksgivings of Christ: with full references to each of the four Evangelists.

A Chart showing THE ORDER OF ENCAMPMENT AND MARCH OF THE ISRAELITES THROUGH THE WILDERNESS. (Specially prepared for this Edition.)

Tinted Covers, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"A compact and handy manual of reference, which will be found useful by all students of the Bible. The pages are interspersed with numerous engravings illustrating the text, as well as views of places famous in Biblical history."—LITERARY WORLD.

THE BIBLE INTERPRETER:

AN ILLUSTRATED DICTIONARY OF THE HOLY SCRIPTURES.

Among the principal contents are

An Explanation of Eighteen Hundred Scripture Words and Phrases—Table of the Reigns of the Kings of Judah and Israel—Miracles Recorded in Scripture—Table of Scriptural Proper Names, etc., etc.

With Steel Frontispiece. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.
Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.

WORKS BY REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

SCRIPTURE BIOGRAPHIES.

Abraham; or, The Obedience of Faith. 13th Thousand. With nine Original Illustrations. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from The Sunday School Chronicle:—
"Beautifully illustrated, and so tastefully bound as to be a most acceptable gift-book. But the contents are such that no Christian can rise from their perusal without feeling consciously strengthened of God, and inspired afresh for a Godly life. Sunday-school teachers may learn from it how to draw out the spiritual lessons of the Sacred Word."

Elijah; and the Secret of his Power. 20th Thousand. With nine Original Illustrations. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from Christian Progress:—
"Full of devout reflection, stimulating thought, and most helpful instruction—all tending to lead up to a holier and more consecrated walk with God. This, in every sense of the word, is a helpful book; and we must cordially recommend it to all who desire to go forward and higher in their Christian life."

Israel: a Prince with God. 17th Thousand. With nine Original Illustrations. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from The Sword and Trowel:—
"Exceedingly good. Not only spiritual, as everything from our brother Mr. MEYER would be, but also thoughtful, fresh, suggestive, and thoroughly practical. Oh, that hundreds of our younger men gave signs of such real godliness, such true devotion, and such clear knowledge of the Gospel as we see in the author!"

Joseph: Beloved—Hated—Exalted. 8th Thousand. With nine Original Illustrations. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from The Preachers' Magazine:—
"The great charm of this very beautiful monograph is its clear setting forth of the way in which the life of Joseph mirrors, to use the author's own phrase, the life of Jesus. This idea is not at all unduly pressed, but it runs through the volume, and adds immensely to its homiletic and devotional value."

EXPOSITORY VOLUMES.

A Review from The Presbyterian, August 26th, 1892:—
"These 'Expositions' are not critical; they are practical. They do not deal with the 'text,' nor with 'readings,' nor with any of the difficult theological problems of the Fourth Gospel; but they are evidently designed to be suggestive, to be helpful, to ordinary everyday readers of the New Testament, and it is certain that in many instances this end will be attained. There is much to commend in the volume. The chapters (of which there are thirty) are of a very convenient length. The passages selected for comment are all of highest importance, and in the divisions or 'heads' of his expositions the author is often strikingly happy. For example, when speaking of 'The Blessed Results of doing the Will of God' (p. 120), he says:—(1) It feeds the spirit: (2) It clears the judgment; (3) It gives rest; (4) It is the key to certain knowledge; (5) It introduces to a large family ('He stretched forth his hand toward his disciples and said, Whosoever shall do the will,' &c.). Again, in referring to the words of Jesus (p. 146), he says:—'His words are gracious..... His words are authoritative..... His words make deepest truths current coin. .... His words are life..... They are the words of the Father.'"
After a candid critical survey of the whole volume, the reviewer sums up:—
"But, while we have said all this, we are free to confess that on the whole we like the book. A good healthful spirit pervades its entire teaching; and there is such a manifest sympathy with the life, and work, and words of Jesus, that we cannot but heartily wish it success."

Tried by Fire. Expositions of the First Epistle of Peter. 10th Thousand. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from The British Weekly:—
"The popularity of Mr. Meyer's Expositions is a good sign of the times. This, on the First Epistle of Peter, is one of the best, and is full of tender Christian wisdom. There are many unobtrusive signs of thought and culture throughout; but the chief charm of the book is its earnest simplicity."

DEVOTIONAL VOLUMES.

The Shepherd Psalm. Meditations on the 23rd Psalm. 30th Thousand. Cloth, 1s. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

A Review from The Irish Congregational Magazine:—
"We have never read anything so charming on the twenty-third Psalm as this volume from the pen of Mr. Meyer. The devout reader will find it one of the most comforting, cheering, and inspiring books he can read."

Christian Living. Practical Counsels concerning the Christian Life. 27th Thousand. Cloth, 1s. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

A Review from Footsteps of Truth:—
"A choice book of nine chapters, into which is condensed a mass of helpful instructions and wise practical counsel on various topics relating to the Christian life."

The Present Tenses of the BLESSED LIFE. 28th Thousand. Cloth, 1s. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

A Review from The Record:—
"An excellent little book, full of practical Christianity; a pocket companion which will be valued by those whose dearest aim it is to walk daily more closely with God."

The Psalms. Notes and Readings. Pocket Edition. 8th Thousand. Cloth, 1s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.
This volume is also published in demy 8vo size, as one of
"THE CHRISTIAN BIBLE READINGS"
Series of Expositions.
Tinted covers, 1s.; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth bev. boards, gilt, 2s. 6d.

A Review from The Cambridgeshire Congregational Magazine:—
"A pocket commentary on the entire book of Hebrew song. The treatment of each Psalm is brief, plain, and well planned. The divisions are usefully suggestive for public addresses, and the fillings in are the pith and marrow of Gospel truth. For private devotional use also it is a little treasure."

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., and Other Contributors.

THE CHRISTIAN BIBLE READINGS.

Notes and Readings on the Five Books of Moses: Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d. PRESENTATION EDITIONS: Cloth boards, 2s.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

A Review from The General Baptist Magazine:—
"For Sunday school teachers who have little time and less money, nothing could be more welcome. A commentary of this sort is within the reach of every teacher."

A Review from The Primitive Methodist:—
"Combines the instructive with the practical, and while unpretentious in form, contains a great amount of information, compressed into exceedingly small bulk. We can cordially recommend this work to preachers and teachers, and all who desire intelligently and profitably to study the Word of Life."

THE CURE OF CONSUMPTION

BRONCHITIS AND ASTHMA

DR. ALABONE'S REMEDIES.

By the success of these remedies all barriers have been broken down, and it is now an acknowledged fact that CONSUMPTION, BRONCHITIS, and ASTHMA are curable by this specific treatment, many thousands of cases having been abandoned as hopeless.

THE WHOLE OF THE REMEDIES ARE NOW, FOR THE FIRST TIME, AVAILABLE TO THE PUBLIC, and can be obtained from any chemist. Agent: J. Howard, 21, Queenhithe, London, E.C.

Dr. Cronin, M.D., writes:—"You have done wonders for my patient. I hardly thought he could have improved so much under the treatment."

Dr. Fairbairn, M.D., L.R.C.S., writes:—"The success of your treatment of Consumption is simply marvellous. I have had no less than 60 CASES OF CURE."

"Your remedy for Consumption has PROVED A SUCCESS in my own case, after having been GIVEN UP BY SEVERAL EMINENT PHYSICIANS."—T. Young, L.R.C.P., L.R.C.S., &c.

B. Watson Davies, M.D., L.R.C.S., writes:—"I have great pleasure in stating that a near and dear relative of mine, who was in an ADVANCED STAGE OF CONSUMPTION when I commenced your treatment several members of her family having died of that disease), is now wonderfully improved in all respects, and has entirely lost her cough."

Members of the medical and other professions are testifying to the extraordinary results obtained from the use of these remedies.

A TABULATED FORM FOR SELF-TREATMENT, POST FREE.

Everyone should read the "Cure of Consumption," 20th thousand, post free 2s. 6d., by author, EDWIN T. ALABONE, M.D., P.A., U.S.A., F.R.M.S., late M.R.C.S. Eng., late Consulting Surgeon to the Lower Clapton Orphan Asylum, &c.

IMPORTANT WORK. FOR TEACHERS OF THE YOUNG.

CHILDREN'S MEETINGS.

AND HOW TO CONDUCT THEM.

By LUCY J. RIDER and NELLIE M. CARMAN.

220 Pages, Crown 8vo. Tinted Covers. 2s. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

CONTAINS

Sixty Outline Lessons for the Class,
Forty-three Diagrams for the Black-board,
Twenty-five attractive Children's Hymns.

"A thoroughly practical book, by teachers who have learned by experience the best methods. Teachers will find it most helpful, especially in black-board word-work. The Addresses are teachings—which very many Children's Addresses are not."
—The Teacher at Work.

"We do not remember meeting with any better book than this for help in Children's Meetings. It is first-rate. There are objects to be drawn on the black-board; but there are also capital lessons to go with them. Black-boards get very, very black; and the children are very bored, when it is all chalk and no sound sense. Many of these Addresses would make sermons of the first water—and what more can we say of Addresses?"
Rev. C. H. Spurgeon in The Sword and Trowel.

"We heartily commend this beautiful service to our musical friends."
—Irish Congregational Magazine.

"We had the best test of the quality of this Service of Song in hearing a Saturday night choir of young people give it a very successful rendering. The story is a very telling one. Some of the music consists of old favourities, but with a sufficient number of new and simple airs to make it, we believe, a favourite service in our evening gatherings for some time to come."—Baptist Messenger.

MORGAN & SCOTT'S EDITION.

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS:

A COMPLETE AND AUTHENTIC ACCOUNT OF

THE LIVES, SUFFERINGS, and TRIUMPHANT DEATHS of EARLY CHRISTIAN and PROTESTANT MARTYRS in ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

WITH TWELVE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Complete in One Handsome Volume, cloth, bevelled boards, 10s. 6d.
Presentation Edition, cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 12s. 6d.

"We are glad to see our old friend John Foxe in this new and handsome form. Of all the editions that we have seen, this of Messrs. Morgan and Scott's is decidedly the best. The additions of the Editor's, bringing the history down to recent date, help to show the unchanged nature of Romanism, and the need of watching its insidious incroachments. Rev. Ingram Cobbin's introductory essay on Popery is of a very vigorous and instructive character. The numerous engravings lend additional interest to the book, and its excellent 'get up' renders it an ornament worthy of any drawing-room"—Methodist Recorder.

"A new edition of this useful and standard work; and a most masterly exposure of what Romanism really is, and what it can do when it has the upper hand. The perusal of this book should form part of the education of our youth. Heads of families should purchase it for their children to read. Popery can find no favour where FOXE'S MARTYRS is studied."—Christian Progress.

TIRED!

How commonly we receive in answer to inquiries after the health of our friends—"Tired!" Life seems a considerable burden to a number of folks, for they trudge on through life clogged and weighted with one thing and another, seldom realising the bright joys that ought to be part and parcel of daily existence. Poor souls! Many are weighted with a heavy load—sometimes of trouble and care, sometimes of physical pain and infirmity, and it is small wonder that some sink into a chronic state of gloomy unfitness for life and its duties.

Tired! Of what? Pain and suffering? Then let us see what can be done for you. What is the trouble? Are you overworked without a prospect of release from the pressure? Do you feel as though you have no strength in yourself? Are your ordinary duties too much for you? In any case you can be helped, and that very easily. Try what Dame Nature can do for you. She has provided for tired folks a means of help of which comparatively few make use, otherwise we should have more bright faces. Even those who are worried and sorrowful would be better for this help, because worry brings infirmity, and the infirm cannot battle with adverse circumstances like the strong; therefore the maintenance of physical vigour in such cases is highly advantageous. Even if not entirely incapacitated for work, we would have every busy worker avail him or herself of the natural calm and restoration obtainable from Appareil Magnétique. Multitudes who rise as weary as when retiring, or more so, would gain natural and healthful sleep, hence a better beginning for each day; tired folks, who make use of this natural adjunct to rest, find their energies gradually revive, and their infirmities decrease, simply through the involuntary organs being enabled to act efficiently. In nine cases out of ten in which folks find daily tasks trying, they are the unfortunate subjects of some organic irregularity, often induced by overwork, and to have this rectified would mean almost a new world to them. Why not try what can be done in your case? We are constituted a great deal alike, and what has helped thousands will help thousands again. Abundant evidences of its power are everywhere around us, and testimonies like the following could be multiplied indefinitely:—

Mr. HENRY H. ABBOTT, Greenhill House, Aberford, Yorkshire.

AUGUST 13, 1892.—"Eleven months since I came under your Treatment, and when I look back, I can see a great improvement during that time. Notwithstanding that it had been a very trying period, Nature does not require that constant hounding on to the performance of these functions which are necessary, not only to the body's well-being, but also the enjoyment of mental calm and quietude. I see great cause for gratulation, and I find too, in my diary, a considerable diminution of expenditure on medicines with better results.

In other respects, too, I have felt thankful for the Garment, and I think it does more than you promise: it has a many-sided influence on health which it is impossible to define. Though not particularly sensitive to cold, I am looking forward to winter with far greater pleasure and hope than I have hitherto done. Cold feet are reduced to a minimum, and the slightest movement seems to send the blood, armed with some new properties of warmth, which soon dispels discomfiture, and shows the Garment to contain a welcome reserve of energy, most approved of.

Sufferers of every class are cordially invited to lay their cases before Mr. B. COPSON GARRATT, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C., who will be pleased to advise gratuitously in any instance. A thoughtful and candid opinion is always given.

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan & Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for The Christian should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Canon Girdlestone, of Hampstead, widely known as the author of several critical and practical theological works.

After concluding his Irish tour, Mr. Moody will hold missions in England as under :—

St. James's Hall, Manchester, October 3-5.
St. George's Hall, Bradford, October 6, 7.
Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, October 9-16.
Boston (Lincolnshire), October 17-19.

The London Committee have gladly accepted the kind offer of the friends at the Metropolitan Tabernacle who have placed that building—the largest available in London—at Mr. Moody's disposal from October 9th to 16th inclusive. There is little probability of Mr. Moody being able to devote more than eight days to his London mission. It is all the more necessary to make the most of this opportunity. Mr. Moody is not wont to spare himself, and it is expected that he will hold three meetings each day.

A large choir is in course of formation to lead the singing. Those who sang in the choir at the different centres during the London mission of 1883-4, and who are willing to help again in a similar capacity, are requested to send their names and addresses at once to Mr. Clement F. Davis, 4, Westover-road, Wandsworth Common, S.W., marked "Choir," stating what part they sing.

It is hoped that friends everywhere will make this mission a matter for prayer, and that London may participate in the showers of blessing that have been so copiously vouchsafed elsewhere.

The felt want in modern ministry is power. In many quarters the ability to elucidate, to explain, and to illustrate, is patent enough, but how to convict and lead captive in Christ's train, is not in evidence. Acts iii. 16, seems to epitomize the power of the early Church. "And his name, through, on account of, faith in his name, hath made this man whole whom ye see and know; yea, the faith that is through Him hath given him this perfect soundness in the presence of you all." The one thing to which the eyes of Peter, John, Paul, and others were turned was Jesus' name. They believed in the availableness of that name according to occasion. By faith in that name the cripple was made whole, the three thousand on the day of Pentecost were convicted, the world was turned upside down. It was by way of Christ exalted men's bodies and souls were reached.

The above leads us to speak of modern methods of evangelistic operation. Ought the ingathering of results to require the amount of pressure, the art, if not artifice, so much in vogue? We do not see the need of it. If the bird is wounded when on the wing, it will not fly far. So if the wound within is real, it will need no stress of urging to gain the declaration. Those who are pricked in the heart will, of themselves, cry out. Forced results are common, but their value is doubtful.

Recent celebrations of the poet Shelley have occasioned sundry comments in the papers. A correspondent of a widely circulated journal, writing apologetically, admits that "no reader of the paper is any longer in a position to doubt that Shelley was an anarchist, atheist, and libertine in theory." It is a serious question how far high art excuses low morality. Is the world better for a beautiful poem, tale, or picture, which teaches infidelity, encourages evil passions, and prompts to vice? Does the jewelled cup atone for the poison it contains, which renders it attractive? Why should editions of Burns or Byron lying on hotel or family drawing-room tables for general perusal, contain poems unfit to be read by our sons and daughters, and likely to poison the mind for years after? Godliness should honour art as a divine gift, but should not hesitate to denounce it when degraded to the service of sin.

Mr. Froude has been expressing his regret that there should be so much "light literature" read by the students at Oxford, and he has been endeavouring to induce them to read fiction, if fiction they must peruse, of a somewhat higher order. The question is one which can hardly be considered as anything but a personal one, but it is a different matter in regard to novel-reading in connection with our free libraries. We were informed recently by the custodian of one of these institutions in a large town, that of the readers who took books to their homes seventy-five per cent. chose rather indifferent fiction, and it is a question how far it is right or fair to burden the ratepayers with the cost of pabulum of this kind for people who can afford to pay for such books if they desire to waste their time upon them.

In reply to the inquiry of a missionary, the priest in charge of the shrine of the great Indian idol at Calcutta not long ago said that on the previous day a sum equal to £300,000 of English money had been offered to the goddess by her worshippers. £300,000 in one day! Yet the mighty and wealthy Christian nation which rules India, while spending one hundred and twenty millions a year in drink, can only spare one miserable million per annum for the spread of the Gospel. Does not the poor Hindu, steeped in superstition and held in the terrible chains of caste, show his belief in his religion in a far more practical way than his white brother, who lives in the full blaze of Gospel light?

England yearly sends out hundreds of merchants, soldiers, and civil servants, but the missionaries only go in twos and threes. Are they more than nominal Christians who thus persistently neglect the Master's last command? Men and money are needed. In India, where, thank God, a brighter day is breaking, men and women may find glorious and happy scope for the employment of all their best talents. The churches at home need rousing: let them not be afraid to give up, if need be, their best men. The more we, as churches and as individuals, do for God, the greater will be the reflex blessing. No man has ever yet been able to make God his debtor.

Professor Max Müller, in his address at the Congress of Orientalists, showed that in former ages similarity of language linked together the Eastern and Western nations. This should prompt increased sympathy on our part with those regarded as far separated, especially with the natives of India, our fellow subjects. Let us labour and pray that the language of Zion may be familiar alike in both hemispheres, that the Bible received from the East may be sent back from the West, and Asia with Europe call Jesus Lord.

Professor Hechler, of Vienna, exhibited at the Congress a portion of a newly-discovered papyrus manuscript of the Septuagint. The papyrus contains the greater portion of Zechariah and part of Malachi, and is apparently of extreme antiquity. The document may have little more than an archæological interest, yet its discovery will inspire many hopes that Biblical manuscripts of substantial value may even at this late period come to light. The monuments have answered more than one of the questions raised by critical theorists. Who knows but that documents may yet be discovered that will help to settle once and for all some of the small, though in their way important, disputes regarding textual readings?

News has been received from Persia which should have an interest for all careful Bible students. A cast of the monument of Cyrus has been obtained by Mr. Cecil Smith, of the British Museum. It includes his likeness, with mystic and perplexing accessories, the message of which has yet to be read. The monument has stood on the plains of Murghab since the days of his dynasty. The cast was secured just in time; since it was taken, the original has been overthrown and destroyed. Thus another "note" in stone, illustrative of Scripture history, will be on view at the Museum.

It is refreshing to pass from arguments about the Scriptures to testimony regarding their spiritual power. An esteemed correspondent writes to us :—

I believe the Bible to be the Word of God, not because I have been taught that it is so, nor because the evidences of its Divine authorship and inspired contents have been so conclusively dealt with by some of our leading intellects (though these considerations have helped me in days gone by); but because bringing, not "an inspired mind to read an inspired book," but a dark mind and a sinful heart within range of its wondrous light and teaching, God's own voice spoke to me through the pages of the Book. Darkness fled away, and liberty and peace took the place of restless uncertainty, weary bondage, and distressing doubt. Now, every bit of the Bible, from Genesis to Revelation, is instinct with Christ. Increasingly, as I read the earlier books, I see the force and meaning of Christ's own words when, in John v. 46, referring to Moses, He said, "He wrote of me:" or, again, as we have it in Revelation, "The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy."

Experience shows that what the Scriptures say of themselves is worthy the attention and confidence of all; and no such statement can be made regarding the most respectable questionings or the most ingenious conjectures of the most learned and excellent critics.

As though it were not enough to publish columns of racing and betting news every day, one of the leading provincial papers has so far pandered to a depraved public taste as to devote more than a column for several days in succession to a series of prize-fights in America: the spectacle of a couple of men—treated as heroes—mauling each other for more than an hour before six thousand people being described in all its disgusting details. The Daily Chronicle, however, has the courage to call things by their right names. These fights "have not a single decent feature. The companions and friends of the fighters are the scum of society. The scene is one of blood-thirsty savagery, of blasphemy and obscene profanity, and the social demoralisation they cause is simply inestimable."

Dr. Barnardo has been the subject of another virulent attack in The Scotsman, based on the allegations of three lads who had been inmates of his Home. A full and circumstantial reply was made to the charges, some of which were almost grotesque in absurdity; but, instead of apologising, the Editor has continued the onslaught. We should imagine that fair-minded readers will have detected the strong and evident prejudice of the writer, and have begun rather to sympathise with the victim of his angry pen. Naturally, The Catholic Herald rejoices in having such a weapon with which to flagellate one whom it is pleased to designate "an arch-proselytiser." But will Dr. Barnardo care very much, and is the cause of truth ever advanced by such unfair and unjust attacks? We hope Scotch Christians will all the more show in a practical way their real sympathy with Dr. Barnardo and his work among waifs and strays.

The manager of an extensive Welsh mine explained to a correspondent that many accidents arose from the false self-security of the quarrymen. Sometimes they carried their lamps open, to get better light than when screened by the wire gauze. Sometimes, when the inside of the lamp was ablaze, showing the presence of inflammable gas, they continued at work instead of retreating till the spot was ventilated. Sometimes they struck a match or smoked their pipes, and thus the gas was ignited. Thus it is with multitudes who continue in sin because judgment has not overtaken them. Conscience, like the inflamed gas within the Davy lamp, often warns them of danger, but they disregard the warning in eagerness for pleasure or gain. They hear of others being cut short in sin, but hope that in their own case there will be time to escape by-and-by. All honour to the brave men who risked life to rescue the imprisoned miners! But how much stronger reason there is for Christians to warn the careless of their danger, and tell them of the only way of escape.

One of the most serious indictments ever drawn against the drink traffic has been presented during the past week by Mr. Justice Denman, whose intimate acquaintance with one aspect of the question none can doubt. He goes back to the first assizes over which he presided at Durham twenty years ago, when there were nine cases of murder to try. There was not one of these cases which was not directly attributable to drink. On the last occasion at which it was his painful duty to inflict the death penalty, it was upon a man who had murdered his mother while under the influence of drink. Once more, at Liverpool recently, sixty-three prisoners were tried, and out of these thirty-six had committed offences attributable to excessive drinking.

The last count in the charge refers to his most recent experience. During the last two months, one hundred and eleven prisoners have been brought before him for trial. He has carefully examined the record of each of these individuals, with the result that he found no fewer than one hundred and thirty-eight previous convictions for drunkenness were recorded against the one hundred and eleven prisoners that appeared before him in the dock. Comment is superfluous.

The sad records of our police courts, as given in the daily papers, continue to point to the increase of the drinking habit on the part of women. A few days ago, during one sitting of the magistrate at Southwark, no fewer than twelve women, each of whom was stated to be "well dressed," were charged with being drunk in the streets. The magistrate described the sight as a "pitiful spectacle," but there is something even more than pitiful in the facts which remain behind such a condition of things.

In last week's issue we quoted a statement by Rev. D. L. Leonard, of Oberlin, U.S.A., to the effect that Manchuria, with a population of twelve millions, is one of several large regions without a single missionary station. We are glad to learn that this statement is erroneous. Since 1873 the United Presbyterian Church has maintained a vigorous mission in that region, which is also occupied by the Irish Presbyterian Church—the missionaries of the two Churches co-operating in the most cordial manner. At the present moment the U. P. Mission has seven fully-equipped stations, with seven ordained missionaries, four medical missionaries, three lady missionaries, and numerous native agents, churches, hospitals, and schools, all in active operation. Moreover, arrangements are now being made for the early occupation of a large district in the north-west of the Province.

"THE MYSTERY OF THE CROSS."

The British Weekly publishes a sermon by Mr. Horton (he has expressly repudiated the title "Rev.," and we respect his faithfulness to his conviction) from the text, "Who his own self bore our sins in his own body on the tree."

If any have thought of Mr. Horton as not holding the foundation truth of the expiation of sin by the precious blood of Christ, they will, we trust, rejoice to find their suspicion removed by the following quotation:—

> I wonder if there is anyone who is perfectly true to himself that has not come to that point at some turn in the way of life, and has asked, "Is there a way?" And then happy is it for you if there has risen up before you that vision of what was done upon the cross. And as you look upon it many voices, great, familiar voices, speak to your troubled soul. "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world," says the great Forerunner. And the other John echoes, "He is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but for the sins of the whole world." And Paul says, "He was delivered up for our trespasses, and was raised for our justification." And that other Pauline writer answers, "The blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without blemish unto God, cleanse your conscience from dead works to serve the living God." And Peter says, "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, having died unto sins, may live unto righteousness, by whose stripes ye were healed." And the chorus of voices swells along the highway of the ages, and we catch the sound of such voices as of that dying Puritan who said, "I cannot say I have not so lived that I should now be afraid to die, but I can say I have so learned Christ that I am not afraid to die." There is a tumult of gladness, and many friends of ours are in the throng, many who have gone before, and many of whom we have read and heard; and we turn to that cloud of witnesses and we ask them
> Whence their victory came?
> They with united breath
> Ascribe the victory to the Lamb
> Their triumph to his death.
> And there seems to be for us God in Christ reconciling us unto Himself, not imputing to us our transgressions. Is not that great? has not that been the lot? is not that the truth which has entered in from without and saved?

It is true that there are other passages with which we are not in agreement; but the love that "hopeth all things" rather seeks first in every one for the recognition of the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and rejoices not in iniquity, but in the truth, wherever it is found. We regard with unfeigned satisfaction this setting forth of substantive Apostolic truth.

We question, however, the wisdom of the title, "The Mystery of the Cross," whether given by the preacher or by the reporter. Mr. Horton says:—

> On the one hand, though no explanation can be given which is quite satisfactory as to what the Lord meant precisely when He said that He had come to give his life a ransom for many, and "this is the blood of the New Testament, which is shed for you, and for many, for the remission of sins;" yet, on the other hand, the apostolic writings and the history of the Church and the Christian experience of to-day all tend to show that we must steadily grasp and faithfully present that great fact as the foundation of man's pardon and the means of his regeneration.
> Now, on the one hand it is said with truth that no satisfactory explanation can be offered. The New Testament appears to give no theory upon the subject at all, as if there were no need of a theory. . .

The preacher then refers to the theories, first of Irenæus and then of Anselm, but he does not go back to the Old Testament. Those who studiously and reverently meditate on the Passover, and on the further unfolding of its eternal truths in the Offerings prescribed in Leviticus, find in the Gospel of Jesus Christ "the revelation of the mystery which was kept secret since the world began, but now is made manifest, and, by the Scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith."

There are secret things which belong to God, and there are things which belong to us and to our children. There is a mystery of iniquity and a mystery of God. But one of the many pernicious survivals of Paganism is the tendency to multiply mysteries. By means of the Babylonish, Eleusinian, and other mysteries, a corrupt priestcraft maintained ascendancy over the people; and sacerdotalism, for the same purpose, transmutes into "holy mysteries" the word of the truth of the Gospel, which is come into all the world, and brings forth fruit in all who believe in Christ Jesus and know the grace of God in truth.

The mind of Mr. Horton is far removed from sacerdotalism. But extremes meet, and the neglect or repudiation by the schools of the types and shadows of the law as Divine illustrations of Gospel truths leaves the Cross of Christ a mystery instead of a revelation, and sends forth its scholars with dubious glad tidings, discounted by the declaration that no satisfactory explanation can be offered of what the Lord meant when He said that He had come to give his life a ransom for many. Is not the element of uncertainty thus introduced into the message calculated to produce uncertainty in the minds of those who are converted—or influenced—by it?

WELCOME MISSION, PORTSMOUTH. — Mr. Thomas Hogben, director of the mission, writes: "Our two days of waiting upon God were times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The attendance was very good, and the presence of Jesus Christ very real. On Monday our thoughts were directed especially to Christian life. After short Bible readings, setting forth what the Lord purposes to do for his own people, two ladies gave their own testimony to the experience of full salvation. (1 Thess. v. 23, 24.) Many were greatly helped by a blessed experience realised at the Keswick convention, where one saw the the possibility of full deliverance from the blighting power of sin, and putting her hand of faith upon Ezekiel xxxvi. 25, 26, 27, God made them a living reality to her soul."

Scripture's Witness to Itself.

THE witness of Scripture to itself is confirmatory of all Scripture.

In our day there are many who apply to Inspiration a qualitative test, and endeavour to establish a relation of greater and less in regard to the inspiration of the Bible, as if inspiration could be a thing of degrees. It would be hard, indeed, for confusion of thought to become more confounded than in minds where such a conception reigns. Yet how common is this strange conceit. We have heard ministers treat the inspiration of the Epistle to the Romans as quite subordinate to that of the Sermon on the Mount. They would, they tell us, put much more faith in the very words of Jesus than in those of Paul. And that is only one specimen of a spirit that, in these days, is displaying itself in innumerable follies. It is strange that such a theory, which is not only false, but unthinkable, should be accepted as true. Inspiration does not admit of degrees. What is written is either inspired or it is not. The Inspired Word is the Inspired Word. To talk of one inspired word being more or less inspired than another inspired word simply betrays the mental chaos of the speaker. When we hear of inspirational values—which ranks as a profound discovery of modern thought—we are reminded of the primitive condition when "the earth was without form and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep."

There is, no doubt, a graduated purpose in Revelation. God did not see fit to communicate everything at once. But that fact cannot take from the inspired reality of any part of the sacred writings. God's Word, whether it be in Genesis or in John, can never be either less or more than God's Word.

We may distinguish, it is true, between the contents of Holy Scripture considered as a revelation; for every verse, or chapter, or book is not of equal practical urgency. For example, we cannot say of every verse in the Sacred Canon—what has been said of John iii. 16—that "it is the Bible in miniature." Nevertheless, while there is this variation in the value of the members of the Inspired Word considered as a revelation, there can be no difference in the inspiration which they have in common. You value, probably, your right hand more than your left, but you do not say that your left hand is less truly an organic part of you than your right hand is. Even so is it with the members that make up the grand corporate whole of Holy Writ. They may not have all an equal function, but they have all the same inspired life, and come to us on the ground of the self-same Divine authorisation.

Scripture's witness to itself is in harmony with what we have advanced. Scripture never perpetrates the gross absurdity of speaking of one part of its contents as more or less inspired than any other part. What Scripture does is to claim the place of an inspired whole. Thus 2 Tim. iii. 16, "All"—or "every"—"Scripture is given by inspiration of God." The expression pasa graphê—"all Scripture"—is never used save to denote the sacred Scriptures. Dean Alford is explicit on this point; and by comparison with the verse going before, it is clear that the expression in question is synonymous with the sacred writings. How instructive that the reference here is not to the inspired men but to the inspired Book, and to the inspired Book throughout. It matters not how inspiration came, the form or forms it took; all Scripture is instinct with one breath, and that the breath of God.

Scripture's witness to itself always takes for granted, what we may call, its own inspired solidarity. Gal. iii. 8 is an instance: "And the Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen, or the Gentiles, through faith, preached before the Gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed." So in the 22nd verse of the same chapter: "But the Scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe." Such a use of the term "Scripture" would be impossible were it not a corporate whole; the vital body of Divine truth; an inspired vehicle of Divine communication throughout. "Modern Thought" denies the solidarity of Scripture—asserting that the tissue is human, that "the strands into which the design is worked are seen to be anything but gold"; that, in fact, the Bible teems with inaccuracies and is spotted all over with mistakes. But Scripture speaks of itself as an indivisible whole, inspired by the far-seeing mind of God, whose utterance is infallible and authoritative, and from whose sentence there is no appeal.

The limits set us will only allow of the citation of a few of the many infallible proofs with which the sacred pages teem. Take, for example, 2 Peter i. 20, 21: "Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." Here Peter marks off Old Testament prophecy from anything in the prophets themselves as to its cause, reason, or origin. It is important to note this. The notion which the advanced school of criticism has sedulously fostered, which is indeed with them a postulate, is that the prophets were deep men, men of shrewd, far-seeing intellect, who were able to discern coming events in their projected shadows, and to prophesy accordingly. But the witness of Scripture is that the prophecy did not originate from the prophet himself. It did not grow out of the prophet's own mind, or out of the circumstances in which he was placed. The prophetic spring was altogether Divine: yea, Divine to such a degree as to make the strands of speech themselves all pure gold. For if "holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost," then the words constituting their speech accurately expressed the mind of the Spirit; and, therefore, Old Testament prophecy comes to us duly certified as a verbally inspired communication.

That the prophets themselves had this persuasion is clear from Deut. xxx. 10; 2 Sam. xxiii. 1, 2; and Jer. xxxvi. 4-8.

In conclusion, the Master's own use of Scripture demonstrates the Scriptures to be an inspired whole. He ever treats them as universally authoritative. Witness in proof his repulse of the tempter; his plea in driving out the money-changers from the temple; his use of Psalm cx. 1 (see Luke xx. 41-44); and likewise his justification of his disciples in plucking the ears of corn on the Sabbath day. These, and a host of passages besides, show that our Lord ever acted and spake on the principle of the entire integrity and Divine authority of the Sacred Record.

Modern Thought affirms that the inspired writers are all faulty, all exponents of "the human and limited." Our Lord systematically quotes them as final and infallible.

Modern Thought makes light of texts, and affects to believe that anything or everything may be proved thereby. But such allegations can have no weight with the disciple, for the reason that they have no weight with the Master.

Modern Thought dots the inspired pages with marks of interrogation—"Yea, hath God said?" and, not content with that, meets their positive statement, in multitudes of cases, with bold denial—"Nay, it is not so." "God hath not so spoken." But the Master's uniform watchword is, "It is written."

Modern Thought is the tempter's onslaught. Let us repel him with the Damascus blade of the Written Word.

JAMES DOUGLAS.

"WORK OUT—SALVATION."

"WHEREFORE, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling" (Phil. ii. 12).

A corrupt church teaches her votaries to work for salvation, and they seek to merit heaven by prayers, fastings, penances, lacerations of the body, etc. Strange delusions! How vain are all such efforts! The work is done. Christ's hands, though nailed, wrought our salvation; and the utterance of our dying Lord, "It is finished," was a note of triumph, for the price was paid, and the gate of heaven was opened to all believers. Salvation is God's free gift to a lost and ruined race; nothing we can do could procure it; the price paid was the blood of the Son of God.

The work completed by our Divine Substitute cannot, in any way, be added to; but our individual benefit depends on our acceptance of it in the exercise of simple faith. "Look unto Me, and be ye saved" (Is. xlv. 22). "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved" (Acts xvi. 31). Salvation thus becomes our own. What, then, is the meaning of the apostle's injunction, "Work out your own salvation"? Salvation is not a mere abstract principle; neither is it a treasure to be locked up in a casket. A mine would be of no use to the owner unless it were worked; he must dig diligently for the treasure enclosed. Fields must be tilled and sown if a harvest is to be reaped. A hungry man may hold in his hand a loaf, but his hunger is not appeased until he eats.

Is, then, the title to ownership of no importance? On the contrary, it is the keynote of the text—"Your own salvation." You have no right to another man's estate, still less may you work it out, but faith in our Divine Substitute gives the believer the title to an inheritance with the saints; it introduces him to a new relationship. "I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty" (2 Cor. vi. 18). "—— If a son, then an heir of God through Christ" (Gal. iv. 7). Salvation ensures to the possessor a peace which passeth understanding (Phil. iv. 7); joy of which neither sorrow nor suffering can rob him (John xvi 22, 24; 2 Cor. vi. 10); access to the throne of grace, yea, even with boldness (Heb. iv. 16); fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus (1 John i. 3); and an Advocate at the right hand of God (1 John ii. 1).

These are a few of the privileges and blessings that "accompany salvation," and should not these be worked out? To live in the Spirit, and to walk in the Spirit, to manifest in our mortal flesh the life of Jesus, and to show forth the praises of Him who hath called us out of darkness into his marvellous light, are honours that belong only to a purchased people. Therefore with joy let us "draw water out of the wells of salvation."

"Salvation! Oh, the joyful sound!
'Tis pleasure to our ears;
A sovereign balm for every wound,
A cordial for our fears.

Salvation! Let the echo fly
The spacious earth around,
While all the armies of the sky
Conspire to raise the sound."

DUNDEE.—The Y.W.C.A. report shows that, in addition to the direct religious influence of the Bible classes, lectures, fellowship and prayer meetings, interest in which is deepening, members have the opportunity of learning those domestic arts which are not only useful to themselves, but a means of diffusing happiness and comfort to others in their own homes. The Association has its centre at 33, Tay-street, Miss Fairlie being resident superintendent. It has also branched out to East End, Polepark, Errol, and Newport. The past year has been prosperous and fruitful, and has shown more than ever the need of such work.

The Grindelwald Conference.

Christians in all stages of life and experience, and of the most varied opinions, are becoming more and more convinced and convicted of the stupendous folly and disgrace of the divisions and bitternesses which exist among us; the world is stumbled by it, and Satan rejoices over it.

An endeavour, doubtless crude in many of its features, is made to draw nearer together, and a reunion, which to many seems impossible on the lines laid down, is set forth as the end in view. The means suggested to this end seem to be external and mechanical rather than internal, and vital pressure from without rather than attraction from within: yet the fact remains that an opportunity is given to professing Christians of all schools and shades to look one another in the face, not in conflict, as Josiah challenged Pharaoh Nechoh, but in brotherhood and peace.

True, not all those who have been prominent on the platform during the summer have been representative men. For example, the appearance of Rev. C. F. Aked as an invited speaker may have seemed something like a rebuke of those who had recently been in conflict with him in the Baptist Union. I am assured, however, that this manifest mistake was not intended to indicate any lack of sympathy with those who had so earnestly contended for the faith. The hearty welcome accorded to Pastor Theodore Monod showed how glad Dr. Lunn was to secure the co-operation of evangelical men. It was a cause of great regret to him that the invitations to the Revs. H. W. Webb-Peploe, F. J. Chavasse, H. C. G. Moule, F. B. Meyer, and Mark Guy Pearse, could not be accepted, and that the views of such as they have not been more adequately represented.

And this leads to the question whether representative evangelical men are wise in declining, as many do, to take part in these Conferences. Perhaps there has been a misapprehension, to the effect that their presence would imply adhesion to the purpose and method of the conveners. This certainly ought not to be the case; for as the object is the reunion of the churches, all representative members of churches have a right to the expression of their views; perhaps, also, duty demands such expression.

This mountaineering Conference is especially attractive to the young. Have spiritual men no responsibility in regard to these? Is it not desirable to be informed by personal acquaintance, concerning a movement likely to have considerable influence upon the men and women who are soon to be the active members of the churches?

Jesus went everywhere. He attended feasts of the Jews at Jerusalem, and feasted multitudes in desert places. He accepted the invitation of Simon the Pharisee, and invited himself to the house of Zaccheus the Publican. He received sinners and ate with them. He went to the marriage at Cana, and to the synagogue at Nazareth. He talked with the woman at the well, and yielded to the bidding of the men of Sychar. He visited the coasts of Sidon to heal a demon-possessed daughter, and welcomed with more than courtesy the Greeks who came to Philip with "Sirs, we would see Jesus." The Apostle Paul ate with the Gentiles, and rebuked Peter because he withdrew from them for fear of those who came from James. The Master and his servants came into human contact with men of every nation and of every mind. If Christians are the light of the world, excluding one another, they must let their light shine before men; if they are the salt of the earth, they must come into actual and intimate contact with it.

With much deference to many good men who have felt constrained to stand aloof from this Conference, may we not venture to suggest the wisdom of reconsidering the position? if for no other reason, in the interest of the promising and intelligent young people who are influenced by it—that they may have the advantage of hearing the subject presented from the distinctly Scriptural point of view.

May we then hope that this Conference will fulfil the expectations of its conveners? Let us be as frank as the speakers in that Zwinglian Church on Wednesday. If it be of God, union or reunion will be wrought out on his method: first Chaos and then Cosmos. "I wound and I heal." "To pluck up and to break down, and to destroy and to overthrow; to build and to plant." First the Law and then the Gospel. The law came that the offence might abound; God's purpose in this Conference may be to bring the evil of disunion into strong relief. The law showed man's inability to rectify the evil; this Conference may work out the same result. The last prophet of the law cried, looking upon Jesus as He walked, "Behold the Lamb of God!" and the voice from heaven was heard at Jordan and on the Holy Mount, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased; hear Him." "He shall build the temple of the Lord."

It would have been sad if, at that Conference, the voices had not been heard of men who testified of Jesus as the Head of the body, the Church, the members of which, and they alone, can be united with the union for which his intercessory prayer (John xvii.) was prayed.

The whole of Wednesday was devoted to a reunion conference. The Bishop of Worcester presided at the morning session, and his liberal, kindly, courteous, and dignified tone throughout threw a charm over the whole proceedings. Addressing the meeting as brothers and sisters in Christ, he said in sight of the terrible evils around it is sad to see Christians squabbling over things of comparatively little importance. How thus are the altars of Paganism to be thrown down? If we may not expect all to become members of one visible Church, we may understand one another better and love each other more. The Reunion of the Churches, as he understood it, must mean that the various bodies which had separated from the Church of England should by some means be reunited to her. He fully recognised the Nonconformist bodies as Churches, though a large section of the English Church refuse to recognise them as such. The question to be considered, therefore, was, Is it possible for Nonconformist bodies as Churches, and as each having their separate organism, to be reunited in any form whatever to the National Church of England? In reply to this his lordship referred to the text of the proposal made by the bishops in the Lambeth Conference of 1888. The first of these four articles was that the Holy Scripture contained all things necessary to salvation, and was the ultimate standard of faith. The assertion there, said the Bishop, was that the article really separated Protestants from the Church of Rome—a point on which all Nonconformists would agree. The second article of the Lambeth Conference was the acceptance of the Apostles' Creed as the baptismal symbol, and the Nicene Creed as a sufficient statement of Christian faith. The third was the two sacraments ordained by Christ Himself—Baptism and the Lord's Supper, with an unfailing use of Christ's own words, and the elements ordained by Him. And the fourth article was the Historic Episcopate locally adapted in the method of its administration to the varying needs of the nations and peoples called of God into the unity of his Church. The Bishop expressed his personal judgment that the status of the present Nonconformist ministers should be recognised, while all in future should be episcopally ordained. The historic episcopate was shown by the Bishop and by the following eloquent speaker, Père Hyacinthe, to mean little more than the office of the Presbyterian Moderator.

The Rev. Charles Berry, of Wolverhampton, spoke as the representative of "one of the freest of free denominations"—the Congregational. He confessed himself an enthusiastic ecclesiastical reunionist. He was in no hurry for reunion. A hasty, artificial, and unreal union was worse than disunion. If our desire is for the honour of Christ, reunion will come. They were not seeking merely the recognition of each other's faith in Christ, but the recognition of each other's rights in the kingdom and each Church as parts of that kingdom. He was himself a bishop, elected by the people, and having oversight of several missions connected with the church of which he was pastor.

In the afternoon Dr. T. B. Stephenson, ex-president of the Wesleyan Conference, presided. His chief points were: The Divinity of our Lord as essential to fellowship; The Sacraments must be included in any basis for reunion; also the Episcopal system. He asked, however, as a test question, Can the living Church to-day make a live bishop, independent of the line of preceding bishops?

Two essential preliminaries must be laid down. First, the recognition of ministerial orders already existing; and 2ndly, the preservation of the autonomy of the several Churches which will enter into union with each other. Is an interchange of pulpits quite impossible? Such interchange would sweeten the relations of the various Churches for closer union. On all sides there must be mutual concession.

Professor Lias said that had it not been for the divisions among Protestants, the Church of Rome might have ceased to exist.

Mr. Wall, of Rome, often wondered that our people are so desirous of spreading the Gospel, yet seem not to know or not to care that fifty per cent. of their efforts are dissipated by disunion. Union of Protestants is necessary, for the Romanists are doing deadly mischief in our country. We had heard much of bishops, but not much of believers; the real succession was in the Church composed of believers.

The evening session was presided over by Professor Stokes, who did not seem to regard the subject seriously. Pastor Theodore Monod described several movements in the direction of federation among the French Churches. A new society, "the National Society," has just been founded for evangelising France, and to this Père Hyacinthe is devoting much time. The question of the episcopate did not trouble them in France. Somehow it never seemed to thrive there. They did not accept disunion as a providential fact, as did some people. The speaker then urged that the question of reunion should be put into the hands of Him who was most interested in it—Christ Himself. If in the personal inward life, and daily work, and family life and church life, they placed themselves under his leadership, they would have done the best they could.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, in a very able, outspoken, and comprehensive speech (leading, however, where perhaps few could follow), said that the real goal must be the Organic Reunion of the Churches of Christendom. The episcopacy is a sine quâ non of reunion. The Lambeth proposals were most generous, liberal, and Christian. We must concede primacy to the Church of England. Let her take one more step, and she will throw upon Nonconformists and non-Episcopalians the whole responsibility for the disunion of British Christianity.

Rev. Mr. Gough, Ilkley, Yorks, laid stress on the living Christ as the one foundation.

Mr. Samuel James Capper spoke with suppressed emotion of the pain he felt at the exclusion of the Friends, by making the sacraments a sine quâ non.

Professor Stokes, in a concluding speech, asked where the line was to be drawn in the recognition of existing ministers. Was every man who wrote "Rev." before his name to be received as qualified to administer the sacraments?

On Friday evening Professor Stokes gave an address on Irish Disestablishment. In the subsequent discussion divergent views were expressed as to the benefits, spiritually, of non-Establishment. In concluding, the Bishop of Worcester said:—Whatever the result of these meetings may be, they will soften prejudices and antagonism and draw men closer together in the bonds of holy love. They would all feel this and not forget it when they returned to their several spheres.

TO

THE CHURCH WHICH IS HIS BODY.

The fulness of Him that filleth all in all!

THE Apostle Paul was taught by revelation from God that the Gentiles (or the heathen) should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ, by the Gospel (Eph. iii. 6), and Paul, who speaks of himself as being less than the least of all saints, went forth in the grace given him to preach among the Gentiles, A.D. 45.

Eighteen hundred and forty-six years have passed by since those days; the population of the world has increased enormously, and we are to day confronted by the awful announcement that there are a thousand millions of Gentiles now living, who have never yet heard the "good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people"—"A Light to lighten the Gentiles."

This revelation made by God thus early in the Christian era so evidently proves the yearning love of the Father's heart, that the query forces itself upon us, Was not an error, fearful in its consequences, committed by the Church of Christ when she allowed her attention to be diverted from the manifest purpose of the Lord, who willeth all men to be saved, and to come to a knowledge of the truth? Had she been of the mind of Christ, would she not, at not infrequent intervals, have carried on the work of evangelisation thus divinely inaugurated? The Lord would have seen much fruit of the travail of his soul, and our responsibility would have been marvellously lessened. But God is rich in mercy, and the day of grace is not yet closed.

If, as is supposed by many—the seventh thousand years of our history will see the Lord Jesus Christ reigning upon the earth, there is no time to lose, if his command is to be obeyed, and the glad news of redemption made known to all nations. Living in the nineteenth century we shall not adopt the manners and customs of the first century A.D.

The human voice would now be utterly unable to reach every creature, but we have the printing press, and are being unmistakably shown how very easily the work may be managed, if we are in downright earnest, and, with firm faith in our Lord, willing to be little in our own eyes, and in the eyes of others, and come to his help! Hitherto, we have sought to have Christ come to our help. Let Him now take the place of honour!

There is no doubt as to his wondrous working!

It is not the word of the preacher that converts the soul, but it is the word of the Lord Himself, given forth by the preacher—a great and grand distinction.

"The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life."

Now, as the word of the Lord is contained in each of the four Gospels, each Gospel contains within itself all that is needed for salvation, by the grace and power of the Lord, and by the silent effectual working of the Holy Spirit; therefore, nothing could be imagined more adapted to the need of the world than the universal diffusion of these little volumes.

In proof whereof: A Gospel handed to a heathen in China was, before he slept, the means of his conversion, and in the course of three months time the Christians gathered around it numbered sixty! They had had no visible teacher save the recipient.

It is affirmed that each of the four Gospels has been similarly blessed. The Lord is teaching us a wonderful lesson!

Then how very easy travelling has been made for us by steam and bicycle! Of the large number of distributors who will have to be sent out, many will no doubt gladly go at their own charges—and it is hoped the missionaries will, for the needful time, themselves join the phalanx, and be kindly willing to direct and work with it. Being with an English gentleman, and handing the little Book with a silent prayer, the acquisition of an unknown tongue will not be needful.

That there must be regular organisation will be patent to all, and need not be further touched on here. And the Lord loveth the cheerful giver!

Why should the Church of Christ be thus singled out? Because she loves much, having had much forgiven. Because the more nearly she can co-operate with the Saviour, the more deeply will she drink of his Spirit. Because her heart's desire and prayer is to be like Him—seeing Him as he is—and being for ever with Him! Nominal Christians might run well for a time, and then fall away.

It has been said, If his command is to be obeyed! Look for a moment at the opposite contingency. How should we meet Him? How answer for wasted time, neglected opportunities? How endure the wail of sorrow from souls He died to ransom?

> "Where He may lead I'll follow,
> My trust in Him repose:
> And every hour in perfect peace,
> I'll sing, He knows! He knows!"

Let us not be discouraged by the comparative smallness of our numbers. Elijah thought himself to be one alone in Israel, but the Lord showed him for his encouragement that there were yet seven thousand others who had not bowed the knee in the fashionable idol worship. A few only, in touch with Christ, to whom all power in Heaven and on earth is given, must surely be stronger than a host in hostility—latent or declared.

Chosen in Him from before the foundation of the world, to be his Body now, his Bride hereafter, the Lord never forgets to supply the need of even the feeblest member of his Church.

A Call to Work.

FROM A BIBLE READING BY REV. DAVID BARON.

THE analogy between the task of building the second Temple, to the accomplishment of which Haggai's prophecy (i. 7, 8; ii. 3, 4) was directed to rouse the people, and the commission of world-wide evangelisation entrusted to the Church of God, is striking.

(a) The Work is the same. "Go up to the mountain and bring wood, and build the house, and I will take pleasure in it, and I will be glorified, saith Jehovah." (Haggai i. 8.)

So every faithful labourer in the Gospel is a wise master builder of the Temple of God on the foundation which He Himself has laid in Zion. Take care how ye build thereupon. For "every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is." (1 Cor. iii. 13.)

(b) The Promise is the same. "Then spake Haggai, Jehovah's messenger, in Jehovah's message unto the people, saying, I am with you, saith Jehovah" (i. 13), which message was repeated again in chapter ii. 4. The same word of encouragement our Master speaks to us while engaged in the work of building the spiritual Temple; "Go, therefore, disciple all nations; and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age."

(c) And the Power by which the work is to be accomplished is the same. Even for the fitness of carrying the building of the material Temple to a successful issue, they had to be pointed to the Spirit which "remained among them" (ii. 5); and be told a few months later, when fresh difficulties came in the way, that, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith Jehovah of Hosts." (Zech. iv. 6.) Much more certainly must we seek to be "endued with power from on high" before we can be builders of the spiritual Temple. "Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Spirit coming upon you," were the words of our blessed Lord.

Who were included in those whom God expected to take part in the work of building the second Temple? "Yet now be strong, O Zerubbabel, saith Jehovah; and be strong, O Joshua, son of Josedech, the high priest, and be strong, all ye people of the land, and work." Zerubbabel the prince was needed, Joshua the priest was needed; but if the work of building the second Temple had been left to the orders of priests and princes, it might in all probability never have been accomplished at all. "All ye people of the land": including men, women, and children. We know that the women of Israel worked hard in preparing most beautiful work for the tabernacle and Temple; and later on we find the daughters of Shallum taking their place by the side of their brethren in the rougher, harder work of building the city wall. It is the same also in relation to the spiritual Temple. "All the people of the land" must be roused to the duty and privilege of sharing in this holy task. "All ye people of the land": limited in this case to all who truly love and wish to serve our Master; for we will have no help from the Samaritans who profess to know Jehovah and stick to their old idols. Their participation in so spiritual and holy a work would be a mere blight and curse.

Why has such slow progress been made in the evangelisation of Jew and Gentile, in gathering out from both the "lively stones" to complete the spiritual sanctuary for God? Because the work has for the most part been left in the hands of the Joshuas and Zerubbabels; and missions are looked upon as a kind of luxury in the Christian church, instead of our recognising the fact that the whole church was by its very constitution a missionary organisation, formed so by the Lord Jesus Christ.

The vast mass of church members have never been thoroughly roused to a sense of responsibility in this matter; and the result is that in the nineteenth century after Christ came, and the commission was entrusted to the church to preach the Gospel to every creature, about two-thirds of the human race are still in ignorance as to whether there be at all a Christ, a Saviour of men. "Now, therefore, thus saith Jehovah of Hosts, consider your ways," or more literally, "Set your hearts on your ways." Ask yourselves if we have done all for the house of God that we might have done.

Let me reproduce in illustration one of the most extraordinary historical documents the world has ever seen. It is the famous "Decree of Levy in mass," promulgated by the National Convention of the French Republic on August 23, 1793, France at that time being in a desperate condition, at war with all Europe, and invaded on every hand by Austria, England, Holland, Spain, and Prussia. It ran as follows: "All France, and whatsoever it contains of men or resources, is put under requisition. All France is to rise, and their banner is to bear the inscription, 'The French People risen against Tyrants.' The young men shall go to the battle; it is their task to conquer. The married men shall forge arms, transport baggage and artillery, provide subsistence. The women shall work at soldiers' clothes, make tents, serve in the hospitals. The children shall scrape old linen into surgeons' lint; the aged men shall have themselves carried into the public places, and there by their words excite the courage of the young, preach hatred to kings, and unity to the Republic." Neither was this a mere empty, boastful emanation, like so many others. At that time, in answer to this special appeal, all France did rise, so that, amid the awful diabolicisms which attended the French Revolution, from a repetition of which may God deliver Europe—we get a glimpse of patriotic heroism of which the world has witnessed but rare instances. Headlong it rushed, like a bear robbed of her whelps, and in a short time succeeded, not only in expelling all invaders, but stepped over their frontiers and threatened to become masters of Europe. This is what one bankrupt, impoverished nation, as France then was, could do when once thoroughly aroused to its task,

Now, it is not mere hyperbole that the church of Christ, too, is, as it were, being invaded from every side. Not to speak of the foes in disguise of friends within, and to point out here only the dangers threatening it from without, there are the godless masses of Christendom marching under the banners of avowed infidelity and superstition; there are the hundreds of millions of heathenism and Mohammedanism; there are the millions of Jews for the most part unevangelised, and hating intensely the caricature of the religion of Jesus which has been presented to them in the name of Christianity. These all are no mere phantoms, but terrible realities, which, although I have no fear for the true church, against which even the gates of hell shall not prevail, will yet trample down a great deal in their march, and make all aggressive work on the part of the church more and more difficult. And the great God, the King of kings, whose we are and whom we profess to serve, has also issued a decree of "Levy in mass." All we are and have is put under requisition. Ourselves: "Ye are not your own," He says, "for ye are bought with a price, therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's." Our possessions: "The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith Jehovah of Hosts," by this very prophet Haggai (ii. 8).

Shall we respond to God's call? From all parts of the world come testimonies that this is a great day of opportunity. How long it may continue we know not. Alike among Jew and Gentile, an open door such as has never been known before is put before us. Shall we enter it? Shall we dedicate ourselves afresh for the service of our God? Yea, and our sons and our daughters, and our gold and our silver also? Then, indeed, would our God pour out a quickening and a blessing upon us "until there be not room enough." Then, indeed, shall we hasten on the gathering out of the elect, and the coming of the Son of Man.

Mr. Moody in Ireland.

(From our Special Correspondents.)

CLOSING DAYS IN BELFAST.

Before these lines are read Mr. Moody will have left Ulster, and will be busy proclaiming the Gospel message in the less receptive atmosphere of the South. But the influence of his work, and the sacred memories of his visit, will abide in these northern parts for generations to come. The leader writer in a Belfast daily, truly observed one morning last week that the mission now closed will have to be taken into account by any future candid historian of the religious life of the North of Ireland.

The second week of the meetings in Belfast was like unto the first, with some notable additions. Chief among the fresh features were the given on four mornings of the week in Dr. Williamson's church in Fisherwick-place. These will ever be memorable to all who were privileged to attend. Mr. Moody never appears more in earnest than when he exhorts his fellow Christians, and leads them on to higher planes of heart consecration, or to more earnest fidelity in service.

On the two first mornings he spoke with remarkable reality and power on the enduement of the Holy Ghost for service. Almost his opening utterances on this theme was a practical word of commendation for the Keswick Convention and its teaching. Much, he observed, had been said by way of criticism on the theological unsoundness of that teaching. A leading Church of England minister told him he had been to Keswick and the first thing he did on his return home was to go to every Dissenting minister in the place, and have fellowship and prayer with them. Up to that time he had thought there could be nothing good outside the Church of England and had always looked down on his Nonconforming brethren. Since he had thus fraternised with them he had been a much better man, and his nearest friend in the town was an Independent pastor; the two of them were like David and Jonathan, and both were having conversions in their churches all the while. Anything (added Mr. Moody) that will bring forth fruit of that kind must be good. He had been to Keswick himself, and he advised them all to go there and get broadened out. He pitied the minister of the Gospel who had not got out of his grave clothes, and who could not see anything good beyond his own denomination. Nothing will set men right in this matter but the power of the Spirit of God. When a man gets filled with the Holy Ghost denominationalism is to him as the dust in the balance; he will not be asking whether this and that brother is a Churchman, or a Presbyterian, or a Methodist.

Then Mr. Moody proceeded to expound his views on the work of the Spirit; commenting in his own terse and forceful way on the personality of the Holy Ghost, on His power to fill the heart with love, to impart liberty and freedom from the shackles of custom in service, to bear witness of Christ, to lead into all truth. These points were amplified and illustrated in language that glowed with holy fire, and seemed to communicate a like warmth of spirit to the large listening company of ministers and workers. If, he said in closing, he could get ten men in Belfast to get what that man got at Keswick he would be

WELL REPAID FOR COMING TO THEIR CITY.

The same subject was continued next morning to a still larger audience. In the course of his address Mr. Moody gave utterance to some strong and scathing words on the unwholesome influence of tobacco-smoking ministers. How could a man sit down beside an anxious inquirer and lead him into the beginnings of a holy life while his own breath was redolent of the weed? The filling of the Holy Ghost as a definite experience was urged as a prerequisite to power in service; he drew on his experience and that of others to show how this experience had been productive of marked results in after service. The meeting was much moved under the Evangelist's heart-searching appeals. "I believe," he exclaimed, "that in every pulpit in Belfast you could have a new preacher next Sunday if all the ministers were to get this enduement of power."

At the close of the address there seemed to be a common feeling and desire throughout the hushed assembly that they should there and then tarry for a season of definite prayer for the filling of the Holy Ghost. The proposal was made and carried by a nearly unanimous rising vote. Then came a prolonged stream of intensely earnest petition on this behalf, a woman's tender pleading voice mingling with the others in confession of unfaithfulness, and in devout beseeching for the bestowment of the needed blessing. The church seemed to be at once a Bochim and an Elim—a place of weeping for the Spirit-grieving of the past, and of glad refreshment in the appropriation by faith of the promise of the Father.

Such a meeting was probably never held before in Belfast, and it soon got noised abroad, so that next morning there was a still further swelling of the numbers. Mr. Moody, however, is extremely jealous of anything like "vain repetitions" even in matters of holy experience, and he took up the different subject of the Inquiry Meeting as an essential part of regular ministerial evangelistic effort. He argued for far more elasticity in Gospel methods, so as to interest and reach those outside the pale of ordinary church services. It was a bold and wise plea for the adaptation of method to varied circumstance and need. It made a real impression, no doubt, on the ministerial and other friends present, but I have considerable doubt as to the result. The Episcopalian services seem, under existing arrangements, to be as unbending as the laws of the Medes and the Persians; and the same might almost be said of our Presbyterian churches; probably of the Methodist and others. The custom of generations in our older systems has hardened the order of worship and service into a cast-iron mould, the breaking-up of which would stir up the opposition of Pharisees and formalists, to whom "use and wont" would appear to carry a higher sanction than the leadings of the living and ever present Spirit of God.

BIBLE STUDY.

On Friday morning Mr. Moody's topic was the private and individual study of the Scriptures. As he remarked, it was a somewhat discursive talk on various methods of studying the Scriptures, so as not only to know the letter and structure of the sacred writings, but to have at hand material for immediate use in work for others when occasions arise. He advocated, as of old, "topical" rather than purely consecutive study. He created much interest by telling how a new and lively feeling of regard for the Bible had come into home and school circles at Northfield by the plan of getting each scholar or member of the family to read the same chapter, and afterwards to give out briefly in concert the points that had most impressed them. On this plan the Gospels and other books had been gone through in daily chapters at Northfield and Mount Hermon. To show how it had laid hold of his own mind and memory, Mr. Moody repeated, without reference to note, the outlines of the Gospel by John, etc. The idea was evidently quite a novel one to many of those present, and probably it will be taken up in not a few Irish households or the Bible classes. A fervid Methodist pastor who prayed at the close thanked God for the "bracing morning walk" that the assembly had had through the fields of Scripture, and it was without doubt at once a surprise and a delight to many in the audience.

Though it is somewhat out of step in an orderly record of the week's happenings I may here introduce a mention of the held in the Donegal-square Church on Friday at noon, just after the Bible talk referred to. With hearts aglow as to what they had heard, and with many blessed experiences of the week in mind, a large company met to testify of the goodness of God either to themselves or to others for whom they were specially concerned. Mr. W. Robertson guided the proceedings with wisdom, and to the profit of all. Many were the heartfelt expressions of thanks that fell from men and women throughout the audience for prayer answered, and for the manifest working of God's power in the hearts of believers, unbelievers, or backsliders. Mr. Merton Smith had a special note of praise to sound for interest awakened among the children during the week and for youthful hearts drawn out in love to the Saviour. One pastor thanked God in fervid speech for bringing him home from his holidays just in time to participate in the enjoyment and service of the past two weeks. The season had been to him as heaven on earth—all the more that God had given him the souls of some of his own children; he was almost beside himself with joy.

Many requests for prayers were presented, and Mr. Merton Smith sang jubilantly a hymn, "Isn't that good news?" by Mr. Peter Bilhorn, who, he said, was converted in America in a public-house, and is now much blessed in singing Gospel songs. A short, but very lively and telling address followed from based on the exhortation: Have faith in God. "If we had such faith as God wishes us to have (he said) we should have got nearly everybody in the great hall saved last night. What astonished me more than anything was that after that marvellous address by Mr. Moody (on 'Excuses') the people did not stand up like a forest of trees. Is there such a thing as having too much Gospel? I do not think there is a town in the world more favoured than Belfast at the present moment. You have had a wonderful fortnight and you are going to have another wonderful time with Mr. McNeill. What are you going to do with all this blessed seed sowing in the hearts of the people? It is a tremendous responsibility. I will tell you what always occurs to me—that while workers in this country are treading on each other's heels, millions in India, China, Africa, and other lands have got scarcely a Christian soul to point them to Jesus Christ. If these great missions should be barren in the result that the churches are now anxiously looking for—that young men and women should offer themselves for the foreign field—one great benefit will have been lost.

"I never saw more respectable and orderly church-going people than you have here, but we want more life in our services, even if we have a little less of our cold and awful respectability. I do thank God for that dear man Mr. Moody, and for the way in which he has been preserved. I do not see that his natural force has abated one bit since I knew him first. When I put myself alongside of him, and think how God has used him, and how he has got the Scripture at his fingers' ends in such a remarkable way, I am ashamed of myself; aren't you? If in one calendar month after Mr. Moody and Mr. McNeill have left Belfast, you do not go heartily into the work for God as the result of these missions, I believe the devil will come in and cool you down as cold as a lump of ice, and you will lose all the blessing you have got. What are you people going to do? Look what the devil is doing. Look at the forces of evil that are arrayed against the Lord Jesus Christ. There is hardly a week in the year in which there are not tons of awful infidel literature landed on the shores of India. Is it not a marvellous thing that men should be so keen on doing this frightful evil? The powers of evil at work are all intense. If the handful of God's people will not go shoulder to shoulder and heart to heart in fighting to the death against these forces, what is the Kingdom of God going to do? What we need to do is to exercise all the holy ingenuity we can, and to be ever upon our knees asking God to guide us in furthering his Kingdom upon earth."

As a delightfully encouraging pendant to Mr. Denny's stirring speech there came a remarkable little incident from Rev. Wesley Guard, who said the facts had just been related to him. It shows how men may exercise the "holy ingenuity" of which Mr. Denny spoke, and how God honours faith. It was to the effect that a farmer, living three miles out in the country, wanted to come into the meeting one day, but was unexpectedly detained, and did not know how he would get in time. He started, and presently he heard a car coming behind him. When it came up the vehicle was stopped, and the man said to the driver, "Thank you, sir, for giving me a lift." "I did not offer you a lift; but as the horse stopped you had better get up." The farmer got up and they drove on. After a little conversation the driver confessed that he was in great distress about his soul, and the tears began to fall. The good man told him the way of life, and there and then as they journeyed on the car the gentleman found salvation. Said he, "I can see now why the horse stopped; it was that I might get into the light." In closing his very interesting little story, Mr. Guard expressed the conviction that the mission now going was a glorious one, such as Belfast had never witnessed, even in 1859.

The afternoon and evening meetings throughout the week in the Great Hall on the Plains were truly wonderful seasons of the right-hand power of the Most High. Your space will not allow of detailed notice; but some mention of on Friday evening must be made. The hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, and thousands were turned away from the doors. So great was the desire to hear Mr. Moody's concluding address that a considerable number of persons who had been present at the afternoon meeting did not leave the building, but remained until the final hymn had been sung and the benediction pronounced on the whole fortnight's work. At seven o'clock every seat was occupied, and arrangements were made for closing the doors and for the holding of an overflow meeting in the Fitzroy Avenue Presbyterian Church.

Rev. John McNeill, who had arrived from Scotland in the afternoon and was present at the afternoon meeting, was asked to say a word or two before going off to speak at the overflow. He responded in his own blunt and characteristic way; at once putting himself en rapport with the Irish friends on the score of his father being an Antrim man. Mr. Moody having thanked everybody, as is his wont at the close of a lengthened mission, gave his address, putting the way of salvation before his vast audience as simply and earnestly as if it had been his only opportunity. He offered prayer at the close and the first part of the meeting ended. The reporters thought the proceedings had concluded and left, but it was still early. During the singing of a hymn part of the audience left, but it caused some surprise to find hundreds of others surging in and eagerly filling their places. In a few minutes the meeting assumed very much of its usual appearance.

Mr. Moody quickly grasped the situation, kept the choir singing, had a few male voices to the front to render some Gospel songs, and started off again full swing into a second meeting. By this time Mr. McNeill had returned from the overflow, and was induced by Mr. Moody to relate the story of his conversion.

It so happened that in the adjoining Botanical Gardens it had been arranged to have a great firework display on the evening. The authorities had good-naturedly postponed operations till 9 o'clock. It was ten minutes past the hour as the first sounds of it were heard. Everyone wondered what could be done, and waited as the rockets flew whizzing through the air and exploded over the glass roof of the building. Mr. Moody said that probably everyone knew the cause of the noise outside, and he felt deeply grateful to the directors of the gardens for having postponed the firework display till ten minutes after the time agreed upon. There was sympathy silently manifested by the audience which probably he felt as he went on—"Now any of you who want to see the fireworks may feel quite free to go." But not a soul moved, though there were thousands of young people present and not a few youths.

Mr. McNeill then rose, and the way in which he took hold of the audience was wonderful. It was, of course impossible for the speaker to ignore the deafening sound of exploding rockets and shells, but with admirable tact he succeeded in holding the attention of the audience. After quoting, in stentorian tones, Acts xvi. 31, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved," he exclaimed: "Does not such a proclamation as that deserve a vote?" The rockets burst in the sky over our heads. The graphic account of his conversion was listened to with deep interest. Whilst he was speaking the interruptions grew less and less, and finally subsided altogether. Such was the interest manifested by the vast audience that the meeting not only survived what would in most cases have effectually broken up any gathering, but grew in intensity as it proceeded.

Drawing his address to a close, Mr. McNeill pressed for immediate decision. Before leaving the platform, Mr. Moody asked, "What verse would you give them?" Mr. McNeill chose Isai. xii. 2. "Behold God is my salvation"—not even my faith, but God—"I will trust, and be not afraid." This brought Mr. Moody to the front again, remarking that that was the verse he had intended to give them. There had already been one call earlier in the evening for manifestation of anxiety and soul-concern. Mr. Moody again asked who would say, "Behold God is my salvation, I will trust and not be afraid"? A great hush seemed to fall upon the vast audience, and then, from all parts of the building, the "I wills" were heard.

All reserve was broken down, and speaker and audience were on such terms that it was not difficult to turn the meeting again into another channel. Asking all to be seated everywhere in the building, Mr. Moody said this was his third visit to the city of Belfast. Mr. Sankey and he were there in 1874 and again in 1882, and he asked all those who had been blessed in the meetings, whether eighteen years ago or ten years ago or during the present mission, to rise and stand in their places. The sight was one never to be forgotten! Crowds rose in the body of the hall and all parts of the galleries, old men, some soldiers, and not a few police; then on the platform the members of the choir and Christian workers, the fruits of the two previous missions. Perhaps it was more touching still to see well-known ministers rising one after another on the front row of the platform to confess that they had been led to Jesus by this man of God. One minister who evidently felt he ought not to get out of the confession by change of locality rose and joined his brethren in the ministry, muttering the two significant words, "Dublin, '74."

Whilst this company were standing in their places, the rest seated, Mr. Moody called upon all those who to-night for the first time would take Christ as their Saviour to rise and join them. During the five or six minutes which followed it seemed as though many hundreds must have risen in their places. As they stood and remained standing whilst Mr. Moody commended them in prayer, one could not but praise the God of all grace for this army of sons and daughters redeemed and made whole by the precious blood.

MR. McNEILL IN BELFAST.

This stalwart evangelist had a busy day in Belfast on Sabbath; he preached three times to great audiences. Two of the discourses, morning and evening, were delivered on behalf of the local Y.M.C.A. Dr. Talmage had arranged to visit Belfast in the interests of the Association, but his health having broken down, through stress of work, Mr. McNeill kindly agreed to stand in the breach. His morning sermon in St. Enoch's Church and the evening sermon in the Great Convention Hall were full of evangelistic fire, and specially suited to young men. A considerable sum was collected for the funds of the Y.M.C.A., which is doing an excellent work in the city. Mr. D. A. Black, the secretary, and many of the members have been most active and devoted in their help during Mr. Moody's mission.

On Sunday afternoon, Mr. McNeill addressed a crowded assemblage in the Convention Hall, and the day's services altogether made a deep impression. The evangelist speaks at the hall every evening this week, and addresses business men in St. George's Hall early in the afternoons. Mr. Burke is assisting Mr. McNeill, and Mr. Vance accompanied Mr. Moody to Dundalk, where the latter held meetings on Sunday and Monday.

A Deed of Daring.

NOTES OF AN ADDRESS
BY REV. JOHN McNEILL
AT THE CONVENTION HALL, BELFAST, ON MONDAY.

Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada, the son of a valiant man, of Kabzeel, who had done many acts . . . . : he went down also and slew a lion in the midst of a pit in time of snow.—2 Sam. xxiii. 20.

HERE is a man worth looking at! He was in a sense unlike Shammah, of whom we read in the same chapter. To Shammah the Philistines suddenly came; they swept down on him; he stood firm—and it was death or victory. He had to slash and cut and hew in the best way he could. But this is a different kind of thing. It is a snowy day; think of it. It is not like a day in spring; not like your spring morning that makes you heroic, when the sky is bright, and the birds are whistling, and your own blood is tingling in your veins. It was not that kind of morning, but a wet-blanket kind of morning, with nothing to stir the blood, nothing to cheer the poor fellow.

On a snowy day, when all others were in, sitting over the fire burning their knees, he arose, went to the door, and listened. While other men's faces grew long with fear, his brightens. "I have been wanting to kill that lion for the last six months, and never could get the chance. Thank God, this day has come, and that we know where he is." Look at him trudging through the snow! There was nothing to help him, nobody to cheer or encourage him; and as he goes through the air thick and hurtling with the flakes of snow, you feel here is courage not less than that of Shammah. And he went on and on, and on, and nearer and nearer came to the pit with the lion in it. He comes to the edge of it and looks down, and sees the ravager and destroyer, the terror of the countryside for many a day; and with a prayer to the God of Israel, he leaps down beside the lion, knowing that out of that pit only one will come up alive. It was a big deed by a big man. This man was worthy of his name—a mighty man.

Did it ever occur to you that that man was wonderfully like another Benaiah? Did you ever think he was wonderfully like the Lord Jesus Christ, who, on one of the dullest and darkest days that ever the world saw, went down into the pit and encountered, face to face, the devourer and the destroyer of men. And He had nobody to encourage and nobody to cheer. All his disciples forsook Him and fled; and single, unaided, and alone, He went down into the pit and slew the lion, the dragon, the devourer. He fought and He won.

> Up from the pit He arose
> With a mighty triumph o'er his foes,
> He arose a victor from the dark domain,
> And He lives for ever with his saints to reign.
> Hallelujah, Christ arose!

Did it ever occur to you that that man down there in the pit, in that deadly conflict, is a type and figure, in his action, of what every believing soul has to go through? There is a lion-like strength of evil in everyone of us, and we are not saved till our foot is upon its neck, and its power is broken. With some, the lion is out, ranging and roaring, as that lion might be supposed to have been before this snowy day when he fell into the pit. That is to say, the power of sin is apparent; they are notorious drunkards, they are notorious sinners in some form or another. But with others, the lion is in a pit, and—God help such foolish people!—they think they are all right when they have driven sin in out of sight. If only they can keep sin from breaking out openly in their faces, in their speech, in their conduct, the poor dupes think that all is well.

No, my brother, the big work is to be done yet. Go down into the pit, go down into the deeps of your own fallen nature, the depths of Satan in you, go down there quick, in the strength of Benaiah, and win that fight, or you are not saved yet. None of us, old or young, ignorant or learned, has a right to feel safe until he has done Benaiah's deed, and gone down into the depths of sin that are in himself with the lamp of God and the sword of God, and stabbed to the heart the life of sin that is in the very deep places of his soul.

That is to be done; and that is why some of us are so far back, because it is not done yet. That lion is not slain; that battle is not fought between me and my own sin down in the pit. Go down to him to-day. Where you sit, go down; listen to the growlings of the brute in you. Listen! Feel, almost, the lashing of his tail. Go down and fight, and in God's name win down there. "He slew the lion in the pit on a snowy day."

The last thing I want you to notice is the little point of extra light that comes from the name. What does Benaiah mean? Benaiah means, literally, the man whom Jehovah built. There is some thing in a name, after all! The man whom God built from the protoplasm upward and onward, the God-built, God-strengthened, God-nerved, God-sustained man. May God grant that all of us shall have that pedigree! May God grant that out from this hall to-night a multitude may go of whom this is the generation: "Born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of man, but born of God." Born again! Spiritual men, whose foundations God hath laid in Jesus Christ; and out of whom God is making strong, stalwart, heroic, spiritual men, because He has built them and founded them on the Eternal Rock of his own dear Son.

May the Lord Himself appear to us in all his saving strength, and turn, for all of us, defeat into victory and the shadow of death into the morning! All appearances to the contrary notwithstanding, the Lord is with us. There is no cause for fleeing, and the very dark conditions of things will only give us opportunity to glorify God, and to do something—to do something that shall find for us an honourable mention in the great day. Cease to be dispirited; cease to talk despondently; let us lift our hearts into the light of the face of our great Captain and King. "Cry out and shout, thou inhabitant of Zion, for great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee." It is a day of splendid opportunity for the individual. The battle is the common soldier's battle, and the Great Captain's eye is searching the field that He may show Himself strong in the behalf of everyone who is making a stand against sin.

THE PRINCE OF PREACHERS.*

In considering, however, this man in Christ it is needful also to take into account his rich endowment in respect of the gift of faith. He was a strong believer in the true doctrine of the Real Presence. He could lean on the unseen arm and providential care of the great I AM. Through faith he did exploits. One thing especially shone forth in him, and seemed never to be clouded over—namely, the conviction that his testimony would be accompanied by signs following. He was borne up in his ministry by the spirit of continuous expectation. He preached as if the results were sure; and the returns came with corresponding regularity. His faith was such that he seemed ever to hear the sound of abundance of rain. It is remarkable that though for years he did not attend the business or church meetings, but devolved the occupation on well-qualified helpers, he laid his account with providing them, month by month, with a considerable list of fresh candidates for membership; and nothing used to put him in better spirits than to find that he had so multiplied the cases for examination that the elders and visitors knew not how to get through the work in the time.

As may be supposed, the faith that animated this ministry was related to the head-spring of prayer. Not that Mr. Spurgeon was accustomed, save in times of crisis, to spend long hours in prayer. He did not understand the need for this. Commenting on John Welch's custom of devoting a third part of every day to prayer alone, he said: "I do not feel the call or necessity for such an arrangement. I generally spend but a few minutes, sometimes only moments, in prayer at a time. I take a promise, and plead it; or I lay my case before God, and leave it. I do not see that more is required. It is not the much speaking that makes for aught; but the faith that just takes God at his word, or lays hold of his arm." It was a characteristic note of the faith of this man in Christ that he found it easy to believe God. His prayers could be short, for his faith was strong.

Still, like Jacob, he knew times of agonising. On one occasion, of which he has spoken to us—when the cross was insupportable, and he knew not how to bear the wrench of parting with his son Tom, called to service at the Antipodes—he spent the whole night with God in prayer; and with the morning light the burden was gone, the strength had come in the power of which he could give up his son.

Occasionally, too, exercises of soul led him to pray as if in agony. In private, on one occasion, he detailed to us a scene of this kind; but we do not feel justified in breaking the seal. Suffice it to say, that it was one of the many forms of Satanic assault to which those are exposed who render themselves obnoxious to the kingdom of darkness. He met the attack, as he told us, by earnest prayer; and in a short time the power of Satan was broken.

Another feature of this man in Christ, partly natural and partly spiritual, was susceptibility. He could rise in rapture, and he could sink low in depression. Mostly his work was liberty; but there were times when he could have envied the poorest labourer his toilsome lot, and when servitude itself was bright in comparison. Some may think that this trait is a foil to excellence rather than an addition to its sum; a flaw in the jewel rather than a merit. In that they are mistaken. A preacher needs sometimes to be bound in spirit; and unless he is, he cannot supply the key of promise to others. There are times when he must be bruised; for his power to heal is dependent on the virtue that then flows out of him.

Some preachers almost suggest the inquiry we once heard raised: "I wonder, were they cut, whether they would bleed?" so cold and fish-like their whole tone and spirit! C. H. Spurgeon was not one of this class. He felt the stroke; he quivered under it; he had his seasons of recoil. He knew what it was to stagger and faint under depression's heavy load. But the experience did not make him less efficient. There are many things appointed to the man after God's own heart to undergo; and that not for himself alone, but also for the sake of others. He has, if an undershepherd, "to make up what is behind of the sufferings of Christ for his body's sake," and to this end he must be bruised; he must pass under a dark rod sometimes, and be made to feel as if the ground were taken from under his feet. He must sometimes preach, like Paul before Festus, in chains; ay, chains that grip more tightly the soul within than the convict's manacles the wrists or his fetters the feet. But what are we to say of such preaching? That it is weak, or shallow, or impotent? That it has no balsam for the wounded; no word for him that is weary? Nay! It is "out of the depths" that the best preaching, as well as the best prayer, comes. As Archibald G. Brown has said: "Our Elijah had his juniper tree. He never could have preached some of the sermons that he did, if he had not done business on the great waters of soul-sorrow. Those who think of him simply as a man of jocularity and lightness do not know him. His griefs were as deep as his joys were high. His capacity for suffering was on a par with his capacity for enjoyment."

EVANGELISTS IN GLASGOW.

A very wide and varied field of operations is covered by the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association, the origin of which is so closely connected with Mr. Moody's labours in that city; and the records of what has been done for God, during 1891, amongst the young and old of its teeming population are most interesting, and distinctly encouraging. The three centres of direct evangelisation, the Tent, Bethany and Mizpah Halls, have been kept up throughout the year, summer and winter, with unabated vigour and abiding spiritual results. The free breakfast and the children's dinner, given every Sabbath at Tent Hall, Saltmarket, meet a sad feature of modern life, namely, the increasing number of men and women, many of them vagrants, who live in lodging-houses. In June, 1891, friends at Mizpah Hall broke new ground in the Anderston district, in special effort to get at non-churchgoers. A tent was obtained from the London Evangelisation Society for the old show-ground, Main-street, and after a time it gave place to a larger one seating about 700, which on many occasions has overflowed, and from it salvation has found its way into many a home. Much has been done for the children, by means of rescue homes for girls, day refuges for the destitute and neglected, and the "Fresh Air Fortnight" scheme, two homes having been given to the association for the latter work. These are but a few points in the multifarious work of the association, but Mr. J. R. Miller, the secretary, is always willing to give fullest information about the good work, and he may be addressed at the Christian Institute, 70, Bothwell-street.

"GO FORWARD."

The clouds are dark around us:
Upon the field to-day
Ten thousand foes surround us,
All ready for the fray;
The work grows harder, stranger;
Opposed, misunderstood,
We sow, while tares endanger
Our little seeds of good.
But shall we shun the battle
And let the wrong increase?
Let earth's unseemly rattle
Drown God's sweet words of peace?
No! Comrades, never—NEVER!
Our motto's "Forward go";
"Forward!" till Christ for ever
Rules o'er a vanquished foe.
While cruel hands are binding
The weeping, homeless slave;
While Afric's sons are finding
A dark and Christless grave:
'Tis not the time for halting,
For fear, nor compromise;
While new foes are assaulting,
We must for God arise.
To-day God speaks from Heaven,
With words of "Love Divine,"
Oh! let the message given
Be passed along the line—
"My children, richly favoured
With light and love unpriced,
Be brave, be strong, go forward!
Win Africa for Christ."

ST. MARYCHURCH AND BABBICOMBE.—The Y.M.C.A., 10, Fore-street, is now in its second year. Mr. J. L. Allday, hon. sec., will welcome the co-operation of all who desire to strengthen the hands of the little band of workers together for the spiritual and temporal interests of young men resident in or visiting this attractive neighbourhood.

THE LONDON CITY MISSION.

The London City Mission report deals with the labours in all parts of the metropolis and amongst all classes of 500 missionaries employed by the committee. The backbone or basis of the whole work is now, as ever, house-to-house visitation—the man with the Book going from door to door.

Dealing with the condition of the masses, the chief obstacles are shown to be irreligion, poverty, overcrowding, intemperance, gambling, socialism, and infidelity; and on each of these points much light is thrown by the facts cited in the L.C.M. report. The preaching of the Gospel in the Mission halls and in the open air appears to have been blessed in many instances.

One remarkably interesting feature of the report are the details given of the special missionaries who seek special classes. There are now 118 of such missionaries, and the classes reached by them are well worth enumerating:—Bakers, day and night cabmen, canal boatmen, Chelsea pensioners, coachmen and grooms, dockmen, drovers in Islington, employés in factories, fire-brigademen, Welsh in London, French, Germans, Italians, Spaniards, Asiatics, Africans, Jews, foreign sailors in the docks, builders on public works, navvies, omnibus and tram-car men, railway men, Post Office employés, policemen, landlords and customers in public-houses, servants in hotels and clubs, soldiers in London and Woolwich, theatre employés, scavengers in North London, gipsies, and the inmates of hospitals, workhouses, infirmaries, and common lodging-houses.

Many incidents are given, and the committee conclude by expressing the hope that their supporters will take steps to bring the work of the Mission to the notice of friends, and thus assist in gaining new contributors to its funds. If London is to be preserved from moral corruption and from the diabolical designs of Anarchists, so daringly displayed of late in many Continental cities, it will be not merely by the strong arm of the law, but also, and chiefly, by those moral restraints which religion imposes. In the fact that the English poor are, in so many instances, ready to listen to the Gospel of Christ, and through its influences to the claims of God, lies the hope of England's future. It is for the Church of Christ, realising this solemn fact, to rise to the emergency, and to do its utmost to make England a Christian nation in reality and not merely in name.

This, the committee would most strongly urge, can only be effectually accomplished by the ordinary church systems being supplemented by agencies such as that supplied by the society—viz., by earnest bands of godly men mingling daily with the respectable artisans and the poorer classes, and seeking by Divine grace to permeate their minds with Christian principles. It is for such work and workers that the committee earnestly solicit the support of all true patriots, that London may shine out brightly before the nations as a Christian capital, and that the heathen who visit England from distant parts may no longer be able to cast in the teeth of her sons the bitter reproach, "Where is now their God?"

Hampton Female Orphan Home.

The good work which is being accomplished in this institution at Tangley Park, Hampton, Middlesex, is very evident from the report of an examination which the inmates passed through a few months ago. The examiner expresses his conviction that the aim of the society, viz., to prepare the children for domestic or other service, with credit to themselves and satisfaction to their employers, has been steadily adhered to, their training being thorough and masterly. He was struck by the clear views of the children concerning their relation to God and the necessity of redemption, testifying, as it does, to the loving care which has been extended to them individually. There is room in the home for many more children, and during the past year thirteen were admitted, but some had to be refused admission for want of funds to maintain them. Mr. J. D. Cooper, 79, Finsbury-pavement, E.C., is secretary.

THE MYSORE WESLEYAN MISSION has an encouraging outlook as regards opportunity for Christian effort among Europeans, natives, women and children; and the workers are courageously standing to their posts under the disadvantage of paucity in their numbers. The influence of a single European missionary has to be diffused over an area of thousands of square miles; while the courage and devotion of native evangelists are severely tested by isolated village life among the heathen. The native Church has not only accessions from outside, but grows from within.

For the Young.

HOW CAN I BE SAVED?

At Gorleston, near Yarmouth, one Sunday afternoon in August, a prize was offered to the little girl, amongst a party of children, who should write the best answer to the question which heads this article.

These young lassies—whose evenings are usually spent on the stage, singing and dancing, for the amusement of people who go to the theatre—are just now enjoying a delightful seaside holiday, their friends, Mr. and Mrs. Courthope Todd, having taken a house for their reception.

Of course the orphans from Macready House, Covent Garden, are amongst these juveniles, even baby Claude delighting in dipping and paddling, and ready with "sand puddens" for everybody.

Very joyous have been the games on the beach, while gathering flowers and grasses in the fields and on the cliffs has afforded constant recreation. Then around the special tent, belonging to the Theatrical Mission, the children have gathered from day to day for short and simple services, while "Family Prayer" night and morning has been quite a new feature in their life.

Sunday has come round, and after dinner the little actresses are quite prepared for their essay. Bibles are allowed them, but they are to answer the question in their own words.

So they gather in the dining-room, and vie with one another for the promised prize. Some have strange notions, and write: "By going to church and taking the Holy Communion," while a little girl whose face beams with good nature, suggestively says: "By being kind to dumb creatures." Both were, of course, quite wrong.

The prize-winner is one of the orphans from the institute, a little girl of ten, whose father is dead, and whose mother is in an asylum, or as she calls it "a hospital." She is a bright little creature, with dark hair and eyes—almost always a merry twinkle in them, and her lips seldom pout as they used to do when Bertha came into "Macready House" as the first orphan. In those days the old heart was unchanged, but the gentle influence of God's Spirit has softened and renewed the child, and "a new face" as well as "a new heart" is this little girl's possession.

She loves the Saviour who has helped her to be "the best girl in the home," and so, after much thought, "Bert" writes: "By believing in the Lord Jesus Christ and by trying to do everything to please Him. He came into this world to die and suffer upon the tree for us all, and we must come to Him. We must ask God to forgive us our sins and wash our hearts in His most precious blood, and make us fit to live with Him in heaven for ever."

Bertha is always fond of writing, and one day we find her with pen in hand, thanking a little girl of five who is knitting for her a pair of "mittens."

The papers are given in to Mrs. Courthope Todd, and next day the prize is adjudged and awarded.

The children are shown from simple illustrations what salvation means, and they see how foolish it would be to tell people to do anything themselves, when sin has made us all quite helpless, and good for nothing.

Many of the little theatrical children are Christians, though they are apprenticed to the life of the theatre, and must for some years be drilled and taught dancing and other exercises in schools for the stage, called "Dramatic Academies."

But Jesus knows their difficulties and helps them to withstand their temptations, and not a few are brave little disciples of Christ, though they get laughed at by thoughtless people in the profession older than themselves.

Will not our young readers pray for the young "players," and send to Macready House books, toys, clothing, and money, so that hundreds more in our own land may learn "how to be saved"; while, across the sea, the little Roman Catholic actors and actresses may also be taught to read and love the Bible, and the Saviour of whom it speaks, and whose pity must be great for these lads and lassies in all lands who toil hard to amuse the people by their song, and the graceful attitudes they assume "behind the footlights"? Let us close with the words of another competitor: "A child may get to Heaven without a penny in her pocket, but not without love to Jesus in her heart."

SHOPGIRLS IN PARIS.—The claims of humanity are the more likely to be acknowledged when the sufferers league themselves to have their wrongs redressed. The meeting of 3,000 shop girls in Paris to protest against the unwholesome and unhealthy conditions under which they work is a hopeful sign. Little can be done for any class in moral and spiritual training, so long as a physical grievance lies heavy on their shoulders.

ON THE SANDS.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Seaside Reports from Workers.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.

The children's services this year have been carried on for the last eight weeks by the Rev. Walter Bradbury, assisted by Miss Appleton and others. Much blessing has been the result; over fifty children have handed in their names as having given their young hearts to the Saviour.

BRIGHTON.

Two series of services have been held on the Brighton beach, one towards Kemp Town, conducted by the Rev. Mr. Woods, who was taking temporary duty at St. George's; the other in West Brighton, with afternoon and evening services, in the rooms connected with St. Margaret's, Emmanuel, and the Countess of Huntingdon's Churches. Mr. Edgar Cornaby, B.A., who conducted the latter services, has received letters from co-workers testifying to definite blessings received by many.

LITTLEHAMPTON.

The closing Sunday afternoon service here was held on 28th ult., when a bright and attentive congregation of children filled St. John's Church. Mr. Jas. S. Tyler came over from Worthing on Wednesday, and conducted the farewell service on the sands. The children had been very busy for nearly two hours before the service, building up a splendid sand cathedral of three circles, with a prettily decorated pulpit, and a bucket in the front for subscriptions towards the mission, into which many loving thank-offerings were placed, besides some other donations collected at a lantern meeting held on a previous evening. A number of "good-bye" texts were also brought in by the children, and the many loving expressions of thankfulness for the services, and for blessing received, filled our hearts with joy and gratitude.

EASTBOURNE.

Owing to a variety of causes the beach services have not been quite so largely attended as last year, but the all important work amongst the boys has been even better than in 1891. My helpers are so good in getting hold of boys individually, and then interesting them in the services, and in a place like Eastbourne, with such numerous attractions, this is almost the only plan of reaching the bigger lads. We have not had a meeting without quite a number professing to decide for Christ. Mr. Eliot Walton has been greatly used amongst them, and has conducted a weekly prayer meeting for the Christian boys. The parent's meetings also have been most encouraging and well attended. Dr. Barnardo gave a most powerful and impressive address to a large number on Sunday night; I only wish a verbatim report had been taken. He returned to London early on Monday morning, and, in a letter just received, says how much he enjoyed his visit, and especially the boys' meeting on Sunday evening.

BOURNEMOUTH.

The usual morning services are held on the sands, but this year the evening meetings are held in the "Pine Cathedral," on the West Cliff, where there are no counter attractions, and many children and adults come, who would not go on to the sands. The children's services close about 7.30, and then the "Nicodemus" meeting follows, when numbers of adults gather round, and many have testified to the blessing they have received from there.

There is much to praise God for in the manifest blessing He has given at the special meetings for young men and boys held twice a week at the missioner's rooms; also for the young ladies' meetings every Tuesday and Friday. On our missionary day, Rev. J. S. Hill, Bishop-designate of the Niger, spoke at the morning prayer meeting, while Mr. Hall spoke, as usual, to the children at the morning meeting; and Mrs. Greaves, from India, and Mrs. Thwaites spoke at the ladies' meeting in the afternoon. The evening meeting was held in the Shaftesbury Hall, which was well filled. Rev. S. A. Selwyn was in the chair, and Mrs. Greaves and Mr. Dudley Kidd spoke.

Mr. George Goodman, St. Peter's Schools, Islington, September 18 to 24; annual meetings for seaside reports, Mildmay Conference Hall, October 6, at 3 and 6.30 p.m.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Sun., Sept. 18, 1 Sam. x. 1-13; Mon., Sept. 19, x. 14-27; Tues., Sept. 20, xii. 1-13; Wed., Sept. 21, xii. 14-25; Thurs., Sept. 22, xiii. 1-14; Fri., Sept. 23; xiv. 1-17; Sat., Sept. 24, xiv. 18-35.

LAHORE GIRLS' SCHOOL.—We have from the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission an urgent plea on behalf of this flourishing school. Additional buildings are required, the cost of which is estimated at £800, one-half of which can be obtained in India. A third lady teacher is about to be sent out by the mission. The hon. sec., Mr. W. T. Paton, 2, Adelphi-terrace, W.C., will supply any information required.

A PROTEST FROM THE CHILDREN.

I greatly desire to interest your young readers in an undertaking significant of much promise for the future welfare and good of all nations, which the women of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union desire to successfully carry through at Chicago next year.

It is proposed to gather together the signatures of abstaining children, of sixteen years and under, of every nationality. Small cards are provided for the purpose, and these will be festooned around the Temperance Women's section of the World's Fair.

Such a silent but eloquent protest from children all over the world will speak to the hearts of many, and will aid us in our work of uprooting that evil which blights the innocence and happiness of children in every land.

Will not your readers help us in obtaining signatures? We want this work talked about in the family and the school. We ask Sunday-school teachers to get their scholars to sign; and if everyone will forward the scheme, England's children will be well represented in this great World's Fair. All who are interested should write for cards. They can be obtained at the British head-quarters of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, 47, Victoria-street, Westminster, London, S.W., for sixpence a hundred. These attractive little cards, stamped with the Union Jack, are already in circulation, and must be returned to the Secretary at the above address not later than March 1st, 1893.

Believing that many may be aroused to help us in our desire to interest children in our Temperance work,

Yours, for God and home and every land,

ISABEL SOMERSET.

GLEANINGS.

There is no law which compels a poor boy to grow into a poor man.

Every lad must quarry out of his surroundings in life the stones which build up character.

A child's prayer.—"Save me, good Lord. Thine ocean is so large and my boat so small."

There are a thousand blossoms to every bushel of apples. Boys have a thousand desires to a bushel of choices.

Remember this, my lad, what you earn during your work goes into your pocket; but what you do during your leisure time goes into your character.

A little girl who claimed to be converted was asked to explain it. "Well," said she, "once I ran after sin, now I run from it."

Bestow thy youth, so that thou mayest have comfort to remember it when it hath forsaken thee, and not sigh and grieve at the account thereof.

The saddest hour in the life of a youth is when he thinks he can get a dollar in some other way than by squarely earning it.

As well might a boy walk in the sunshine and expect to cast no shadow, as to think he can live in the world and exert no influence.

A class of Hottentot children was asked, Do we possess anything that we have not received from God? A little girl of five summers immediately answered, "Yes sir, sin."

Not one of the 8,000 children living in the lowest parts of San Francisco, and who attend the free Kindergartens, has ever appeared in a police-court for misconduct.

A poor little paralysed girl, placing in the nurse's hands a doll she had dressed herself, said, "Please, Nurse, give this to the little girl who is worse than I am."

Mr. L. K. Shaw, of the Boys Refuge, Strangeways, Manchester, has a large and growing family—514 orphans, cripples, and working lads. One of his boys whom he sent abroad writes that he has entered Princeton University.

The Loving Service Band has been formed in England to link together English and Indian children. The English members engage to make something for the little Indian children who are visited by the Ladies of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.

My boy, the day is well nigh over, I hope, when it was the custom to make fun at the expense of one's neighbour. I would ask you not to continue it. Laugh by all means, but not when others are crying.

I once asked a deaf and dumb boy, "What is truth?" He replied by thrusting his finger forward in a straight line. I then asked him, "What is falsehood?" when he made a zigzag line with his finger. How exactly he had caught the two ideas.

When Carlyle asked, "What great or noble thing has America ever done?" this reply was given. "She has produced a girl, deaf, dumb, and blind from infancy, who, from her own earnings, sent a barrel of flour to the starving subjects of Great Britain in Ireland."

Among the Mountains.

BY LADY HOPE.

BENEATH the shadow of great mountains we are resting—resting in soul-delight—resting on renewed promises—or, as Mr. Haslam (who is one of our teachers here) would say, resting in the Giver of the promises. Do we not too often think of the "blessing," or ask for the "blessing" we desire, without seeing that it is the "Blessed" Himself that we need? Blessing in and from Himself, with Himself. For He is the centre and source of all the gifts; and without Him we have nothing.

Interlaken has always seemed, in our former visits to this hotel, an earthly Paradise. The wooded hills, and above them the great mountains crowned with eternal snow, their base softened by tender grey shadows and the freshest grass and foliage, with here and there huge rocks towering through the verdure, as though they would show their hidden strength—these features of the Bernese Alpine scenery seem to be focussed in the lovely valley of Interlaken.

But this year a fresher beauty gilds the scene, a new warmth pervades the gathering of visitors. A new song harmonized by many voices rings out amongst us. Only the language of Zion is heard. For many Christians have gathered here, drawn together by the strong attraction of that Name which "is as ointment poured forth"; and by the knowledge that many favourite speakers are going to speak of that precious name, and to draw out the fulness which his Word contains. The Revs. F. Paynter (president), Evan Hopkins, W. Haslam, W. Houghton, Darlow Sarjeant, and Pastor Theodore Monod, take part in our two daily meetings. An extemporised choir leads the singing, and we have much prayer. The numbers of those who have rallied round us for this Convention in response to a very brief invitation are far greater than we anticipated, and each day there is cause for thankfulness in the encouragement received by those who have not the privilege of attending our English Conventions.

"Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." There is much of this "hunger and thirst" which never comes to the surface, because the supply is not brought forward. Hundreds and thousands of English, French, and Germans, spend their summer in this beautiful Switzerland; and many are carrying heavy loads through all their pleasure-seeking, without knowing the tidings of rest; and there are those who have bitter sorrows without finding the "strong consolations" that might be theirs. Some long to know the Saviour, but to them, amidst all the sunshine that gilds this land externally, they have not yet known "how beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace, that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation."

Two very pleasant rooms have been provided for the meetings. In the morning, when all is quiet, we have a large room at the Kursaal; and in the evening the hall at the college, which stands in the meadows, near the hotels, is well attended. The Schweizerhof Hotel, where we are all staying, offers every comfort to visitors, and has the best view of the Jungfrau and the other mountains, with a very cheerful frontage, long verandahs, and balconies, where it is pleasant to sit and read, or meet our friends.

Mr. Paynter struck the keynote at the first meeting with the words, "Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you," showing our object in these gatherings. Our position being one of safety, our privilege is one of approach, "Nighness" to God our sacred delight, our duty, and responsibility. Mr. Evan Hopkins spoke of the "impossible walk and the impossible work" of Matt. xiv. 28, 29, and ver. 16, both made possible by the Saviour's word. "Come" brought Peter on his strange journey across the waters; "Give ye them to eat" proved the needed adjustment of circumstances with faith that brought the multitudes their food. Christ the centre, the humble believing ones circling round Him, their poverty turned into riches by the touch of his hand. On Saturday evening, Mr. Houghton went through the details of the message to the Laodicean Church, handling very gently the difficulties of his hearers, and drawing them into the very fulness of Christ Himself. Mr. Haslam's message was, as a foreigner afterwards expressed it, "One that will stay always in my mind; for he said so plainly, 'Cleave unto the Lord!'"

The days must pass away, but the truths that we are hearing, never! for they are firmer than the mountains that surround us on every side; and these "times of refreshing" are from HIS PRESENCE.

For Jehovah I am Waiting.

THE "GOOD TIME COMING."

Christ comes to make all things new. Creation has long suffered for man's sins, and the curse has made it groan. Its cries are going up into the ears of the Lord God of Hosts, and the day of its deliverance is coming (Rom. viii. 8, 19, 23). He will then make this earth of ours a Paradise—a holy, happy, fruitful, glorious world.—H. Bonar.

AFFLICTION.

There is a mystery of iniquity as well as a mystery of Godliness; oftentimes in affliction there is something discovered to us which, for all our search of ourselves, we could not have found out nor have believed to be in us. Like a pool troubled, so are our hearts in affliction; there comes up mud which we would not have thought to be there. —Alexander Wedderburn (1682).

PRAYER AND BLESSING.

When the sun rises there is light. Why, I do not know. There might have been light without the sun, and there might have been a sun that gave no light; but God has been pleased to put these two things together—sunrise and light. So, whenever there is prayer, there is blessing, I do not know why. There might have been prayer without a blessing, for there is in the word of wrath; and there might have been a blessing without prayer, for it often is sent to some who sought it not. But God has been pleased to make this a rule for the government of the moral and spiritual universe: that there shall be prayer first, and that then shall be the answer to prayer.
—Spurgeon.

If faith be once satisfied in the call and command of God, it will follow Him when it cannot see a step of its way—over hills and through dales, fearing nothing. He that hath God's call need not fear God's conduct (Ps. xxxvii. 5; Acts xvi. 9, 10).

God is rich in mercy, abundant in goodness and truth. Thy sins are like a spark of fire that falls into the ocean—it is quenched presently; so are all thy sins in the ocean of God's mercy. There is not more water in the sea than there is mercy in God.—Manton.

What is the atonement of Christ? It is Himself. It is the inherent and everlasting mercy of God made apparent to human eyes and ears. The everlasting love was disclosed by our Lord's life and death. It shows that God forgives because He loves to forgive. He rules, if possible, by smiles, and not by frowns. Pain is only a means of enforced love.
—Dr. Livingstone (Journal, August 5, 1873).

When the Spartans marched into battle, they advanced with cheerful songs, willing to fight; but when the Persians entered the conflict, you could hear, as the regiments came on, the crack of the whip, by which the officers drove the cowards to the fray. What wonder that the Spartans were like lions in the midst of sheep. Were we enthusiastic soldiers of the cross, through God's help nothing would be able to stand against us.—Spurgeon.

MR. JŪJI ISHII,

A JAPANESE CHRISTIAN AND PHILANTHROPIST.

THE stirring story of Christian faith and service in the past is being re-enacted in other lands, where men and women brought out of the darkness of heathendom are leading the way and setting noble examples in consecrated life and labour. Such is the subject of our present sketch—a Japanese Christian of fearless faith, tender sweetness, and practical godliness.

JŪJI ISHII, who is now about twenty-eight years of age, was born in the island of Kinsin, his father being an official in the local public works department. The boy, who was well educated, had his attention called to Christian duty at the age of eleven or twelve by a picture of the Crusaders in a book of history. His first ideas were of course extremely crude, but produced at least a longing for more knowledge, and a readiness for it when, in the goodness of God, it came. Married about the age of fifteen to one who has proved a great spiritual help, young ISHII became a policeman, and by and by, through the influence of Dr. Oquvara, a Christian native practitioner, he resolved to study medicine, and in this view went to Okayama. He had no Bible, but had learned from the physician that the three fundamentals of Christianity were Faith, Hope, and Love.

Longing to know more, he found his way to the Mission Church at Okayama, and began to make inquiries of the Bible-seller's wife, not, however, at first with much success. For a little while he was got hold of by the Roman Catholics, but their dislike of the Bible was the means of awakening his suspicion that all was not right. He secured a New Testament, read for himself, came to a definite decision, and in 1884 entered the Protestant communion.

Rev. James H. Pettee, the missionary in Japan who has supplied the material from which this sketch is penned, writes here:—

Mr. ISHII's history gives us not only an excellent illustration of this truth, but in doing so honours the faith and spiritual acquirements of a Japanese woman.

If one were asked to name the most devoted Christian woman in Okayama, the answer would be without hesitation, Koume Sumiya. This rare disciple of the Christ was known by name to Mr. ISHII, but he met her for the first time on the Sabbath he united with the Protestant church. They were kindred spirits in things of the soul. He named her the mother of his faith, and aimed from that time at a spirit and consecration like hers. To this day he goes to her for counsel and sympathy in every experience.

On one occasion when, sick, discouraged, and nearly crazed with pain, he decided to leave Okayama and go to Osaka for further study, Sumiya San pleaded with him in vain, but he could not forget her tears at parting, and a month later he returned to Okayama, penitent and submissive. That she, in no way related to him, should be so solicitous of his spiritual welfare, convinced him anew of the verities of the Christian faith.

In July, 1884, occurred an event which not only helped him forward in the Divine life, but gave him his first impulse towards activity.

At his home in Takanabe, he read of the gifts to Joseph Neesima by an old man and an old woman in America of two dollars each for the establishment of a Christian college in Japan. That these poor old people should give money for use in a distant land was a new Gospel to him. From that time he sought to devote his life to the welfare of others. He opened at once, in an old Shintoo shrine on the edge of the town, a night school for poor children.

For four years this enterprise was kept up, Mr. ISHII furnishing the funds. He testifies that as often as he forgot to pray in Okayama, for the Takanabe school, a letter was sure to come from his assistant, saying, "The school is running down." Then more earnest prayer in Bizen followed by a letter from Hiuga, "All goes well again." This not once but many times.

In March, 1885, he visited his native province, in company with Mr. Cary. This was the beginning of consecutive Protestant work in that region.

The plucky student secured plenty of work, earning from ten to twenty cents a night; and lost no opportunity to preach his new faith. Several of his patrons were led to embrace Christianity, but he injured his health by this overwork, and laid the foundation of his later illness. Dr. Suga, now at the head of the Okayama Hospital, learning of the doings of this promising student, wrote him a most sympathetic letter, extending a cordial invitation to come and live in his house, promising to pay all necessary bills if he would drop his night work. Young Ishii's independent spirit was strongly inclined to decline the invitation, but on the advice of his two wise counsellors, Pastor Kanamori and Mrs. Sumiya, he yielded, and for three months was an inmate of the doctor's family. Both the doctor and his wife have been most loyal friends of his ever since.

In December, 1886, Mr. George Müller visited Japan. The following February, while boarding in the house of a Christian (Nozu), he heard a letter read from the son, then a theological student at the Doshisha, describing Mr. Müller and his visit to Kyoto, and dwelling on the "life and faith" of that wonderful man.

Again deep thoughts were stirred in ISHII's mind. Then first he understood something of what is meant by those words in common use, "living Heavenly Father, and his love." Then first he committed his life and all to God and his service. Heretofore his purpose had been to serve God in some way after graduation. Now he decided to begin at once, and for children, and selected work among children as an especial sphere of labour.

Though suffering from brain trouble, he continued to study, but not improving, went in April to Kamiachimura, in Okugori, some twelve miles east of Okayama, and began practising medicine to support himself. He here definitely put into practice for the first time a principle of action so common with him since, of having no reserves in money or resources, but doing to-day for others the utmost that he can and trusting God for the future. His fellow student Watanabe, then at he Doshisha, was greatly troubled for money. After earnest prayer and careful thought, especially over a definition of love given him by Mr. Kanamori, "Forget self and do for others," and George Müller's "Trust is following God's word," he decided to send all he money he had and could earn to Wata-abe, should it be needed. Joy and peace ook possession of his soul, and, one might dd, have never left it since.

The house adjoining the one where he oomed was a miserable hovel, frequented by he very poor. One day in June a beggar oman with two children stopped there and emained over night. Noticing that the amily was very needy, Mr. Ishii stepped in, nd gave a bowl of his own rice to the eight-ear-old boy. The lad immediately passed it ver to his younger sister, who was a cripple. The mother was out begging for a breakfast. Returned later she called on Mr. Ishii and hanked him heartily for his kind act. A ttle sympathy and persuasion unloosed the oman's tongue, and she told a pitiful story. Her husband had died; she was now begging er way back to Bingo, her old province, oping against hope to secure work there. he said more than once, "I could support yself, and the crippled girl, but I can't earn nough in addition for the boy." Mr. Ishii, rompt to act upon his newly-formed rule of fe, at once offered to adopt the boy. The nother love was strong and the woman hesi-ated. Mr. Ishii begged her to give him up or all their sakes. At last the woman con-ented, on condition that the boy might be eturned to her every night. This arrange-ent was followed for a week, Mr. Ishii caring or the boy through the day and giving him ack to the mother for the night. After a eek's trial, the mother was convinced of Mr. shii's sincerity of purpose, and committed he boy to his charge. This was the first hild in Mr. Ishii's adopted family.

With such pains was the work begun which peedily grew into an organised asylum for eedy children. In July, 1887, Mr. Ishii eard of a poor fisherman and his wife, who hough but slightly removed from starvation hemselves, adopted a little girl of three and boy of five, left by parents and two elder rothers, all dead from cholera. The heart-ss neighbours were about to bury the ounger child in the coffin with its mother, being nearly dead from starvation and no ne to care for it. Two thoughts came home o the young physician with great force, (a) he pitiable condition of orphans; (b) if those ho know nothing of the great love of Christ an show such kindness as these poor fishers, hat ought not we Christians to do? Dare e do less than they?

He returned to Okayama, conferred with is trusty advisers, and in September, 1887, ented a part of a large temple of the Zen ect (Buddhist), moved in with his family, and uietly opened his asylum for needy children.

He began with the boy whose story is told bove, and two other lads whom he had picked p. He had no resources but his faith in God nd devoted spirit. A medical student him-lf in the last year of his course, with every eason for encouragement if he devoted him-lf to his profession, he was so impressed ith the Divine call to work for children that e following winter, when within four months graduation, he withdrew from the school nd refused to apply for a diploma.

There are few clearer cases in modern days an "eye single" to life's one work. Such crifices for principle and such sensitive lancings of duty are too rare in actual life pass unnoticed. They merit the careful thought of all who desire the development of man's spiritual nature.

Since that day of momentous decision the institution has grown steadily in numbers, influence, and good works. It has passed through many trials, but they only serve to strengthen its faith in the spiritual verities of life. It has been reduced at times to its last pot of gruel, but the prayer of faith has brought relief, and sometimes just at the moment of dire need. Mr. Ishii has never refused shelter to any needy applicant. His home has become so widely known, especially since the earthquake last fall, that he is forced to inquire carefully into the actual needs of each case, so as not to be imposed upon by the shiftless and the lazy. Twice he has shown the greatness of his soul by rising to meet the emergency of widespread calamity—after the Kishu floods of 1890, and the great earthquake of 1891.

Quietly conferring with the children last November, he infused his own self-forgetful spirit into them. They were as ready as he to give for those needier than themselves. Subscribing thirteen dollars out of their own poverty, they started out to solicit aid from others. The local Salvation Army took up the work under Mr. Ishii's lead, and has raised from Japanese sources over eleven hundred dollars and seventeen hundred articles of clothing. A branch asylum was opened at Nagoya, and seventy-seven earthquake orphans are cared for there and at the main home in Okayama.

After a detailed description of the institution and its working, our missionary correspondent concludes thus:—

Ishii and his institution are a practical realisation of his own favourite New Testament verse. "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another." A love that works itself out in deeds. A life that is truly Christlike.

The Foreign Evangelisation Society.

This society aids many missions and individuals who are working for God in France, Germany, Italy, Spain, and other countries, the society being upheld by the subsidies of brethren at home, but having to lament a serious diminution in its income. Abundant testimony has been received from the workers whom it has aided as to the great help and comfort which its small remittances have given them. In a letter acknowledging the receipt of £10, M. Seitte, who continues to be vigorously engaged in evangelising that town and the surrounding district, says: "Pray express my gratitude to your committee. We are living from hand to mouth, and I bless God for the help which comes to us through your society." Another note of gratitude is from Herr Rohrbach, of Berlin. "Many thanks for your kind letter and enclosed half of £5. As usual, it has come in very good time, and we praise the Lord for again being mindful of our needs." The hon. sec. is Rev. Horace Noel, Woking, Surrey.

It is a greater glory to us that we are allowed to serve God, than it is to Him that we offer service. He is not rendered happy by us, but we are made happy by Him. He can do without such earthly servants, but we cannot do without such a heavenly Master.

GOSPEL WORK IN NATAL.

Mr. and Mrs. Elbert S. Clarke, of Entakamu, Ixopo, Natal, writes in a letter dated July 28:—

We continue to be much encouraged by the large number of heathen people, many of them from a distance, who assemble from week to week at our Gospel meetings. There are, however, still many who persistently refuse to come to hear the Gospel message, fearing the effect they believe it will have upon their lives.

The last two meetings for inquirers have been very largely attended. The people at the Gospel meeting were very plainly told that they were not to come into the second meeting (the inquirers' class, which is held after an interval) unless they were willing to come to Jesus and to follow Him, and yet forty-three people stayed to the meeting before last, and sixty-eight to the last meeting. We ask earnest prayer for these people who have thus shown before the heathen that they are seeking salvation, that they may indeed be found of Him who came to seek and to save the lost. Prayer is also asked for the Wednesday afternoon meeting for women and girls, which has increased in attendance, and is felt to be a helpful time; and also for those attending our three day schools, where instruction in the Bible is given daily.

We are glad that some of the new converts feel it a privilege to take part in the kraal meetings. This is especially the case with Nkantolo, a young married man, who has, happily, only one wife. He comes to the day school here regularly, his great desire being to learn to read in order that he may help the more effectively in spreading the Gospel amongst his own people. He has received the truth in the love of it, and his bright happy face speaks of the change within.

At Endunduma, Madikitelo, one of the young men lately won from heathenism, who regularly attends the day school, has come out as an earnest Gospel preacher from kraal to kraal. He greatly values his New Testament, which he is now able to read. We ask the earnest prayers of our friends for Divine guidance with regard to Endunduma, as the teacher, Charles Myndlandlu, who has been working successfully there, has been compelled to leave on account of a serious lung affection, the place being much too cold for him in his present state of health. We are now preparing to leave home in the waggon for a long stay there. We hope, during our residence, to make bricks in order to add two rooms to the cottage, also to line the present building and the school house, which are built of iron.

A youth who was for several years a scholar in our Hope Vale School, and who is now receiving advanced teaching at the Edendale College, is spending his holiday with us. It is his desire to devote his life to the work of giving the Gospel to his own people. For some time past he has been a bright, consistent Christian, and a bold witness for his Lord.

Nearly three weeks ago we were surprised to find, after the Gospel meeting, that a little girl named Mattitani refused to go home with her sisters, saying she wanted to 'kolwa in Kosini' (believe in the Lord) 'and be dressed.' At first we did not understand how intensely she desired this, but on talking with her and finding that one little girl from her home had already been sent to the Trappists (an order of Papists who have been from kraal to kraal in the Ifafa Valley and elsewhere amongst the people who attend our meetings, trying to get children for their monastic and conventual establishments), and that she greatly dreaded being sent to them herself, we felt we could not refuse the child's request, especially as she has for more than two years been coming to our meetings, and shows real love for Bible teaching. She seems very happy with us, and is glad to be taught texts and hymns which she learns quickly. We are sure that many will pray that this child, who has shown such decision in leaving heathenism, and escaping the emissaries of the Pope, may grow up a sincere Christian, and let her light shine for Jesus in the surrounding darkness. It is sad to know that however much we may do for her, and although she is an orphan, the time will come, if she lives, when her owner will claim the right given him by the laws of this country to sell her for ten head of cattle.

In closing, may we ask you, dear friends, whether we are all doing to our utmost to carry out the command of our Divine Master with regard to the heathen world which is his inheritance?

UP AND DOWN THE BRISTOL CHANNEL.

LEAVES FROM A SEAMEN'S MISSIONARY'S JOURNAL.

THERE are supposed to be 80,000 ships of various tonnage that pass Lundy every year. On this island is a beautiful lighthouse, and in certain winds ships lie here for protection; many, too, have been wrecked by sudden shifts of wind. In the little mission schooner-yacht Alfred I have often anchored off this island.

We were really a church afloat, for the crew of the yacht Alfred were Christian sailors and men of prayer. The skipper was a famous character, a living witness for his Master. Before he came into the service of the Missions to Seamen he had been distinguished in his early days as a great wrestler, gambler, and swearer, and frequenter of taverns. At the parish church of Hayle, in Cornwall, under the ministry of Rev. W. Haslam, he became a new man, and as a proof of his conversion, went to his employers and others, collected sufficient to purchase a mission flag, and hoisted it to the mainmast of s.s. Cornwall, and requested his devoted pastor to preach under that flag. Before he left the Cornwall, nine of the crew became followers of Christ.

Hearing this account of him, I asked him to become one of the crew of the Alfred. He finally became the skipper of the yacht, and in dangerous weather I have known him stand at the helm for twenty-four hours, refreshments being brought to him on deck, and he would run down to his favourite spot for a few moments of prayer. I have often thought that could an infidel watch, as I did, the career of this sailor, he would be forced to confess the power of Christ to change a man's life.

I had another sailor on board, who had a most remarkable memory for Scripture. I think I may say the most happy hours of my life were spent in the Bristol Channel with this happy crew. Up and down the Bristol Channel we used to sail, visiting the roadsteads, lightships, and docks.

The attention of a crew, when kindly treated and spoken to in a friendly way, is something wonderful. I once took a merchant from Bristol with me for a Sunday's work to see what we did on board ship. He came to the cabin of the little yacht afterwards and wept, and said, he "did not know there was such a work in the world," and subscribed £5 per annum afterwards.

On one occasion I determined to follow a crew up to Bristol, and see them paid off. To see these men when surrounded by crimps at a shipping office was indeed a sad sight. One of them was so absolutely intoxicated that he tumbled down the steps of the shipping-office. I followed one of the most respectable of the crew, who was perfectly sober, but led away by one of these crimps to a low tavern. I followed a few paces behind them, and then into the public-house. As an excuse I asked for a cup of coffee. There was none to be had at 11 o'clock a.m., and the crimp at the door said to me,

"THE SOONER YOU ARE OUTSIDE THE BETTER."

The inside of the place was filled with female vampires and sailors. The first policemen I met, I said, "There is a young sailor in that public house I want out." He replied, "It is not my business to fetch him out, and I am not allowed to enter except to stay a brawl or fight." "Well," I said, "he has to come out, how is it to be done?" After thinking over the matter, he offered to protect me if needed, and was at the door in readiness, in case I required his help; so I entered again, took hold of the young man's arm, and said, "You are wanted." With the aid of the kind policeman, I took him away to the Sailors' Home and he was off to Glasgow that night. But as soon as he was outside the tavern he said to me, "I am so glad to get away." At that time we had no "Missions to Seamen" chaplain or reader at Bristol, and I got two of my old friends (both now gone to their rest) to be responsible, each for half the salary of a reader. These two friends were the late Bishop Anderson and Mr. Lavington.

It may be mentioned that our first reader at Bristol was a naval man, who for years waged a real war with the crimps of Bristol. He never forgot my directions to him—that he must be the first man to set his foot on board every homeward bound ship that arrives in Bristol. Now, what did this imply? The curses and threatenings of the crimps that they would throw him into the water, and I was obliged to get the police to be his protector, or they most surely would have done it.

JEWS IN ALEXANDRIA.

REV. M. T. S. TAYLOR, the Church of Scotland Missionary to the Jews in Alexandria, gives in his latest monthly report some vivid pictures of the work. We glean one or two likely to be of interest to many.

"Quite a roomful of boys met me this morning. My young Israelites having sufficiently commemorated the great transactions at Sinai (the Feast of Pentecost) had returned to their benches. They and their Gentile companions read the concluding portion of the twelfth chapter of Acts. Having had time for a careful study of the lesson, I was able to interest the boys in the history and fate of King Herod Agrippa the First. I must confess that I sometimes grudge the time and trouble demanded by daily preparations for this meeting, but to-day the attention paid by my juvenile congregation was more than sufficient recompense.

"Mr. Kestin met three Russian Jews, with whom he easily got into a conversation about the sufferings of their fellow-countrymen, and afterwards about Christ and Christianity. One of them said, "I think the time will soon come when stuffed specimens of the Jew may be found in museums, but not one living Jew will be found in the whole world." Mr. Kestin urged him not to yield to despair even in this time of Jacob's trouble. 'On the cross of Jesus,' continued the evangelist, 'there was written 'Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews.' Our race shall not pass away until the prediction contained in that inscription shall have been realised.' Mr. Kestin gave the three Russians portions of the New Testament in Judæo-German. They promised to read them carefully.

"Fewer Jewish 'inquirers' come to me now than came a few months ago. These enterprising individuals have learned that the new missionary possesses no fund from which to provide them with passage money to London, and that in most cases their doleful tales of suffering from pestilence in Teheran or famine in Mosul, from the avarice of a Turkish governor or the tyranny of a Russian Czar, gain little more than his sympathy. One or two cases of imposture have been alluded to in my reports. These should not lead the committee to forget that their agents are being continually brought into contact with cases of real and often uncomplaining distress.

"Mrs. Robinson meets with many cases of disease. Though she visits primarily as an evangelist, not as a doctor or nurse, she can often be of some use to sufferers. To-day she was visiting small-pox cases. Our poor people try to conceal cases of small-pox. This is wrong, no doubt, and productive of much evil. Yet one can hardly blame them. When the existence of a case becomes known, the sanitary officer swoops down upon the house and orders the destruction of the clothes in which the patient has lain. There are often only a few poor rags, yet they are valued by the family which has scarcely another earthly possession. One or more epidemic seems always at work in Alexandria. Diphtheria is one of the most prevalent and fatal. Cases of ophthalmia are painfully frequent. Just yesterday Mrs. Robinson visited L.'s dirty home, and found the second daughter suffering from ophthalmia. Having prescribed something to give present relief, she gave the mother a note to Dr. Haddad. Dr. Haddad is a well-known Syrian medical man who has kindly offered to visit 'gratis' anyone recommended to him by the Mission. Others are helping us in various ways. Some give a little money. Sir Charles Cookson is a generous though anonymous subscriber to Mrs. Robinson's subscription list. Not all our subscribers are Christians. Mr. S., a Jewish clothier, shows himself a kind friend. We cannot hope to make our benevolent work independent of help from Scotland, but we do hope to create a helpful interest in it here in Alexandria."

SERVICES FOR JEWS.

"I have made no attempt to start a Saturday service for adult Jews. The success of an experiment of the kind made in former years was not encouraging. I am not able to preach acceptably as yet in the language best known to the Jews, and have little liking for the interpreter system. It is better, moreover, to show the Jews at once that from the point of view of our God and Saviour there is no distinction between Jew and Gentile. We, therefore, instead of inviting them to special services in which they would be marked off and preached down upon, invite them to the ordinary services in English, Arabic, and Italian, held every Sunday in the Mission Buildings. It is pleasing to note that increasing interest is shown by our scholars in the services."

DIFFERENT CLASSES OF ALEXANDRIAN JEWS.

"The Jews of Alexandria may be roughly yet conveniently divided into Italian, German, and Arabic, in accordance with the languages chiefly spoken by them. The Italian-speaking Jews, though Alexandrian, it may be, by birth and descent, are European in character. Many of them are in a decent middle-class position. To religion of any kind they are indifferent, but they have a keen sense of the value of education, and are by no means exclusive. Our mission work hitherto has been mainly done among them. Of late a large number of German Jews have come to Alexandria, and several of their children have found their way to our free schools. They have the reputation of having a higher religious but a lower moral standard than their Italian kindred. Their girls are smart and often pretty; much in request among the keepers of the low brasseries of the Rue des Sœurs district. This German element is not likely to be a permanent one in the population. The Arabic Jews are understood to be much more numerous than Italian and German combined. Their habits are Oriental, much influenced probably by those of the Mohammedans and Copts among whom they have lived. They are religious and even bigoted. They have very few books and no great desire for education. They do not welcome the approaches of aliens in race and creed. If the house of an Englishman is his castle, the house of an Arabic Jew is his sanctuary. Our Mission has as yet touched scarcely more than the fringe of this portion of the population. I should like to develop work among this important and interesting section of the Hebrew community. It seems possible, now that we have not only an evangelist but a lady visitor, to make ourselves better acquainted with them."

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

ANOTHER year of Christlike solicitude for the tempted and erring women and girls of London's streets has been passed through by Mr. Edward W. Thomas and the matrons and workers under his direction in the various branches of the institution which he founded in 1857. The five rescue homes in as many different parts of London and the three preventive homes have all been in full use as usual. The Open All-Night Refuge in Manchester-street, W.C., has continued to play an important part in the good work of plucking brands from the burning, while sixty-three Christian Missions and other agencies were also co-operated with in rescuing the bodies and souls of poor wanderers, who have been lovingly gathered in from street, parks, police-courts, prisons, midnight meetings, hospitals, bad homes, and other sources.

All the homes, both reformatory and preventive, are the scenes of diligent industry, with a view to future usefulness in domestic service or marriage; and care for soul interests, which are so intimately connected with the claims of a Saviour's sacrificing love, is justly regarded by Mr. Thomas as the main source of strength in an enterprise which has been so eminently marked by success in turning many from grievous sin into the paths of righteousness.

Very few who pass by the well-known central office, 200, Euston-road, have the remotest idea, from its private appearance, that for many years it has been open daily to afford some measure of that prompt and practical aid which is inculcated by the Friend of sinners. Multitudes have there found the lady registrar's room to be the first step to a converted life and the portal of a hopeful future.

During the past year about twenty specially painful cases were submitted for help, young women, chiefly domestics, who, under definite promise of marriage, had been brought to dishonour by their heartless and cowardly betrayers, then deserted and left to bear their shame, suffering, and disappointment alone.

As an instance of the usefulness of the preventive department, the case of a young cook may be cited. While out walking, she met an Italian, who induced her to lodge with his so-called mother. Strong persuasion was used to induce her to visit Monte Carlo for questionable purposes. She declined, after being detained for nearly a fortnight. She at last got out of the house, came to the office, and saw Mr. Thomas, who obtained her clothing, placed the adventurer under the surveillance of the National Vigilance Society, and restored the young woman to her parents in the country.

NORTH-WEST LONDON.—Steps are being taken towards the opening of a Polytechnic in Kentish Town. A committee has been formed, a site secured through the assistance of Sir Julian Goldsmid and Mr. Lawson. The Charity Commissioners approved of the site, and undertook that if it was purchased, and suitable buildings erected thereon, they would give an endowment of £50,000.

WUPPERTHALER ANNIVERSARY.

The Wupperthaler Fest Woche, from August 14 to 17, was a season of great refreshment, enjoyed by a large number of German Christians. Mr. Schrenk, the well-known mission preacher, gave Bible readings during the previous week to nearly a hundred evangelists on "being filled with the Holy Ghost." The evangelists were agents of the Evangelisation Society for Germany, students of the training institution founded by the late Professor Christlieb at Bonn, and now removed to Barmen. Several town missionaries and ministers also attended.

The meetings at Barmen and Elberfeld were the best as to attendance, the teaching given, and the blessing received, that were ever held in the Wupper Valley.

The large churches, which hold from two to three thousand, were filled to overflowing, and at every service during the week multitudes had to leave. At the after meetings, which were held in the largest halls, there was the same pressure, though two congregations met at the same time. It is decided to build a hall to seat 5,000 people, before next year's meetings.

THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN UNION

for the Rhine Province met on Saturday afternoon and evening, in the large hall of their stately building in Elberfeld, when Pastor Glaser, of Haan, presided. The subject was "How can our Young Men's Union specially serve the Church and the Kingdom of God?" The annual report shows that in Rhineland and Westphalia there are 300 associations, with over 20,000 members. On Sunday, Aug 7, the annual sermon was preached in the second Reformed church, in Elberfeld, by Pastor V. Bodelschwingh, of Bielefeld, from Rom. vii. 7-9.

THE BERGISCH BIBLE SOCIETY

held its anniversary in the first Lutheran church in Elberfeld, the next day. Pastor Hoffmann, of the Lutheran Church, Geneva, preached from 2 Peter i. 9. He referred to Mackay of Uganda, and the opposition he met with from the Romish priests because he took his stand on the Word of God. What the Evangelical Church had suffered in former times so it is now on the Victoria-Nyanza, and if the enemy could they would make it to-day as it was in the days of the Reformation. Millions of men are filled with hatred against the Bible; they will not have the Bible because it denies them the right of living to themselves and doing what they like to do. Man's spirit and man's word is entirely against God's Spirit and God's Word. Human reasoning strives against the Word of God, and this fills many believers with alarm. But while they would destroy the whole building, we would not give them one stone. "We will hold fast on our Bible." We need it, and we must have it, for we have in it that sure word of light, and we are, through it, made true children of God, to walk in the light.

THE WEST GERMAN UNION OF THE BLUE CROSS

held its meetings in Barmen on the Monday. In the evening 1,200 persons sat down to tea in the Vereins-haus. The claims of the Rhenish Westphalisch Union for Israel were advocated by Pastor Stolle, of Cologne, and others. In the afternoon and evening of Tuesday was the 44th anniversary of the Evangelical Society for Germany. Mr. Schrenk preached in the first Reformed church in Elberfeld from 1 John i. 1-4. In our times people are not contented with forms but a cry of heartfelt need comes from our folk—Life we must have. Our message is opened to them; to hearts hungry after grace, it brings life. During last year in the field of the Evangelical Society this has been proved in hundreds of cases. How shall we give this message? In the same manner as John and his fellow Apostles did. They brought not their own wisdom but what they themselves had experienced. The Lord will have such Christians as can testify what they have known and felt themselves.

The Apostles knew first of the appearance of the Lord in the flesh, but after the resurrection, and specially after Pentecost, they could testify in a more glorious manner. Our working is often poor, not such as by the Apostles, therefore we must humble ourselves before the Lord. If we do this, and pray for more spiritual power, the Lord will give us blessing. Are you all joyful Christians? He who is still under the law cannot rejoice. But all who earnestly long after salvation shall receive great joy, for the whole Saviour belongs to such. Thou shalt have what thy heart longeth for, but thou must learn to trust the Lord entirely.

THE RHENISH MISSIONARY SOCIETY

held its annual meetings. For many years that godly man and friend of missions, Pastor Blumhardt, of Bad Boll, preached the annual sermon, and when very old he attended the Wupperthaler meetings, and his well-known form was seen standing in the pulpit behind Professor Christlieb, who then preached the annual sermon with great power from the text, "Always abounding in the work of the Lord."

This year the preacher was the well-known advocate of Missions, Pastor Warneck, D.D. His text was Rom. i. 16, 17. The sermon was a masterpiece of sanctified argument for missions to the heathen. The ordination of the new missionaries by Superintendent Pastor Krummacher followed. The director, Dr. Schreiber, was deeply moved as he addressed the outgoing brethren from Rev. ii. 10: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." He exhorted them to be true to the Lord and the word of his grace, and always to work and bear in the steps of Jesus; to be true under suffering and tribulation, of which a missionary very often receives a rich share. In faith lies the power to be true, and faith leads into Christ, the source of all faithfulness, who has said, "Without Me ye can do nothing."

One of the newly-ordained missionaries addressed the meeting for himself and his brethren from 2 Cor. iv. 8: "Sowing in tears and reaping in joy is a law for all work in the Kingdom of God. Jesus Himself was not exempt from this law. As the seed sown with tears in his life and death, He as noble wheat corn fallen in the earth has become the joyful harvest of the world's reconciliation now preached to men. Also by his followers there gives no other way than that sown with tears, that is, through all kinds of difficulties and suffering, to the joyful harvest of victory and fruit."

Other societies and agencies also held their annual meetings. There was also a pastoral conference, and a thoughtful discussion on mission work at home and abroad.

IN THE EARTHQUAKE REGION.

Mrs. L. Pierson, of the Women's Union Missionary Society of America for Heathen Lands, writing to The Missionary Link, gives the following interesting instances of the Lord's work in that part of Japan recently devastated by earthquake:—

We have recently visited Hakone, where again a little company of new Christians gathered to profess their faith, and to receive the sacrament of baptism, and afterwards to partake of the Lord's Supper. There were seven thus admitted into the church of Christ, so that now there are eighteen Christians in that village, constituting a small organisation in the great body of Christ. Among them there is one woman who was before her conversion living in the commission of great sin. The Lord commanded me to go and speak to her about her soul, warning and advising and persuading her. The very first time that I went to see her she listened attentively and wept silently. The Word was made efficacious to her conversion through the blessed ministry of the Divine Spirit, and she is now rejoicing in the Lord.

Another elderly woman professed faith in Jesus years ago, and applied for baptism; but, owing to some prejudice against her existing in the minds of two members, she was not then admitted into the church. At that time some of the brethren and myself exerted all our efforts on her behalf, and prayed most earnestly that the prejudice might be removed, but did not prevail. Now she is united with the church and her face is radiant with the joy of the new life.

From Hakone we pursued our way to Gifu, passing through three towns. We stopped and told the story of the cross briefly, or, remaining over-night, held meetings which were well attended. At Gifu, we gathered large numbers into our rooms at the hotel, and among those assembled was a Buddhist priest, who asked questions after the meeting closed. We proceeded to Xasamats, a town which was entirely destroyed by the earthquakes, and has only been partially rebuilt. The whole community assembled to hear the words of life.

We passed onward to Takenohana, our final destination for that trip. There we remained three days, and God blessed the meetings held, to the conversion of souls. At this place from six to seven hundred men, women, and children assembled on one occasion, though it stormed from five to six. A young Buddhist priestess, who heard for the first time of our Saviour, wept as she listened, and resolved to give herself to Him. She is beautiful, but, being about sixteen years old, we could not rescue her from her present life, as she is still in her minority and subject to her parents. We will not cease our prayers and efforts for her. Many of our Buddhist priests were interested, while others opposed the progress of the truth. They posted placards everywhere, on which these words were written: "Do not believe Christianity: believe Buddhism." They are labouring to cancel the influences of the truth, and to establish their false system by lectures and other means. But we know the final issue will be victory to the truth and eternal destruction to idolatry.

MRS. BAEYERTZ IN BAYSWATER.

Mrs. Baeyertz has conducted a ten days' mission in Westbourne Grove Chapel, Rev. John Tuckwell, pastor. There were large congregations on successive evenings.

A correspondent writes:—"On Thursday night, at a meeting for men only, when the invitation was given for instant decision for Christ during the singing of the last hymn, the sight of men rising all over the meeting and entering the inquiry room will never be forgotten. Inside it was inspiring and gladdening—men of all classes and ages, first one, and another, and another testified to receiving Christ as his Saviour.

"On Friday night the address was to professing Christians, and as the meeting went on a solemn awe pervaded the audience, and so crowded were both the inquiry rooms with broken-hearted penitents that they had to be brought back into the body of the chapel to be conversed with. Mrs. Baeyertz preached three times on Sunday, with manifest blessing, the large church (with seating capacity for two thousand) being packed to the doors. Mrs. Baeyertz expressed herself as being very much pleased with the hearty way in which the workers assisted, both in open-air work and also amongst the inquirers."

DUBLIN SOLDIERS' HOME.

Several ladies join with Miss Sandes, who has had charge of this work since September last, in systematic barrack and hospital visitation, taking the men something to read, and a few flowers to brighten the wards. Part of the large lecture hall is used as a recreation room, to which the men come in large numbers every evening; and the ladies, going from one to another with a friendly word, try to make it a pleasant time. The exclamation is often heard, "This is real home-like, isn't it?" Making friends with them thus induces many to attend the Gospel meetings, so that there is a growing attendance at the latter. On Sunday evening about seventy attend, and there will probably be more when the Royal Barracks are occupied. The Tuesday Gospel temperance meeting is made bright and attractive so as to induce those who are not temperance or religious men to attend. The Christian men meet for prayer every evening for a quarter of an hour before the larger gathering; and to this is to be traced much of the blessing received in distinct cases of souls won to Christ and lives turned Godward. Much expense has been incurred during the past year, through the imperative necessity for overhauling the drainage. The refreshment bar and the provision of sleeping accommodation are important departments. Capt. R. Wade Thompson, of Clonskeagh Castle, county Dublin, is hon. sec.

HID TREASURE.

What sweet and full conceptions
Of Truth revealed, O Lord,
The humble souls rejoice in
Who feed upon thy word.
To ever-verdant pastures
The shepherd leads his flock;
While streams, that slake and cleanse them,
Flow from the smitten rock.

To souls bowed down in sorrow
Sweet consolations come,
The outcast finds a welcome,
The stranger reads of home.
My soul, claim here thy portion,
For priceless treasure dig:
Within this gift from Heaven
The priceless pearl lies hid.

Here, too, Truth's lamp is shining
To guide poor wanderers home:
And every page endorses
The call that bids them come.
O height! O depth! O fulness!
O joy all joys above!
'Tis knowledge, passing knowledge!
'Tis light! 'Tis life! 'Tis love!

Slain all day long for Jesus,
Death daily yields his sting;
Cast out and persecuted,
As victors still we sing:
And when the final triumph
Shall end this worldly strife,
His hidden word within us
Will quicken with new life.

COLPORTAGE IN JOHANNESBURG.

MISS BROWN, president of the Johannesburg Branch of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union, sends the following interesting particulars concerning Gospel and temperance work in that modern California:—

"Johannesburg, the 'golden city,' now contains about 20,000 inhabitants. It is, of course, a 'mining camp,' but that gives one no idea of the place; the mines extend for miles outside of the town, and one sees very little of them unless we go to them. The town itself is a marvellous place not yet six years old; when first it was built it was 250 miles from a railway station, and everything had to be brought here by bullock wagon. Now it contains streets of beautiful houses, fine large shops, a handsome hospital, and, more wonderful still, some beautiful gardens and fine tall trees where, six years ago, there was nothing but the bare veldt. The population is chiefly English, but there is a large number of Germans, and indeed some from nearly every country in Europe, besides, of course, the natives working at the mines. There is a great need for temperance work here, as you will readily understand when I tell you that there is a bar or canteen for every fifty of the population.

"We (the W.C.T.U.) sent up a petition to the President and Licensing Board at Pretoria, and so did the Good Templars and the Commission of Mines, but the only result at first was that every application was granted with a readiness that surprised even the applicants themselves.

"A public meeting was then held, at which the Secretary of the Mining Board stated that drink cost the mines £5,000 a month, through loss of time and incapacity for work when the natives returned to it. I am glad to say this has had some good effect, for at the last meeting of the Licensing Board three-fourths of the applications were refused.

"It was this state of things that led the W.C.T.U. to think of sending a colporteur amongst the European working classes here, who for the most part belong to the 'lapsed masses,' and are very difficult to get at. The Salvation Army is very active, and the Cape General Mission has recently sent an evangelist here, but there is room and pressing need for more workers, and we believe that the colporteur going from door to door offering Bibles and Gospel books for sale finds many opportunities for faithful and earnest conversation with the people. Our colporteur is an earnest, happy Christian, with a bright, cheery face and a very winning manner, and we believe he is doing a really effective work, and reaching many whom it would be difficult otherwise to get at. He visits the mines also, and has had on the whole a good reception. At one mine on his first visit the miners asked him to bring some hymn books next time, so that they might have a meeting. He has a Gospel meeting in a schoolroom every Sunday evening, and an open-air service every Wednesday. At both these the attendance is increasing, and the sale of his books has also steadily increased. He has begun a small temperance society on his own account, and has got a good many, both black and white, to sign the pledge.

"I regret to say we find it very difficult to obtain funds to carry on the work, and sometimes fear we shall have to give it up. We should be grateful if English friends would help us, for it is chiefly English men and women that we are seeking to save. Any contributions will be received on our behalf, by Mr. H. D. Brown, 37, Farringdon-street, London, E.C."

THE CHRISTIAN ALLIANCE, U.S.A., teaches a four-fold Gospel—Christ the Saviour, Christ the Sanctifier, Christ the Healer, and Christ the coming King. The president says that there are 100,000 persons in the States who are in full sympathy with this Alliance. Mr. J. K. Cruikshank writes from New York: We have had three conventions lately, and a missionary day at each. These are the results—The Asbury Park Missionary collection provided for twenty-eight missionaries; the Round Lake, fourteen; and the Old Orchard, 140; making the three days' total provision for 182 missionaries.

NEW YORK TRAMPS.—The homeless men who make use of the various low lodging-houses in the neighbourhood of the "Bowery" are the subjects of deep Christian solicitude on the part of many among those who worship in Broome-street Tabernacle, which has become the headquarters of an extensive rescue work under Mr. Alex. F. Irvine. By the services conducted in the streets and lodgings, men of all nationalities, faiths, and professions are reached, the great majority having been reduced through drink to the level of the common tramp. Of those who were sheltered and helped during last year, seventeen are known to be living godly lives, some in mission work, others preparing for the ministry, and most of them working at their trades or callings.

"P.S.A. FOR YOUNG WOMEN."

THE following correspondence, which has just taken place between Mr. John Blackham and a lady in Edinburgh, will probably be of interest to many who may be asking questions of a similar kind.

DEAR SIR,—Is it possible to have "Pleasant Sunday afternoons" for young women? I am quite ignorant of your mode of working, and did not know that P.S.A.'s were being carried out on Gospel lines until the notice lately of the work in THE CHRISTIAN.

The Edinburgh Young Women's Christian Association is opening an institute (to include restaurant and free employment agency) at the east end of Edinburgh among working girls. Could your work be adapted for them? The institute is not quite ready to be opened; it is a new branch of our work in this city, on which we are expecting much blessing, for it has been entirely the Lord's beginning and ordering so far. F. H. K.

P.S.A. Central Office, West Bromwich.

DEAR MADAM,—I am so glad that there is a prospect of opening up the P.S.A. in Edinburgh. It is, I believe, especially adapted for the district and kind of people you refer to. I am sending you pamphlets, etc., on P.S.A. organisation and work, and you will see that it is gloriously possible to adapt the movement to the needs of working girls. We have, in fact, P.S.A.'s for men only, women only, and mixed classes of men and women. They are all alike being wonderfully blessed by God.

There are several very successful P.S.A.'s for women, to the leaders of which I should like you to write, viz.:—Mrs. T. H. Lloyd, of 114, New Walk, Leicester, has a splendid women's class of nearly 1,000 members. Rev. J. K. Nuttall, of 36, Devonshire-road, Liverpool, has a class for women on Monday evenings, numbering over 1,400, 250 of whom have joined a "Tontine Society," got up for the special benefit of the class. Mrs. Theodore Walker, of Glenn Hall, Leicester, has a class of factory girls (I believe) on Thursday evenings, numbering over 500 members. This class is continued during the six winter months only.

Miss Mellors, of Sherwood Rise, Nottingham, is also connected with another flourishing P.S.A. for women, and others whom I have not space to mention.

I particularly desire that you communicate with the friends mentioned, because I feel sure that each one will send you information and counsel which will be very helpful. "In the multitude of counsellors there is wisdom," and seeing yours will probably be the first P.S.A. to take root in Edinburgh, I should like it to be exceptionally successful, both spiritually and numerically.

You will, by a careful perusal of the papers sent, see that the movement and its mission is a deep and real one. The services cannot be too earnest or too deeply impregnated with Gospel truth. But they may be too long and too prosy. I would especially ask you not to be in too great a hurry to commence; make all possible enquiries to get the class started on the best possible lines and at the best time.

Above all, let it be surrounded and hedged in by prayer. The movement itself is a living monument to the power of prayer, and it cannot live or succeed without it.

In many cases—and the most remarkable results have followed—the people gave themselves up to prayer for three whole months before starting the class. "Much prayer, much blessing. Little prayer, little blessing. No prayer, no blessing." I would, therefore, strenuously impress upon you the great importance and absolute necessity of earnest prayer before you commence this P.S.A. for women.

Our great secret is prayer, but not prayer before the class (that must be short and pointed), but prayer for the class, in the privacy of our own room.

Another secret of our success is brevity. The Sermon on the Mount, perhaps, contains all that is necessary for our right conduct and guidance of life, and yet it probably lasted only twenty minutes. A real P.S.A. should be a short, lively service—full of love—commenced with a smiling welcome, and closed before they have had enough of it. Leave them longing for more—"a full soul loatheth even an honeycomb."

The service must be bright. The people we are trying to get are mostly surrounded by unloveliness, and it should be your aim to make the P.S.A. service the brightest and happiest and most joyous hour in all the week.

You may think, after reading this, that the work is too great or that I am imposing too many conditions, or that your time and strength are too limited to come up to its requirements. But it is only by literally fulfilling the conditions that the class will flourish.

And though it may entail much self-sacrifice and denial, yet it is all done for the Master, "who was rich, yet for our sakes became poor."—Yours very truly, PRO JNO. BLACKHAM.

P.S.A. Central Office, West Bromwich.

TO PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

IF you cannot learn from your child you cannot teach it.

It is the weakness of the child that is its supremest strength.

The world of childhood is God's workshop for making men in.

All the vagabondage of the world begins in neglected childhood.

There is more attention paid at present to plant growth than to child growth.

Your son was not born with a trade in his hand, but with a hand fitted to learn a trade.

If the teacher looks upon his work as drudgery, it will only make him a drudge.

We know of no limit as to age when the Spirit of God can influence the heart of a child.

The way to preserve our children is not to maim their passions, but to make them subject to moral law.

It will be an ill day when we are so engaged in seeking lost sheep that we forget the lambs.

My great desire is to teach boys to govern themselves, a much better thing than to govern them myself.—Dr. Arnold.

In dealing with your children never forget Bushnell's remark:—"The soul of all improvement is the improvement of the soul."

You never know till you try to teach them how accessible your boys are, but you must approach each by the right door.

I have often thought what a melancholy world this would be without children, and what an inhuman world without the aged.—Coleridge.

Unless the community makes the whole of child-nature a matter of the deepest concern, it is destroying a part of its natural wealth.

Youth is but the lovely shell into which, continually growing, lives that wondrous thing, the spirit of a man, biding its moment of appearing.

"Never lose hope with a wayward child. Out of the knottiest and crookedest timber it pleases God to make rafters for His spiritual house."—Bishop Hall.

On Sunday the water runs idly over the mill-wheel, and though it goes clickety-click, no work is done. Is this like your Sunday school?—Spurgeon.

In the Berlin Deaf and Dumb Institution great prominence is given to gesture language in the training of the children. There are no fewer than five thousand signs in use.

The importance of developing the entire physical, intellectual, and spiritual capacities of children far transcends the minor matters which create divisions amongst state craftsmen.

Nothing develops the character like the fight against evil. Enlist your boys' sympathy and service early on the side of goodness, righteousness, and truth, and encourage them to be aggressive.

The boy ceased to care for his mother! Why? Perhaps the chief blame rests upon the mothers, who fail to study their boys sufficiently to fully understand them, to be able to adapt themselves to them and cultivate their affections.

Keep up a high standard of principle; your children will be your keenest judges in the future. Do be honest with them in small things as well as in great. If you cannot tell them what they wish to know, say so, rather than deceive them.

Regarding the physical punishment of children, there must be no impulsive pulling about, no random strokes with the hand or the ruler, no ear-boxing with its probable sequela—the ruptured tympanum. The head should never be struck, not even slapped.—The Lancet.

There were circumstances about my little boy's death of such peculiar bitterness, of what seemed almost cruel suffering, that I felt that I could never be consoled for it, unless the crushing of my own heart might enable me to work out some great good to others.—Harriet Beecher Stowe.

You must try to make the members of your class feel that Christ is knocking at the door of each of their little hearts; and you must realise with reverent awe that it is your work to help the little trembling fingers to undo the bolt and lift the latch to admit that gracious and majestic visitant.

A little boy was seated in the doorway with both hands extended upward holding a line. "What are you doing?" he was asked. "Flying my kite, sir." "What! I can see no kite, and you can see none." "I know that, sir, but I know it is there, for I feel it pull." What a beautiful illustration of a mother's influence—ay, of heavenly power.

OPEN-AIR PREACHING IN FRANCE.

Sir,—I read in your last issue some very cogent remarks on outdoor preaching. It would be well that all the truly evangelical churches in England were alive to the importance of this feature of active evangelisation. In spite of the numerous churches, chapels, and meeting halls throughout the land, it is impossible to reach a certain class of indifferents, as they will not come to the meetings provided for them under any pretence. Here outdoor preaching succeeds in a most wonderful manner, and every encouragement is given to those who sow by all waters. What is true of England is also true of France, where it is commonly thought, however, that such Anglican methods are not suitable to French ideas of religion. My experience as agent of the McAll Mission at St. Etienne for the last twelve years is that the Gospel in France, when simply and purely preached, is listened to with great interest by the peasants. Since the beginning of this summer I have organised outdoor preaching in all the villages and hamlets around this large city. Accompanied by three or four faithful friends, I set off each Sunday afternoon for a certain series of villages where the Gospel has never been heard before. We bring tracts, testaments, and selected hymns. We take our stand in any place where we see people in the street, in a court, or in a field. The singing soon brings a crowd, and then we speak to them on the first principles of the Gospel. It was wonderful and very encouraging to witness the rapt attention of those people, and never at any time were we treated with disrespect. Sometimes I am recognised, and I hear them say, "It is the English doctor from St. Etienne!"

It may be truly said of France that the "fields are white unto harvest." Never did the Gospel get such a chance in the country—would that all the Christians and the churches especially were alive to the fact. Some churches are very active, while others are unfortunately opposed to all aggressive work. If those who profess themselves Christians could only see the necessity of seizing on the present opportunity given in God's goodness to their country (France), how much quicker the power of darkness would lose its hold on the inhabitants. "Go ye into the highways and hedges," is the Divine command; and the literal fulfilment of that is open-air preaching.—Sincerely yours,

Hastings Burroughs,
St. Etienne, Sept. 6, 1892. Vice-Consul, U.S.

GERMAN CHRISTIAN COLPORTAGE.

On August 21 a number of Christians gathered at Gernsbach, in the pleasant valley of the river Murg, Grand Duchy of Baden, to assist at the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Christian Colportage Association, whose leader is Baron Julius von Gemmingen. The von Gemmingen family is a very ancient one and widespread in Southern Germany; the branch to which Baron Julius belongs was converted to the Gospel almost at the time that the pious Aloys Henhöfer, who entered the Protestant Church from the Church of Rome, was vicar. After his conversion in 1863, the Baron, who had been led into the light by the instrumentality of a tract, entered into the work of tract distribution, which had been introduced into Germany by Dr. Marriott at Stuttgart and Dr. Craig at Hamburg. After working privately, the Baron, with some brethren, founded, in 1867, the present association. The Franco-German war in 1870 soon put the young Society's energy to a test; the Baron, accompanied by twenty colporteurs and pastors, went to work on the battlefields, in the encampments, and in the hospitals among French and Germans; 65,000 Bibles and portions, and nearly 3,000,000 of tracts, in fifteen different languages, were disseminated during the war. The war ended, the Society had to struggle against the terrible flood of incredulity breaking in over Germany. Several papers, the Oelblatt, the Berœa, the Jugendoelblatt, were published to help the study of the Bible and in co-operation with the German branch of the great Bible Reading and Prayer Union.

A good number of colporteurs, agents, and depositories are working in many parts of Germany, and also in Switzerland, Austria, Russia, &c. According to activity, the society ranks among the first of the Continental societies; its catalogue, counting 910 publications, shows the names of authors like Bonar, Blackwood, Christlieb, Craig, Franke, Funcke, Haslam, Monod, Schrenk, Spurgeon, Stockmayer, Stöcker.

The first address at the principal meeting on the afternoon of the 21st, was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Craig, from London; Dr. Baedeker arrived on Monday, and on Tuesday evening gave an account of his travels and proceedings in Russia and Siberia. A well-attended prayer meeting on Wednesday morning brought the meetings, which, we confidently hope, have been largely blessed by the Lord, to a close.

EVANGELICAL CHURCH OF ITALY.

Worn and spent by twenty-one years of unceasing toil, Rev. Dr. John R. MacDougall has been constrained by enfeebled health to withdraw from the active part which he has so long taken in this organisation, and will in future act as its hon. treasurer and foreign secretary. His former office as general secretary is occupied by Rev. Cav. Saverio Fera, who, with expressions of much humility as one new to the work, issues a record for 1891, which abounds in the most striking and cheering details of labour, extending from the snowy Alps to smiling Sicily, occupying twenty-four provinces of the Kingdom of Italy, with twenty-five principal and thirty-five smaller churches. Cav. Fera acknowledges the goodness of God in the decree of the Government, and the signature of King Humbert recognising the Church; and in the salutation which came at the last General Assembly from almost all the Evangelical churches of France, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium, Germany, England, Scotland, America, and Italy itself.

The new secretary's official visit began, after leaving Florence, at Montefiascone, which, like other cities where Romish priests have reigned, is corrupt beyond imagination, so that the result of the mission to a place demoralised by an Episcopal Seminary with over a hundred debauched and debauching ecclesiastics may be easily imagined.

But at Forano, the centre of the work in Sabina, there is a strong church, despite the hostility of the clergy, who have the wealthy on their side. Jesuits and Barnabites were brought to deliver courses of sermons to the inhabitants, a strange proceeding on the part of those with whom the mass and the confessional are everything. At the deathbed of a member of the church the following precious testimony was delivered: "I am satisfied to have known Jesus. He is my life, and I long for the moment when I shall be with Him for ever." In Forano the missionary has an elementary school in which the children are those of Roman Catholic country folks. Some of these dear children repeat whole chapters of God's Word, and sing their hymns with precision.

Coming to Rome, it is found that the preaching has resulted in a growing spirit of consecration in the church, and in fresh conversions. One of the brethren was greatly troubled by the opposition of his wife and family. A monsignore was brought to convince him of the truth of Popery, and, though he failed in this, he secured loss of work to the Evangelical. Hunger and want enraged the wife still more. One Sabbath morning she came to church publicly to accuse the brethren of corrupting her husband's principles. The prayer made such an impression upon her that her anger was allayed. The love of God as set forth from 1 John iv. 8, entered her heart and conquered it. Further enlightened by the Word of God, she was convinced of the truth as it is in Jesus, and is now the joy of her husband. There is a Y.M.C.A. in connection with the church, counting forty-six members. Three meetings a week are held for considerable gatherings at the Mission of Porta Pia in the Via Venti Settembre. Pastor Conti is constantly visiting brethren scattered in the neighbourhood of Rome, wherever there is an open door for preaching Christ. The report, which goes on to record what is being done in Naples and numerous other places, may be had from Rev. R. S. Ashton, 13, Blomfield-street, E.C.

Children's Aid Society.

There seems to be general unanimity among those who are interested, in the conclusion that the most hopeful method of dealing with darkest England is to rescue her neglected and starving children, to feed, nourish, shelter, and train them in the way they should go, giving them both religious education and technical instruction. This is what the Children's Aid Society undertakes, so far as the funds placed at its disposal will permit. Looking at the record of what has been done during the year ending last March, we find that the five rescue officers of the society who are located in different parts of London have inquired into more than a thousand cases. Some of the police-courts are attended every day, the homes or habitations where the children live, their relations, the clergy of their parish or the ministers, and other friends likely to be interested, are all visited, their sympathy and help solicited, and every investigation is made that is likely to be useful in deciding as to the best method of dealing with the children. Industrial schools, reformatories, voluntary homes, and emigration have been utilised after careful study of the requirements of each case. Mr. Arthur J. S. Maddison directs the work, from 32, Charing-cross, S.W.

A MISSION TO GALATIA.

We desire to testify of the faithfulness of the Lord in his promise when He said, "Go ye . . . lo I am with you alway." . . . And I went about four and a-half years to preach the Gospel to the "foolish Galatians," whose natural trait of fickleness had caused much anxiety to the Apostle Paul. The same has been the experience of the mission for past thirty years in Yozgat—the central city. But at last the work not only has taken root, but has already begun to bring forth fruit, and promises larger success in future in the uplifting and enlightening of that community, as will be seen from the brief sketch of the work below.

EVANGELISATION AND CHRISTIAN NURTURE.

Galatia is now under Turks. The inhabitants are principally Turks, Armenians, and Greeks. Owing to the severe restrictions on the part of the Government, our work is mostly confined to the Armenians and Greeks. These people, though nominally Christians, and possessing the Bible centuries before Europe, have their Bible chained in unknown tongues, and are in need of evangelisation as much as any other people. During the last four years, the membership of our church has been doubled, the pulpit has been made a centre of influence, and not a few are drawn to hear of the Word by God. While doing our duty in general evangelisation, we have not neglected the internal uplifting, nor forgotten our mission to the young. The Yozgat church being purified by truth from dissensions is now in a constant revival condition by the presence of the Holy Spirit. Our prayer-meetings have been a centre of life, and almost all the members of our congregation attend. We also pay much attention to the work of Christian nurture. Our Sunday school is conducted according to the methods of Sunday School Union, with the International lessons, and I.B.R.A. readings. Our young people are organised according to the plans of the Y.P.S.C.E. Yozgat has the honour of being the first to adopt Christian endeavour method in Turkey. The good example has been copied by many, and the interest has spread through communication and conference, until the movement has become well nigh general. Consequently a small manual has been prepared, which is to be printed in the Armenian and Turkish languages. We verily hope that the interest thus started will spread until it will kindle every church and congregation in Turkey with the zeal of Christian endeavour.

The widening character of our work has been remarkable. Our boys' school has reached the rank of a high school only two years ago. Our home for peasant boys meets the need of the city of Yozgat with its 30,000 inhabitants, and the surrounding country, which is largely composed of farming districts. The home selects promising boys from farming districts, and puts them into the care of a mother under our supervision that they may enjoy the privileges of our school. We have also a school for girls with ninety pupils, prospering in the hands of our able and consecrated lady-principal and her associate. Lastly, there is our Kindergarten enterprise, which we were driven to undertake from a deep sense of duty, and the irresistible appeal of the people. The remarkable success of the work thus far justifies the wisdom of our undertaking. Last year we sent one of our lady teachers to Smyrna to study the system. She has been wonderfully sustained, and is now back with the best outfit for work. She enters upon her duties with the enthusiasm of an apostle and with the equally self-denying interest of a martyr. She has no provision for her salary, nor for a matron she needs and a room must be set up before winter. For these as well as other needs of our high school, we look to God for help. For ten of our present boys we have no provision. £75 also are needed to finish up our plans to set up a recitation room and two sleeping rooms. Any willing to help should communicate through Mr. C. Waters, 56, Old Bailey, London.

G. H. Krikorian.
Pastor of Yozgat Church, Turkey.

AMONG THE HOP-PICKERS.—Mr. S. Chinn writes from Alton, Hants:—"Large meetings are being held in the tents, and much encouragement given. At one of the meetings many were induced to sign the pledge. When 'Little Jamie' was shown by means of the magic lantern, one fine gipsey man was broken down in spirit, and went and signed the pledge. His wife, who had become decided for Christ, said: 'God bless thee, Sam. Let the devil drink his own broth.'" Capt. E. F. Hawkins, a lay reader in the Church Army, is conducting a mission among the hop-pickers in Salehurst district. The mission is to be continued throughout the hopping season. An evangelistic mission band has been formed in connection with the Hereford Y.M.C.A. for work in the hop gardens of the district.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 18.—NUMBERS XXXV.

REFUGE from the avenger, and refuge easily accessible from any part of the land! Such is the message of this chapter, with the additional reminder that the fugitive was not only to get in, but to stay in. If ever he ventured beyond those friendly precincts, before the decease of the high-priest, he was liable to instant death. Souls that have taken refuge in Jesus do well to take heed! In Him they are absolutely safe. No weapon that is formed against them shall prosper, and every tongue that shall arise against them in judgment shall they condemn. The very justice and oath of God, which were once against them, are now up on their side, and forbid their suffering the penalty of their sins; but they must not allow their great enemy to tempt them forth. It is his way to scatter dainty morsels outside Christ, so as to allure souls from their impregnable defence, and woe to such as are tempted forth! Three things will, so to speak, put us outside of the keeping power of Jesus—let us carefully note, that we may beware of them: unconfessed sin; permitted worry; and intermitted fellowship; to say nothing of the lure of the world or the flesh. Resist these, and simply remain in Jesus, and you are as safe as you would be in heaven. Oh, thou High-Priest, Thou ever livest to make intercession for us!

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 19.—NUMBERS XXXVI.

It seems to us strange that another chapter should be given to these five girls. Yet how significant! These were days when the rights of women were unknown. They were slaves or toys. But here they are recognised as an integral part of the congregation; they carry an inheritance where they give their hand in marriage; they may marry whom they think best, so long as it is within the limits of their tribe; the justice of their appeal is acknowledged. Evidently they were noble women, and we may hope that they had good husbands and happy homes. Girl-life is dear to God. Its purity and nobility, its frankness and gladness, lie at the foundation of the home-life, and of the nation. He hears its appeal, and vindicates it; He avenges its wrongs; He selects from its ranks a Miriam, an Esther, and a Mary; He bends tenderly over all plighted troths and marriage altars; He understands a girl's proud rapture in the love of husband, babe, and home; He keeps her inheritance. Only let her marry in her tribe, i.e., in the Lord. And may we not all learn from these Hebrew girls to claim and hold our rights in Christ? Our inheritance in Him may not be lightly alienated, but kept with tenacious hold, and used. For we are blessed in Him with all spiritual blessings, unsearchable riches, treasures which the moth of time cannot corrupt, or hand of thief plunder, but which we, alas! may fling away or fail to use.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 20.—DEUTERONOMY I.

The land of promise and rest lies before us. It is a good land, but we must go in and possess it for ourselves. It is given us, but we must take it by faith. Do not look at the difficulties of your temperament or circumstances; these are the Amorites and Anakim. If you look at them apart from God, you will be dismayed and paralysed. Look away to Him, who ever goes before his sheep, smiting down their foes by his club, and pointing their path by his staff; He has redeemed, is it likely that He will leave his work incomplete? How tender God is: He bears his people as a man does his son; He goes in the way before us to search out a place in which we may pitch our tents; He lights up our nights with fire; He screens us from the day's scorching heat with a canopy of cloud; He fights for us. All these things, which are attributed to Him in this ancient march, are true of Him always. And yet, as then, so now, we may provoke Him, and grieve Him, first by unbelief, and then by rash presumption. Oh, for grace to follow Him wholly, and to be willing for his sake to sacrifice our reputation and good name, and to stand against the violence of the people. This is not easy. It is harder to give up our high position among our fellows, than to renounce our bosom sin. But it is through such anguish, even unto death, that we enter the rest which awaits us on this side of heaven.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 21.—DEUTERONOMY II.

Much in this chapter instructs us, such as the careful way in which their inheritance and the way to it were defined. But one star glimmers in the sky with an especial radiance and beauty, that which tells of One who knows all about the walking of his people through the wilderness, and whose presence makes lack impossible (ii. 7). This must come home to many as they read. It is an echo of other words, spoken by a voice we love, "Your Father knoweth," "God only knows"; the words are often said flippantly, but they are sometimes the expression in which untold anguish finds utterance. Yes, He does know; penitent, weeping over a blotted past; prodigal, on the way home; parent, whose heart is breaking over that truant boy; wife, with nameless grief at waning love. Not a step is taken, not a tear is shed, not a pang stabs the heart, in this great wilderness journey, which is not known to Him. "I know their sorrows." But He has been with thee all the time, though often veiled from sense, and He will never leave thee, and thou shalt lack no good thing. Even now He is providing for thee, and putting the dread of thee on thy foes, and meting out thy land. "Fear not, I am with thee; be not dismayed, I am thy God."

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 22.—DEUTERONOMY III.

We may well be fearless, and keep festival, when, as the forms of dreaded evils approach us, the Lord holds our right hand, and says of each, Fear him not. And it is wonderful at such times how we actually get spoil out of objects of terror. Out of the eater comes meat, and out of the strong sweetness. At such times also, we cry out in our glee to others, "Ye shall not fear." But, ah! there are limits beyond which the most favoured servants may not go. They may seek by prayer to reverse or change the Divine plan, but it may not be. We plead for others, and we win untold blessing. We plead for ourselves, and the Lord will not hear. There comes a time when He even bids us ask no more. The Apostle entreated that the thorn might be taken out, but it was left in. Moses prayed that he might enter Canaan, but he died on the outskirts. But if either of them had stood where they stand now, they would not have pressed their suit, because they would have known it was better not. Ah, my soul, thou hast many unanswered prayers treasured in thy thought; and concerning some thou feelest unable to pray longer, take that as probably indicating God's gentle negative; but concerning such as thou feelest still able to offer, pray on, thy power to ask is the harbinger of the answer.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 23.—DEUTERONOMY IV.

Love and anxiety made those uneloquent lips talk to marvellous purpose! Summer thaws ice in the mouth of Arctic rivers See how often He repeats the phrase, take heed. We must be perpetually on the watch, keeping our soul diligently. Beyond doubt, Christ will keep that which we commit to Him, but we must keep the pact of loving friendship unbroken, not neglecting or grieving Him, or allowing our hearts to be enticed from his warm companionship. We must specially beware of idols. This is, perhaps, the last word of inspiration. An idol is any visible thing which takes the place of the unseen and eternal realities, veiling them from view. Let us beware of God's jealousy, but ask Him as a consuming fire to burn out our sins, so that He may have no reason to cast us finally away. And yet if these words should meet the eye of any who feel that they are among the scattered and vanished ones, let such remember that if, in these latter days and in this far country, they seek Him, He will be found of them, if they seek Him with all the heart and with all the soul, for He is merciful; He cannot forget the covenant. Let us teach these things more diligently to the children, after the old fashion; young hearts are soft to take impressions, but they soon become rock in their power to retain them.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 24.—DEUTERONOMY V.

Man needs a mediator. Conscious of the evil of his heart and life, he dares not face the All Holy. But there is a Mediator, a Daysman; not a servant, however noble and faithful, but the Son, who can lay a hand upon each. He has gone near, and has heard all that the Father has to say, and has spoken it to us; but, oh, how eagerly He yearns that there were such a heart in us that we would keep those commandments always, then indeed it would be well with us. We should live in the power of life eternal. We should possess the land of rest and plenty. We should prolong our days as the days of heaven upon earth. In his own words, He would come, with his Father, and take up his abode with us. But our Lord Jesus Christ does more than wish these good things for us. He sends his Holy Spirit to write his laws on our hearts, and to grave them on the inner tablets of our moral nature. Yea, He is prepared to cause us to walk in them, and do them. Let us open our inmost nature to his operation, that we may observe to do them, and not turn aside to the right hand or to the left. F. B. M.

MARSEILLES SAILORS' REST.—Mr. Chas. Faithfull's latest report abounds with interesting incidents, from which we cull the following:—"Accompanied an outgoing missionary to a French mail steamer, where I was well received. The coxswain was impressed by the gift of papers handed him for the crew. I had an interesting talk with one of the officers, who, hearing about the Rest, expressed the hope that a Home, distinctively for French, might ere long be opened at Marseilles, in addition to those now existing there for English, Americans, and Scandinavians."

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON SEPTEMBER 25.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

1 Cor. xi. 23, 34.

GOLDEN TEXT: VERSE 28.

IN the New Testament observance of the Lord's Supper there seems to have been an entire absence of that superstition which has since been associated with it. It is never called "a sacrament," never regarded as one of the conditions of salvation, or as needing to be administered by a so-called "ordained priest," never required to be received fasting, and never alluded to as in any sense a repetition of the offering of the body of Christ. These errors, commonly taught and believed to-day, are exceedingly dangerous. Teachers would do well to use this lesson as the occasion for warning against them.

The Lord's Supper appears to have been connected with the ordinary meal, so that it is often difficult to decide whether the term "breaking bread" refers to this ordinance or not. The evil into which the Corinthian Church fell was the very opposite of that which prevails to-day. They made it too much like a mere feast, in which the rich enjoyed their own repast, and left the poor to hunger (21). The words of the Apostle correct both errors.

23. Before Paul was converted the Church observed this ordinance, yet Paul received his authority for teaching it, not from the other apostles, but from the Lord Himself. When or how we cannot tell, yet we know he was favoured with "revelations" made to him as a chosen vessel (Gal. i. 12; 2 Cor. xii. 1). What he first received he delivered unto others. Our Lord only teaches us in order that others may be blessed through us. Is it not strange that the ordinance should be so frequently connected with the betrayal? Many other events transpired on that memorable night, yet it is this dark deed that comes before us whenever we partake of this ordinance. Why was this? Was it that his love might appear greater in contrast with such base and cruel ingratitude? Or, is it intended to warn all professing Christians of the danger of repeating in any form the sin of Judas?

24, 25. The two symbols used are bread and wine, so that every ordinary meal might become an ordinance if partaken in a right spirit. Christ is the life of our spirit as meat and drink are the life of the body. We must live upon Him. In both symbols it is the death of Christ that is made prominent. The bread was broken. The wine was outpoured. He only becomes our life by yielding Himself to die. Without his broken body and his shed blood we cannot be saved. (See Jno. xii. 24.) The incarnation and the beautiful life of Christ were in order to his death. The two ordinances left to his Church give special prominence to his death. Beware of any Gospel that gives the death of Christ a secondary place. The substitutionary character of his death is also set forth "for you" (24), see Luke xxii. 20. The sins of others deserved death: He gave Himself to die for them. To partake of this ordinance is therefore to confess our sin, and our desert of death, and our faith in the vicarious atonement of Jesus. Testament means Covenant, and refers to the Father's promise of remission of sins, and of all spiritual blessings. The cup, that is, the blood, is the sign and seal of the covenant, and reminds us of the price at which these blessings were secured for us. The object of the ordinance is twofold, first, a "remembrance" (24, 25), and then a proclamation (26). It keeps alive in believers the thought of their own sin and need, of the Saviour's love for them, and of the expression of that love in dying for them. And it proclaims to others the fact of the Lord's death, and reminds them of the claim which that death has upon their faith. Till He come—the ordinance is to be perpetual, and it is to look forward as well as backward. Memory and hope are both exercised at the table. And how the hope of his second coming is strengthened by these memorials, that assure us of the accurate fulfilment of all the predictions referring to his first coming.

27. It is possible to partake of this ordinance unworthily, as these Corinthians did, who came together for selfish indulgence, and not for remembering Christ. 28. Self-examination is necessary, not in order to find reason for satisfaction with ourselves. However deep your sense of sin and personal unworthiness, yet if you trust simply in Him whose death for sin is here set forth, you are partaking worthily. Ask Him to search you and to discover what is sinful in life or thought, in your relationship with others, and judge yourselves for these things (31, 32) by confession. You cannot be in true fellowship with the Lord while living at enmity with any of his people.

30. Sickness in some strange form, and even death, cutting off the offender from the fellowship of the church, was God's method of judging those who would not judge themselves.

Y.M.C.A. FOREIGN EXTENSION.

The steady growth of the Young Men's Christian Association, which has been most marked during the past year, both in Great Britain and Ireland, is about to be further developed and extended by the sending forth of two organising secretaries abroad.

The recent tour round the world on behalf of and in connection with the Y.M.C.A., undertaken by Mr. W. Hind Smith, impressed him with the necessity of this step being taken. Accordingly, Mr. Robert McCann, late travelling secretary for Ireland, and Mr. George Holmes, late secretary of the Norwich Y.M.C.A., and formerly of Gibraltar, have been appointed to this important work. The former goes to the Bombay Presidency, and the latter to Egypt and Palestine. They sail (D.V.) on Oct 6, but before sailing, and in order to stir up a deeper interest in foreign mission work, and especially of that among young men, farewell meetings have been arranged by the Y.M.C.A. National Council.

Large and encouraging meetings have been held at Plymouth and district, also at Oxford and Birmingham, and other meetings have been fixed during the present month, concluding with a final gathering at Exeter Hall on October 3. It is earnestly hoped that the result of these farewell meetings will be that the young men belonging to the associations visited will respond to the appeals made to them in themselves supporting this special work among their fellow young men in the countries named.

Mr. Holmes hopes to break his journey at Gibraltar, where for eight years he has laboured among young men, and endeavour to organise a branch of the Association among the English-speaking residents, and also at Malta. The call from India is clear and unmistakable. The work in the Bombay Presidency is most encouraging, and among the 30,000,000 young men of India the need is great and pressing. The meetings at Plymouth and district, also at Oxford and Birmingham, have been most hearty and enthusiastic, and it is hoped that not only will financial response be made, but also that some will be found willing to offer themselves for the extension of the kingdom of the Lord Jesus in the regions beyond.

THE BLIND OF CHINA.

The important work being opened up by Rev. W. H. Murray among the blind in China has gained many friends and helpers through Miss Gordon-Cumming's touching little book, entitled "Work for the Blind in China" (Gilbert and Rivington, St. John's House, E.C. Price 6d.). This the authoress has now re-issued, with additions, bringing the information as to Chinese blind, the reading suited for them, and the efforts being made on their behalf, up to date.

Part II. contains deeply interesting accounts and incidents in connection with the schools in Pekin for the teaching of the blind. These schools aim not at the multiplication of blind readers, but at the thorough moral and practical training of those who may afterwards do valuable Christian service as preachers, Scripture-readers, and, it may be, organists, all over the Chinese empire.

"Three months ago," says one of these, "I came, though believing it to be impossible for a blind man to learn to read and write. Now, praise God for his wonders to me, I can read and write anything, and instead of having to remember all as a burden on my memory, I have several books which I have written out myself. But my countrymen are all heathen, and I must go and show them what the Lord has done for me, and preach his blessed Gospel to them." This blind man is now reading by his fingers to wondering crowds in the Manchurian Mountains. His converts are this year reckoned at over 300, of whom more than half have been already admitted to baptism.

REV. T. T. MATTHEWS.—An interesting meeting was held lately in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Aberdeen, for the purpose of bidding farewell to Rev. T. T. Matthews on the eve of his return to Madagascar, where he has already done good work. Mr. William Henderson, of Devanha, who presided, spoke of the remarkable success attending Mr. Matthews' work since twenty-three years ago he was appointed to Madagascar. Nor less valuable had been the way in which he had been instrumental in awakening missionary interest while at home on furlough.

KENSAL TOWN.—The Y.M. Christian Institute, carried on at 9, Tottenham-street, Kensal-road, W., has been fruitful of good to not a few who enjoy the advantages of a comfortable evening home, bright and sympathetic companionships, seasonable and varied recreation, and opportunities for self-improvement. It is a good work, and the hon. sec., Mr. T. C. Newman, is anxious to find means for largely extending it this coming winter, by special efforts to reach some of the lower class of lads in the district.

MISSIONS TO IRISH ROMANISTS.

Accounts from the field occupied by the Society for Irish Church Missions to Roman Catholics show that there is a very general movement towards light and liberty on the part of the Roman Catholic population in many parts of Ireland; that the Bible is being read as it never was before in the history of the past; and that numbers have ceased to believe in Rome's doctrines, though still unable to break loose from her communion.

One of the most encouraging successes of the past year has been the friendly reception given to the itinerant missionaries of the society, as in one market place after another they have, with few exceptions, been permitted to preach freely the Gospel Message of salvation to thousands of Roman Catholics. The friendliness of their reception was quite as marked on the second visitation of the same places as on the first occasion; and the spirit of inquiry and eagerness to purchase copies of the Word of God has been most encouraging, Notwithstanding the constant tide of emigration from the West, the numbers attending the services are maintained at about the usual strength. The son of one of the Scripture readers who has lately returned from America to his home in the west of Ireland has handed to the missionary of his district the names of seventy-five converts whom he had met in Brooklyn, New York, attending the churches there. All had gone out from Connemara districts within six years; and there must be many more scattered throughout the United States and Canada. The London office of these Missions is 11, Buckingham-street, W.C.

RUSSIAN REFUGEES IN PARIS.

Mr. S. Feingold, of the Paris Mission to the Jews, writes:—The ruthless Russian expulsions and Baron Hirsch's unsuccessful scheme in the Argentine Republic, which forces hundreds of Israelites back in a worse condition than ever, have augmented the affliction in the Parisian Jewry. Jeremiah's Book of Lamentations only can depict their tremendous sufferings and deprivations. Now this is the acceptable moment to evangelise these poverty-stricken, despised children of Abraham. Our Mission Hall is full of these fugitives. True, some of them come merely for the loaves and fishes, but does not God use such means as an instrument to bring them to Himself? Their stubborn pride is thereby subdued, and they are impelled by Providence to give ear to the claims of the glorious Gospel of the Crucified One.

Seeing the refugees' deplorable distress, we have started in the name of our blessed Lord and Saviour a free breakfast and shelter. We thank God for a few gleanings in Israel's vineyard. Just recently a Jewish widow and her two children were brought to a saving knowledge of the truth which is in Jesus. Also an Oriental Jew, whose acquaintance we made at the "Exposition Universelle," 1889, has boldly avowed his allegiance to the King Messiah—Jesus of Nazareth. He informed us of his new birth in the following words: "Some time ago, when my circumstances were not of a favourable character, I withheld the fact from you, lest you might think I had some material motive in my profession; but now when Jehovah has most graciously increased my borders, and I am flourishing in this world's goods, I hasten to tell you that I am a sincere follower of our risen Redeemer, and I am so happy." The Lord our God has indeed blessed and sealed our work for Him, and to Him alone we ascribe all praise. Communications may be addressed to Miss Margaret A. Palmer, 33, rue de la Verrerie, Paris.

British Society for the Jews.

Rev. Dr. J. Hiles Hitchens, president of this Society, writes:—This is the Jubilee year of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, and we are supremely anxious to mark the event by raising a fund of not less than £5,000 for the work of the Society. We want to double our missionary staff, to increase our medical missionaries, to supply new mission premises for the East of London, to augment our funds for the relief of disabled workers, and do very much beside.

The British Society was founded by such men as the sainted Robert McCheyne, Andrew A. Bonar, and Ridley Herschell. It has had a successful history, and at the present time is doing a noble work. A friend of the society, who describes himself as "A Poor Man," but who has subscribed to our society for twenty-seven years past, has kindly offered to give the last £100 when the amount of the Jubilee Fund reaches £4,900. Help will be gratefully received by the secretary, Rev. J. Dunlop, at the offices of the Society, 96, Great Russell-street, W.C.

RECLAIMED BOYS IN THE FOREST.

As to the preventive work of the St. Giles's Christian Mission on behalf of tempted boys committed on a first offence, noticed in our last issue, the mother of one rescued boy writes:—It was a happy thought that of Mr. Wheatley, of St. Giles's Christian Mission, to give the boys of his homes, nearly 150 in number, a day's outing in Epping Forest, but it was entirely reversing the order of things that the very horses ordinarily used in the sombre duty of conveying such offenders to and from prison were secured for the treat. There being no sessions on that day, Mr. Wheatley, with ever fertile and kindly thought, chartered these for the use of the boys in whom he has such deep interest. It was a good sight to see their bright, happy, and, in many instances, intelligent faces, and it must have been gratifying to their friend and helper and his staff of matrons in the highest degree.

The writer of this (who gratefully testifies to great benefits for a beloved, but erring, son, received through St. Giles's Christian Mission) felt it a very touching sight. These poor lads, snatched from temptation and evil ways, are handed over by the magistrate to Mr. Wheatley's care. Some of these lads had, perhaps, never seen God's handiwork in the country. To them a clear expanse of sky, majestic trees, green fields, a flowing rivulet, and all the natural beauties of the country will be a sweet memory, a beautiful wordless poem, which by God's blessing may inspire thoughts of hope and aid towards a future that, under reclaiming influence, may still be pure and true.

The thanks of many a poor mother are due to all concerned in the good work of the St. Giles's Christian Mission. May this happy thought of chartering the horses for this good purpose—on a day when there are "no sessions"—remain a precedent for future years.

THE PIONEER MISSION.

The church under the ministry of Pastor Henry Cordon having vacated Sharon Hall, Kirkdale, Liverpool, for new temporary premises at Stanley Park, the place has been secured for mission purposes by the Pioneer Mission. The reopening of the premises as the Central Hall of the Mission took place on Wednesday, August 31, when Alderman R. Cory, J.P., who has taken an important and active part in securing the Sharon Hall premises, presided, and Pastors E. A. Carter and Geo. Goodchild explained the nature of the work which would be earnestly and zealously carried on at the Hall. Other addresses on aggressive soul-winning work were given by Pastors H. Cordon, S. Jones, C. Green, Thos. Whittle, and Mr. R. Heber Ratcliffe. The Hall is situated in the centre of a dense population, and special efforts will be made to draw in the great crowds that daily pass the doors of the Hall.

Pastors G. Goodchild and T. Whittle are to be actively engaged in evangelising this thronging centre, the former as preacher and the latter as pastoral visitor. A Bible woman also is engaged to go from house to house with the message of Jesus's love, in the latter case Mr. Cory defraying the whole of the expense. The hall, too, is to be the centre of the Pioneer Mission, branches of which are vigorously working at Douglas, Isle of Man, where the Lord has given much success, so that a new chapel is the immediate contemplation of the people; also at New Brighton, Cheshire, where a permanent chapel will speedily, it is hoped, be commenced. At Waterloo the Lord is also giving blessing, while at Farnworth a new chapel is contemplated, and at Withington, Manchester, a Pioneer student has recently settled amid cheering signs. Likewise at Christ Church, Hants, many souls are being saved, and the glad signs of revival are many. Under the ministry of Pastor H. Cordon a soul-winning work has been carried on at Sharon Hall, Liverpool.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.—The monthly muster of the Christian Harbour Lights, preceded by an open-air meeting outside the Sailors' Home, was held in the Temporary Seamen's Chapel, Well-street, Ratcliff Highway, presided over by Admiral Grant, C.B. In the course of an earnest address he pointed out that all had sinned, that sailors ought by reason of their calling to be prepared for death, and begged of them to accept the salvation which the Saviour had provided for them. He prayed that the presence of the Lord might be manifested that night, and that all who were not on the Lord's side might before leaving find peace and joy in Him. Miss Jackson, sailors' missionary at Dunkerque, described that town as the most awful place for drink she was ever in, and urged the need of a sailors' home there as a refuge from the temptations which abounded on every hand. Miss Messer having spoken, a number of testimonies from converted seamen were given, and several pledges taken.

Obituary.

REV. DR. S. TURPIN.

MUCH regret is felt in the South of Ireland at the deaths of Rev. Sydney Turpin, M.A., D.D., M.Ch., M.D., at his residence, Younggrove, Middleton, co. Cork, at the early age of forty-one years. Dr. Turpin was brother-in-law of Rev. H. Kingsmill-Moore, of Dublin, and of Rev. Dr. Lunn, of London; he was an able preacher, and a medical man of large attaiments.

MR. HENRY BALDWIN BEAMISH.

Mr. Henry Baldwin Beamish, of Muckross House, co. Cork, has died in his 95th year. Deceased was the oldest graduate of the University of Dublin, having taken his degree seventy-two years ago. He took a great interest in the Jews, and earnestly looked for the Second Coming of Christ. Some years ago he published a treatise on the prophecies of Daniel. He took a great interest in talking to his neighbours on spiritual subjects in the Irish tongue, which he could speak as well as English.

MISS GERTRUDE A. SHIPLEY.

The oldest daughter of Mr. G. D. Shipley, of Highfields, Royston, Cambs., has entered into rest, aged twenty-five years. She had been the companion and helper of her father in his village mission work since her school days, and was preparing for Western China, to be the wife of Rev. W. M. Upcraft, now residing at Schzuan.

A sudden and startling illness rendered a surgical operation necessary; this proving unsuccessful, she sank peacefully to rest on Lord's Day, September 4. She was removed from London, and buried at the village of Sherfield, Herts, followed by a large company of sorrowing friends from the surrounding district. This announcement will cause much grief in many parts of the country to those who knew her in her Christian service.

DR. SANDRECZKI.

We regret to hear that Dr. K. Sandreczki, whose name was for many years associated with mission work in Palestine, died recently at Passau, in Bavaria, aged 83. A native of Munich, he was early trained in the law. While occupying a judicial post, he entered into the light and liberty of the Gospel, through reading the Holy Scriptures, of which, sad to say, he had as a youth, been brought up in ignorance as a Roman Catholic.

Associating himself with the Church Missionary Society, Dr. Sandreczki undertook important travels in the East, and in 1852 settled in Jerusalem as secretary of the mission which had a short time previously been established by Bishop Gobart. He returned to Germany in 1871.

A correspondent of The Record says:—"Much of his time was taken up with literary work, and it is much to be regretted that his Arabic Dictionary remains unfinished; but the chief object of his life was to proclaim Christ to his fellow-men, and from this he was not to be deterred by anything—weather, hardships, scorn, or ridicule. He preached Christ as unreservedly to pashas, beys, great ecclesiastical dignitaries of various Churches, and European savants, as to Kurds, Jacobites, Syrians, and Bedouins, and in doing this his great linguistic knowledge proved most useful. To this day many of his former pupils at Syra and at Jerusalem mourn for him, and in the Holy Land there are many Christians, Mahommedans, and even Jews who remember him with gratitude; and many a Bible that he gave to those who visited him in the quiet of his own house, or in the very centre of the Moslem quarter, is still read."

REV. ARCHIBALD W. MURRAY.

This veteran missionary, who laboured for so many years in the South Seas, lately passed away at Petersham, New South Wales, in his eighty-first year. Mr. Murray, a native of Roxburghshire, was one of a large number who were deeply stirred in their hearts by the rousing appeals made by the martyred John Williams during his visit to England in 1834-5, to plead the cause of the unevangelised peoples of the scattered islands in the Southern Pacific. Mr. Murray entered upon his missionary career early in 1836, and with two or three short intervals, continued his labours with unwearying devotion and earnestness for about forty years. During the greater part of this period—up to 1870—his efforts were mostly confined to the Samoan group, in which he resided, though he also did much valuable work in opening up new ground in the New Hebrides, Loyalty Islands, New Caledonia, and other places. For two years after leaving Samoa, Mr. Murray was stationed at Lifu, in the Loyalty Islands; he had, too, a large share in the pioneer work of the New Guinea mission, which he superintended for two years, retiring in 1874. During several intervals when Mr. Murray was absent from the islands, and after his retirement from active missionary work, he ministered with much acceptance in several churches in Australian colonies, where also he did much to further the cause of evangelising the heathen which lay so near his heart, and to which he so heartily devoted the best part of his life. The several books that he published are remarkably refreshing narratives of hard and faithful toil, which has been richly rewarded and blessed. His "Forty Years' Mission Work in Polynesia and New Guinea," is an exceedingly interesting autobiography.

Evangelistic Notes.

The Isle of Man.—Special services have been held at Laxey, with many tokens for good.

Mr. E. P. Telford has been conducting a special Mission at Hoyland, near Barnsley, with good results.

Ireland.—A successful Gospel mission has been held at Corvery, near Enniskillen, in a tent, by Rev. Henry Ball and Mr. R. Kerr.

Mr. Oscar Owers is ministering all this month to the Bethesda Church, Sunderland, in the absence (in Switzerland) of the pastor, Rev. F. E. Marsh.

Mansfield.—Rev. Thomas Waugh has been preaching the Gospel here to large congregations. Many, it is believed, have been aroused to a sense of their danger and compelled to flee to Christ.

Scarborough.—During the past five weeks Mr. W. H. Archer, of Barnsley, has been holding Gospel services on the sands at Scarborough. Various Christian visitors have taken part, and it is believed real blessing has been granted.

Slamannan.—Mr. S. McKenzie, of Campbeltown, has conducted a series of Gospel meetings in the Free Church here. In spite of stormy weather, the meetings were largely attended, and many have been brought to the light of the Gospel.

Mr. William Forbes held open-air services last week at the Temperance Fête at the Crystal Palace. Quite a number of helpers gathered round, and the Gospel was earnestly and faithfully preached. On Sunday next, 18th, he will begin a mission at Callander.

Teignmouth, South Devon.—Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has been conducting evangelistic services in various Nonconformist churches in this town, and speaking to large congregations on the Den Sunday Evenings after places of worship had closed. The visit of this earnest servant of God has been much blessed.

Mr. James Sprunt will conduct special services at the following places:—The Gospel Hall, New Brompton, September 18 to 21; the Gospel Hall, King-street, Gloucester, October 2 to 7; Alworth, Wilts, October 9 to 23; Corsham Side, Wilts, October 24 to November 6.

SCRIPTURE EXAMINATIONS.—An association has recently been formed with the object of promoting the study of Religious knowledge in our upper and middle class schools and colleges on its proper lines as an essential subject of the school course; testing the progress of the pupils by periodical examinations in set portions of the Scriptures. For the first half-yearly examination, recently held, there were over a thousand candidates, and more than 150 schools in all parts of the country have been enrolled in the association. The honorary director and founder of the movement is Rev. Dr. Bonavia Hunt, of St. Paul's, Kilburn, N.W. (well known as the originator of the Trinity College Examinations in Music, and for twenty years warden of that college), and he appeals to all who have the cause of religious education at heart to lend him their co-operation and local support. Those interested in the matter are invited to communicate with the secretary, Mr. A. P. Hollingdale, St. Paul's Parsonage, Woodchurch-road, West Hampstead, N.W.

SHALL CARDS BE ADMITTED?—The Kentish Town Guild has for some years been doing an active work among the humbler classes. In connection with the guild there are five clubs, and recently the members of the men's branch have been agitating for sanction to add card-playing to the recreative features of the institute. The proposal has created a flutter of excitement amongst those belonging to the guild, and has been carefully discussed by a committee consisting of three members of each of the five clubs, and at a general conference convened for next month the advocates of the popular pastime intend to submit a proposition that they be accorded permission to play whist and cribbage one evening a week, from 8 to 10.30, "on condition that each member beforehand shall have signed a promise that no money or its equivalent shall, either directly or indirectly, on or off the premises, be staked on any game." It will be felt by many that, however carefully guarded, this is a very dangerous departure. It were safer to avoid the risk of creating a love for gambling.

Personalia.

Mrs. Archibald G. Brown is still, we regret to hear, very ill.

Rev. S. Pearson, of Broughton-park Church, Manchester, has, we hear, recovered from his recent illness, and proposes to resume his duties on Sunday.

Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, having taken a brief rest, hopes to be able to continue occupying the pulpit at the Metropolitan Tabernacle till the end of October.

Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D., it is now fully hoped, has resolved to accept the invitation from the church at the Tabernacle. He intimates that the difficulties in the way are being removed.

Mr. W. P. Lockhart, whose labours have been so much blessed at Liverpool, has, we rejoice to hear, recovered from his recent illness sufficiently to resume his pastoral service in Toxteth Tabernacle.

Sister Florence (daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lamb, of Dulwich), who has been so successful as a sister in the Birmingham mission, sailed for India on Friday, going out in the company of Rev. G. W. Olver and Miss Olver, who are commissioned by the Missionary Committee to visit the Wesleyan Methodist Missions in India, Burmah, and Ceylon.

Rev. Thomas Connellan preached in the Free Church, Oban, on Sunday week, to crowded audiences. On the following evening he told the story of his conversion from Romanism and his evangelistic work in Ireland. The chair was occupied by Mr. A. L. Bruce, son-in-law of David Livingstone.

Rev. Thomas Smithson, minister in charge of Christ Church, Kensington (formerly Rector of St. Nicholas, Leeds, and Government chaplain at Mauritius), has, in consequence of the Lincoln judgment, resigned his position as a clergyman of the Church of England.

Rev. Charles Stirling, vicar of New Malden, has severed his connection with the Church of England for the same reason. Mr. Stirling has been vicar of New Malden for a quarter of a century, and is a prominent member of the Church Association.

Professor Blaikie, Moderator of the Free Church General Assembly, sailed last week from Liverpool for the Pan-Presbyterian Council at Toronto. The opening address, which he will deliver there on the 21st, will be the last public act of his fifty years' ministry, he having been ordained on September 22, 1842.

Mr. Geo. R. Cairns, of America, who has resumed work in this country, began a mission at Stalybridge on Sunday last in connection with the evangelistic efforts carried on by Mrs. E. M. Dickens-Knott. His engagements for the future are in Manchester, Nottingham, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and Ashton-under-Lyne.

Revs. W. H. Stapleton and R. Glennie have just arrived from the Upper Congo River for their first furlough. It is satisfactory to know that the entire area in which the stations of the Missionary Society are established remains unaffected by the Arab disturbances. The nearest point to which the trouble has reached is the Lomami river, on which the recent massacre of M. Hodister and his seven companions is reported to have taken place.

Rev. W. M. Taylor, D.D.—Many will be thankful to learn that this honoured minister, who had a shock of paralysis some time ago, is improving in health. Dr. Buckley, of the Christian Advocate, says:—"We had the pleasure of a long interview with the doctor, on Sunday afternoon, at the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. Maitland, of Oceanic, N.J., and have the pleasure to state that his improvement since we last saw him has been extraordinary."

Rev. W. Hay Aitken's proposed missions among English residents in India has been understood by some of his friends as referring to the cold season just commencing. Correcting this impression, Mr. Aitken writes to us: "The proposed mission at Madras has been postponed to next year—the autumn of 1893—and my participation in it must depend upon circumstances; largely on the number and character of the openings that may lie before me."

Mr. C. Boardman, of Stratford, E., known far and wide as a devoted Christian worker, has, we regret to say, been very unwell of late. He has been ordered complete rest for a time, and this has involved retirement from some of the posts of action and responsibility which he has filled to his own joy and the blessing of others, as well as to the glory of God. In many homes, as well as in public efforts, especially in connection with the Conference Hall, his familar form and encouraging utterances are greatly missed at the present time.

WHEN thou hast thanked thy God
For every blessing sent,
What time will then remain
For murmurs or lament?—Trench.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. F. R. A. Hoare has been appointed by the Simeon Trustees to the vicarage of Castle Gresley, Derbyshire.

The late Mr. G. Wright, of Bessingby Hall, has left the sum of £3,000 for the restoration of the little church of Bessingby, of which Rev. H. Woffindin is Vicar.

A Choir festival was held last week in the parish church, Axbridge. Bishop Bromby, late Bishop of Tasmania, preached upon the text "Praise God in his Sanctuary"

Evangelical Christendom, the organ of the Evangelical Alliance, says of the Lincoln judgment that "it must be regarded as a serious blow to the Protestantism of the Church of England."

Some time ago the Bishop of Ripon received a letter from the Hon. Frances Butler offering to build a new church in Bradford. Miss Butler has since then assigned for this purpose the sum of £12,000.

Rev. G. H. and Mrs. Händler, late of Vienna, have arrived in England. Mr. Händler has been placed on the retired list of missionaries, having given thirty-three years of devoted service to the London Jews Society.

The Bishop of Guildford, we are glad to hear, is going on well. His fracture, however, proves to have been such a serious one that he cannot hope to begin work again for some months. If he takes the rest enjoined by the doctor a perfect cure is confidently anticipated.

The News, in discussing the present position of the Church, asks "What can be done?" and suggests that New Testament Church organisation is needed, and that efforts should be made to confirm those who are wavering in the simplicity of Gospel truth, and to win back those who have wandered towards Rome.

A touching ordination was recently held in Grace Church, San Francisco, when William Ingraham Kip, the grandson of the aged Bishop of California, was admitted to the order of deacon by his grandfather. Being too weak to occupy his place in the chancel during the entire service, Bishop Kip was assisted to his seat just before the ordination, and had to be removed immediately after the imposition of hands.

The constant growth of the population has necessitated the acquisition of a site for a new Mission building at the eastern end of the parish of St. Jude's, Kensal Green. A small iron church called St. Simon's has been erected upon it, and was opened on September 1. There are now besides the church three buildings in which Sunday Services are held. "This is the only way," says a correspondent, "in which the Vicar of so large a parish can cope with the necessities of the vast population under his charge."

The English Churchman, dealing with "The Position of the Church of England," with especial reference to the Lincoln judgment, discountenances secession, reminds the seceders that they will become Dissenters, and is no advocate of Disestablishment. But in answer to the question "What is to be done?" our contemporary says:—"This is a layman's question, and the laity must bestir themselves. They have been far too apathetic. They have grumbled in private long enough. Let them come forward, and, in the face of day, assert their rights."

St. Luke's, Camberwell (of which Rev. H. B. Chapman is vicar), is about to become the home of a novel brotherhood, whose object is "mutual help" in times of poverty or affliction. Its members include skilled artisans and efficient labourers, who frequently suffer from inability to find employment, and in connection with the brotherhood there are a labour bureau and a firewood business. When other employment cannot be obtained the out-of-work brother will resort to wood-chopping, his labour being paid for at trades union prices. The firewood is sold at the ordinary rates. In time, perhaps, the brotherhood will be able to undertake other kinds of labour, and even provide occupation for its skilled brothers at their own trades. Meanwhile, "believing that all true men prefer earning their daily bread to receiving it in the shape of relief or alms," a start at the wood-chopping has been made.—Daily Telegraph.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Mr. F. Tavender, B.A., of Wiveliscombe, Somerset, has accepted the pastorate at Great Marlow, Bucks.

The autumnal meetings of the Congregational Union will be held in Bradford during the second week of October.

A new cause has been opened at Littleworth, near Spalding, service being conducted on Sundays in farm buildings granted for the purpose.

The treasurer of the American Home Missionary Society reports that he has received £8,600 during the year from Congregational Christian Endeavour Societies.

Rev. Henry Wright has entered on the pastorate of Queen's-park Church, Glasgow. Sermons were preached to crowded congregations by Dr. Glover, of Bristol.

Rev. H. J. Weatherhead, of Bromley-by-Bow, is lying ill with blood-poisoning. His condition has been causing anxiety to his friends, but the doctors report a slight change for the better.

A new church is being erected at Kirdford (Sussex) for the congregation hitherto meeting in a tent. The new building, which will seat 150 persons, is—together with the site—the gift of a friend whose name has not yet transpired.

Rev. William Mottram, who has been laid aside for some time through ill-health, is now, by medical advice, cruising in the Norwegian fjords, and hopes to return shortly to resume his work at Borough-road Church and at the Lambeth Baths.

The Avenue House and grounds at Southampton have been purchased for the purpose of establishing a new church there. The iron building used for many years as St. John's Free Church has, it is said, been acquired, and will be re-erected on the grounds.

Preaching on Sunday week in Dundee, Dr. R. C. Anderson, of Bradford, said that he did not believe that a church was a mere lectureship. People united in Christian love to extend the kingdom of Christ in their immediate neighbourhood, was the true idea of a church.

Rev. W. J. Humberstone announced on Sunday week his resignation of the pastorate at Richmond, Yorks, Mrs. Humberstone being unable to stand the northern winter. The announcement has created widespread regret, as the pastor has taken a leading part in the religious life of the town.

The National Council of the Congregational Churches of America holds its regular triennial meeting at Minneapolis, October 12 to 18. In the programme some subjects of interest are, "Union with Free Baptists and Others," "Christian Unity," "Christian Care of Prisoners," "Improvement of Public Worship," and "Revision of Form of Admission to the Church."

BAPTIST.

Zoar Church, Ipswich, reports the addition of fifteen members during the year.

A new church at Yalding has been opened with sermons by Rev. S. H. Booth, D.D. The church will seat 300 persons.

The Centenary Thanksgiving Fund is announced to have reached £86,431. The contributions raised in India exceed 10,000 rupees.

Windmill-street Church, Gravesend (Rev. F. Tuck), reports the addition of thirty-one members during the year, including six from the Sunday-school.

An open-air baptismal service was conducted at North Bradley on Sunday week, six candidates being immersed by Rev. J. Huntley.

For some time a mission has been conducted at Cowley, near Dronfield. It has now been decided to erect a church to seat 100 persons. A site has been obtained.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith have conducted a special mission at Ipswich, where interesting services have been held at Burlington Chapel during the past week.

A new church has been formed at Derby with eight members. A building to cost about £600 is contemplated; services have hitherto been held in a small room.

The first church in connection with the Baptist Missionary Society in the province of Shensi, North China, has just been formed. Revs. A. G. Shorrock and Moir Duncan are the two missionaries who have entered this part of China.

The American Baptist Missionary Union are very considerably strengthening their staff in Telegu. It is expected that a large party of new missionaries en route to India will arrive in this country in about three weeks, in time for the centenary celebration.

Fresh tidings have been received of the continued prosperity of the churches in the Cameroon district, which have lately assumed their independency. In May a baptism took place of some seventy persons, followed a month afterwards by a further addition to membership of about sixty converts.

Rev. C. Williams, of Accrington, maintains that there is a great deal of useless work among religious bodies. He urges the desirability of some mutual arrangements, by which every house should be allotted to some church, and each church should be held responsible for looking after that part of the town assigned to it.

Abbey-road Chapel, St. John's Wood, was crowded with young men and others on Sunday night to hear from the pastor, Rev. H. E. Stone, a timely word of warning respecting spiritualism, and its latest development in Theosophy. The preacher showed by numerous quotations from Scripture that the Bible recognises and denounces the things which are reproduced in that modern intercourse with demons, so cunningly suited to men's cravings for knowledge other than that which is God-honouring and soul-strengthening.

A very successful year's work has just been completed at the Union Chapel, Aldeburgh-on-Sea, by the students of the Regent's Park College, in connection with their Preaching Station Society. Though at a very low ebb when the students began their ministry a year ago, the cause has revived, and is growing in numbers. The congregations have steadily improved, and the financial position is brighter. There is a nett increase in the membership of nineteen. In commemoration of the anniversary an enthusiastic meeting was held on Tuesday (6th), at which Rev. T. M. Morris, vice-president of the Baptist Union, presided, and the following ministers of several denominations spoke: Revs. J. G. Brown, R. D. Cooper, R. G. Pollard, C. E. Wilson, R. A. Elvey, and L. C. Parkinson, B.A. The occasion was specially marked as the farewell of Mr. C. E. Wilson, who has been the "student-pastor" during the past year, and the welcome of Mr. L. C. Parkinson.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The church at Cleator Moor is about to be enlarged.

The Church in Japan has in it six Presbyteries, seventy-three churches, and a membership of 10,908.

A decrease of £471 is reported on the Sustentation Fund for the past three months, as compared with the corresponding period last year.

Special services were held in St. John's Church, Montrose, on Sunday week, the preacher being Rev. A. Martin, M.A., of Morningside Church, Edinburgh.

A new order called St. John the Baptist, and said to aim at the promotion of sound faith, loyalty, and gentleness in the various relations of social life, and temperance and purity in the individual, has been inaugurated in Glasgow.

Dr. McEwan has been making a tour through Canada and the United States before proceeding to the meeting of the Presbyterian Alliance at Toronto. He has visited Quebec, Montreal, and Ottawa, and also spent some days in Boston, having preached, at the request of friends, at Montreal and Spring Valley, New York.

The United Presbyterian Mission of the United States in Egypt is having remarkable success among the Copts. At Assiout the Copts themselves have held nightly meetings for over three years in their cathedral church. They have abolished the confessional, and have removed the pictures of the Virgin and the saints. Three Coptic young men have been placed by their parents in the training college of the United Presbyterian Mission, with the avowed purpose of preparing them for service in the old church.

METHODIST.

New mission chapels at Forest Gate and Fulham will cost £6,000.

A new mission hall is being built by the Wesleyans at Macclesfield.

A new mission has been started by Primitive Methodists in South Shields.

The additional sums promised to the Primitive Methodist Jubilee fund last week reached £100.

A large hall, capable of seating upwards of 500 persons, has been opened for public worship at Maindee.

The West Midland Primitive Methodists have decided to employ a number of evangelists during this autumn and winter.

Encouraging Evangelistic services have been conducted in Askam Primitive Methodist Church by Messrs. Oliver, Wearing, and Nicholson.

A new chapel has been opened at Ruabon, Rev. T. Guttery preaching and lecturing to crowded audiences. The society here has for many years been struggling for want of a better place of worship.

Mrs. Argent, the mother of the Joyful News evangelist who lost his life in the disturbances at Wusueh, China, has given the amount received from the Chinese Government as compensation, £925, for evangelistic work in China.

During the past three years excellent progress has been made in evangelistic and all kinds of social work at Deptford under the fostering care of Rev. T. Lionel Walton, who now engages in special evangelistic work in connection with the Bermondsey Methodist Settlement.

Rev. George P. Clarke is making splendid headway at Bradford with the new Central Hall, which is to be worked on the same lines as the Wesleyan Central Hall at Manchester. The financial success of the movement is already secured, and the opening services are expected to take place in a few weeks.

It is announced that an interesting discovery has been made in the cellars of the Methodist Book-room in London. No fewer than fifteen volumes of manuscript have been found there, the most of it consisting of poems and hymns written by that sweet singer of Methodism, Charles Wesley. One volume contains some compositions by Samuel Wesley, It is believed the manuscripts form a portion of the mass of documents purchased by the Rev. Thomas Jackson, who died some years ago, The documents are to be thoroughly examined, and it is possible some compositions may be found that have not hitherto seen the light accorded by print.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

After the "General Meeting" in Scotland last month, a number of Friends held meetings in various parts, and appear to have been cordially welcomed by the people.

At the "Meeting for Sufferings" on Friday last a most cheering and hopeful report was given of the Peace Congress recently held at Berne. The principle of International Arbitration seems to be developing and spreading in Eastern Europe, and America is taking the lead in the great peace movement. The Friends' Church was well represented.

On Tuesday, 30th ult., a deeply solemn and interesting farewell meeting was held at Hart's-lane, Bethnal Green, on the departure of Isaac Mason and M. Cumber for China. Friends were present from America, Madagascar, Brumana, and India. Henry Stanley Newman was in the chair, and Mr. Turner, of C.I.M., among others, took part. Two days later a large number of friends saw them off on their long journey, to join the missionaries at Chung King.

SALVATION ARMY.

Self Denial week commences September 25.

A Maori farm colony for the benefit of the New Zealand aborigines has just been started.

Colonel Nicol, who accompanied the General on his Australian and other tours, has been appointed to the editorship of The War Cry and other serials

Major Clibborn, who has been on a tour of inspection in South Africa for the site of the over-sea colony in connection with the Darkest England scheme, reached Plymouth on Friday morning last.

After being turned out of two buildings hired as barracks, the Salvation Army corps at Halstead has at length found a friend in Mrs. Raven, who has purchased a plot of land on which she is having erected a suitable barracks and officials' residences.

General Booth held a very successful meeting with the soldiers of the Middlesbrough and neighbouring corps on Saturday. On the following day he conducted three enthusiastic meetings at the Town Hall. Meetings of like character were also held by the General at South Shields and Darlington.

Commissioner Howard held services all day on Sunday at the Albert Hall, preparatory to the stone-laying of the new Salvation Army buildings, at which the chief part was taken by Mr. Bramwell Booth, the chief of staff.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A new Protestant Industrial school, built in Elizabethan style to accommodate fifty girls has just been opened at Bray, by Lord Plunket, Archbishop of Dublin.

The first Episcopal Church Congress held in Ireland met in Armagh last week, and was largely attended. Such subjects as "The Ancient Irish Church" were discussed.

Rev. Wm. Newman Hall, nephew of Dr. Newman Hall, of London, has accepted the pastoral charge of the Congregational Church, Sligo, and entered on his work in that town last Sunday.

The Belfast Female Mission, which is doing an excellent work, now employs nine Bible women, who visited during the past month 978 families, including 165 sick, and held fifty prayer meetings.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Torrington, Rev. J. M. Nisbet, canon of Norwich, and very well known as rector of St. Giles'-in-the-Fields.—At Aston, Mrs. E. A. Knox, wife of the vicar of Aston-by-Birmingham, and daughter of the late Bishop of Lahore.—At Aldershot, on 8th inst., suddenly, in the street, Rev. J. Houson, a well-known and respected clergyman.—At Woodbridge, on 5th inst., Rev. W. Amer, aged forty-two, a useful Congregational pastor.—At Ashford, Mr. Edgar Smith, a devoted young worker.—At Bourn East Gate, suddenly, at his residence, Mr. Seth Brown, a preacher of the Gospel for half a century.—At Maestig, on 2nd inst., Rev. D. G. Davies, pastor of Suron Church.—At Ripley, on 3rd inst., Rev. J. Hurd, aged eighty-four, a useful Methodist minister.—At Mansfield, on 2nd inst., Mr. Luke Weatherhead, well known as a very active and earnest Christian worker.—At Gwersyllt, Mr. T. Williams, a faithful local preacher.—Suddenly in Canal-street Chapel, Stalybridge, on 4th inst., Mrs. Whitely.—At Newbury, Annie Louisa, eldest daughter of Rev. W. S. Bestall.—At Dunstable, after a severe illness, Mr. C. Lockhart, J.P., a helper of many.—At Belfast, Rev. Wm. Rossborough, Presbyterian minister at Rathfriland, co. Down, for twenty years, and then at Glasgow for several years more, in the 79th year of his age, an able, earnest, godly man.—At Dublin, Mr. Saml. Irwin, aged 60 years, for nearly forty years a devoted godly elder in Rutland-square Presbyterian Church.—At West Norwood, aged 83, Mr. George Rettie, father of one of the members of the staff of THE CHRISTIAN.

REQUEST FOR PRAYER. For blessing upon a series of addresses to be given in Exeter Hall, Sept. 18 to 22, by Rev. A. J. Harrison, B.D., Evidential Missioner of the Church Parochial Mission Society.

OUR YOUNG WOMEN.—We have received from the London Y.W.C.A. a copy of their new prospectus. The advantages offered by the association are set forth, and the addresses are given of forty institutes, homes, and restaurants in London. At a number of these institutes evening classes are held in book-keeping, shorthand, dress-cutting, French, etc., and numerous prizes are offered. Classes in gymnastics and drill also are conducted. The association has nearly 17,000 members in London alone. The secretary, at 16A, Old Cavendish-street, W., will have pleasure in sending free a copy of the prospectus.

SPECIAL APPOINTMENT

To HER MAJESTY

The Queen

and HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS The Prince of Wales.

A CUP OF DELICIOUS

MAZAWATTEE

Will remind you of the

CHOICE CHINA TEAS

OF THIRTY YEARS AGO.

You can give no greater treat to yourself or your friends than a cup of MAZAWATTEE TEA. It is all that Tea should be, and is undoubtedly the finest in the world.

There is probably no extravagance greater than that of drinking inferior and low-priced Tea. Better by far drink one cup of really fine Tea than a gallon of common, which is at once an insult to your palate and a source of serious injury to your digestion.

SOLD ONLY BY LEADING GROCERS THROUGHOUT THE UNITED KINGDOM.

Temperance Notes.

In the new Parliament twenty-two members are either brewers or connected with that trade.

At Havre it has been mostly habitual drunkards who have fallen victims to choleraic diarrhœa.

Rev. H. C. Stuntz, editor of The Indian Witness, says. "Drink is now a rising tide among the masses of this empire."

Africa's first great curse, according to The Spirit of Missions, is the slave trade; while her second great curse is the drink traffic.

The temperance party in Durham were greatly elevated at the Brewster Sessions by a public-house in the heart of the city being granted a six-days licence only.

At the King's Lynn Brewster Sessions a number of ratepayers presented a petition, signed by 1,200 persons, protesting against the renewal of certain licences.

The Quarterly Journal of Inebriety says:—"Of the prisoners in German penitentiaries convicted of murder, 46 per cent. used liquor, and of these, again, 41 per cent. were habitual drunkards."

Rev. J. D. Lamont, of Blackrock, Dublin, has consented to represent the Irish Temperance League at the annual meetings of the Scottish Permissive Bill Association at Glasgow on the 27th inst.

At Stanhope Licensing Sessions a petition, signed by 471 ratepayers, was presented by Revs. G. Chunn and A. E. Dickinson, requesting the magistrates to grant no fresh licences, and all the new applications were refused.

Rev. Hugh Goldie writes from Old Calabar, Africa:—"As far as we have penetrated the gin bottle has preceded us; and even commercial benefits are lost by the destruction of the very people with whom the commerce is attempted."

At Accrington 4224 persons have voted to the effect that there are too many licensed houses in the town, 903 answering in the negative. 4043 persons also voted in favour of reducing the houses by one half, the negative vote in this case being 943.

It would need six hundred years to send a Bible to each inhabitant of the globe, at the present rate of progress; the drink bill would enable us to do it in six months. Missions cost us seven shillings for each tick of the clock, drink about eight guineas.

The duties on spirits in India increased from one million rupees in 1870 to ninety millions in 1889. The shops licensed to sell opium and Indian hemp, a vile narcotic, now number over twenty thousand, and those for selling alcoholic liquors to about the same.

A missionary writes:—"Among the Siamese there is hardly one sober man among one hundred. I have never seen a man or boy in all my fourteen years here who did not smoke tobacco, and many of them also use opium and Indian hemp. The blood of the whole race is vitiated with these poisons."

The large coffee tavern in Marylebone formerly known as the Walmer Castle is about to change its name to the Russell Gurney, after the late Recorder of London, who was first instrumental in opening it. It will now become a Training School for Church Army Evangelist Coffee Tavern Managers.

The King of Samoa is determined that his subjects shall be sober. He has issued the following order:—"No spirituous, vinous, or fermented liquors or intoxicating drinks whatever shall be sold, given, or offered to be bought or bartered by any native Samoan or Pacific Islander resident in Samoa."

No family in a hundred has existed for two generations that, using strong drink, stopped at moderation—no village, no priesthood, no church, city, country, or kingdom! Whenever society has sown the seed of a little drinking it has also reaped the harvest of much drunkenness, with all its woes!—Dr. F. R. Lees.

From Turkey a missionary writes:—"The Turk obeys his great Prophet's command to abstain from wine, but as saké (brandy) and rum had not been invented in those days, and as he consequently did not say anything against them, the wealthy Turks—and especially on the sea coast—use a great deal of alcoholic liquor."

The City rulers of Salem, Massachusetts, have adopted an ordinance that should be swiftly copied everywhere:—"Ordered, that after the passage of this order, samples of illustrated posters, lithographs, and other advertisements of entertainments to be given in this city shall be submitted to the Committee on Licences before being displayed."

Through the action of the licensing justices of Bootle, a system for Sunday closing appears very probable, and at the Brewster Sessions the Mayor stated that they were unanimously of opinion that seven-days licences should be terminated because they considered them unnecessary in the borough. They therefore stated formally their objection to the renewal of any seven-days licences, consideration of some being adjourned, while the whole of the six-days licences were renewed.

DONATIONS RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1892.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

Appeals.

METHWOLD, NORFOLK.—Mr. R. R. Goodrich, of Brook Glen, Methwold, Norfolk, asks help towards building a village hall and reading room in this place, where there is a large and poor population with no place of resort but the public-house.

THE WELCOME HOME, 173, Ratcliff Highway, E.—Miss Child pleads for Chest Hospital letters for sailors who come to the home suffering with their chests, and many far advanced in consumption through sudden change of climate and other causes whilst at sea.

OLD HYMN BOOKS.—Churches changing their "Hymnal Companions" for the latest edition, may be glad to know that their disused Hymn-books and Prayer-books will be most helpful to The Missions to Seamen Institutes around our shores and abroad. Book notices for Church boards to collect the Hymn-books in private hands would be gladly sent on application to The Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C.

ARGENTINA.—Mr. George Spooner, writing from Rosario, where he is in charge of mission work among the seamen, says much good is being done by the distribution of tracts and other Christian publications. He appeals for donations of tracts in Spanish, Italian, and Scandinavian. He would especially be glad of leaflets by Cheyne Brady, and some of Mrs. Grimké's or Drummond's cards. They might be sent for him, care of Mr. Matthews, Sailors' Institute, Shadwell, London, E.

Treasurer.

THOMAS P. LAW, Esq., Q.C., 48, ST. STEPHEN'S GREEN, DUBLIN,
Who will thankfully receive and acknowledge Subscriptions sent to him for the Society.

Hon. Secretary.

JAMES BARTON, Esq., DUNDALK,
Who will supply information and arrange for Evangelistic Meetings with those desirous of having such.

THIS Society carries God's remedy for sin and sorrow to multitudes in Ireland, who are perishing in darkness and ignorance, notwithstanding all the efforts of the Churches.

It proclaims the old Gospel in its simplicity, and without any adventitious aids, in Tents, Halls, Schoolhouses, Barns, and in the open air, and finds that Gospel to be used continually by the Holy Spirit in numerous conversions. The Report of the past year tells of increased work, very cheering results, and at the same time need of means to carry it on; it will be sent on application to the undersigned. The work is unsectarian, and carried on in hearty sympathy with all the Protestant Churches.

Dundalk, Sept. 2nd, 1892. JAMES BARTON, Hon. Sec.

THE ANCHORAGE.

SPECIAL HOUSE OF SHELTER FOR THE MORE RESPECTABLE CLASS OF YOUNG WOMEN.

Trustees—REV. H. E. FOX and GEORGE HANBURY, Esq.

NINETY-SIX per cent. of the Mothers sheltered last year are now known to be leading respectable lives. The Committee therefore confidently appeal for funds to maintain the work, full particulars of which will be found in the Annual Report, which will be forwarded on application to the Secretary, 32, Charing Cross, London, S.W.

Orders for garments made at the ANCHORAGE will be thankfully received by the Secretary as above, from whom price list may be obtained.

Contributions may be paid to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings; or, to the Secretary of the Anchorage, 32, Charing Cross, London, S.W.

Christian Community.

CHILDREN'S HOLIDAY HOME.

President—George Williams, Esq.

THIS Home at Foots Cray, Kent, has been opened for the benefit of poor sickly children connected with the several Mission Halls occupied by the Society, all in localities where the poorest classes reside, and who are totally unable to pay for a holiday, and yet most urgently in need of it. The Home provides accommodation for 18 children at a time. The cost of each child is 6s. per week. Last year over 300 poor little things received the benefit, who found it to be a real boon.

To continue this for the present year an earnest appeal is hereby made to sustain this truly charitable work. Help in any form will be gratefully received by the Secretary, as under; or by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank, 54, Lombard-street, London, E.C.; or by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, Office of The Christian.

JAMES ATKINSON, Secretary.

GENERAL MISSION WORK. WORK AMONG CHILDREN. PRISONERS' MISSION AND HOME. BOYS' HOMES AND PREVENTIVE WORK. WOMEN'S HOMES AND RESCUE WORK.

The Superintendent is much grieved to say that owing to the great scarcity of donations, the above many-sided work is sorely hampered.

Funds are urgently needed to meet the outlay of the autumn months.

Who will help us?

Contributions will be most gratefully acknowledged if sent to the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or to the Superintendent, Mr. William Wheatley, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

The Annual Report is now ready, and will be forwarded free upon application to the Superintendent.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.—A new Sailors' Rest has been opened at Vancouver, where it is greatly needed, at the other side of the world, where ships' crews can find safe companionship, a harbour of refuge, suitable recreation and instruction, and a place of worship. The moving spirit in this helpful work is a young lady, scarce out of her teens, who heard at Bath of the work of the Missions to Seamen Institutes, enquired carefully how it was done, and, on her father receiving an appointment at Vancouver, applied her information in this practical fashion.

The Book World.

THE ILLUSTRATED PENNY LIBRARY (Lang, Neil and Co.).—This firm have commenced a penny series, in the hope of doing something further towards supplanting the evil and pernicious literature now unhappily so widely circulated. Of the six numbers now before us, two (1 and 6) are illustrated Gospels; two (2 and 4) are attractive stories of real life; while the remaining two (3 and 5) are extracts from Mr. Neil's books on Palestine, and are illustrative of Eastern life and customs. The series well deserves the attention of all having influence among young people.

ISRAEL'S GATHERING AND RESTORATION, by Silas Henn, is a thoughtful outline of a great prophetic theme. The treatment is eminently clear, it being shown that God can no more break his covenant with the pious "fathers" of perverse Israel that he can prove unfaithful to any who put their trust in Him. The pamphlet will form a good introduction to a study of the great prophecies of Scripture. (6d., post-free, from The Author, Hinley-road, Dudley.)

THE BIBLE MINE SEARCHED. Mr. E. F. Gedge has for some years brought out a "Bible Searching Almanac," which many have learned to prize. Not being able to meet all the demands for back numbers, he has combined the lists for the past six years in a small book, which we cordially commend to the notice of those who desire to search the Scriptures in a systematic manner. The lists are admirably arranged, and an index shows from what book of the Bible each selection is made. (6d. Shaw.)

The latest issue of the "Present Day Tracts" series is TESTIMONIES OF GREAT MEN TO THE BIBLE AND CHRISTIANITY. By John Murdoch, LL.D. (4d. Religious Tract Society). Rationalists, litterateurs, scientists, and statesmen are quoted, not, of course, to prove a thesis, but to show that implicit faith in the Bible is not incompatible with the possession and exercise of the highest powers of the human mind. This is a very useful tract, and will, we trust, not only confirm believers, but prove a messenger of peace to many a distressed soul.

WILL POSITIVELY CURE

THE MOST SEVERE FORMS OF THE FOLLOWING AILMENTS:—

COLDS.

Madame ADELINA PATTI writes from Craig-y-Nos Castle:—"Madame Patti has found the Carbolic Smoke Ball very beneficial indeed, and the only thing that would enable her to rest well at night, when having a severe cold."

CATARRH.

Rev. HENRY S. LUNN, M.D., writes from 5, Endsleigh-gardens, London, N.W., November 16th, 1891:—"I have much pleasure in testifying to the great value of your Carbolic Smoke Ball. It has been used in my household with the best results in cases of bad Catarrh."

ASTHMA.

Miss HUDDLESTON writes from Walmersley House, near Bury, Lancashire, 15th October, 1891:—"Miss Huddleston is finding the Carbolic Smoke Ball a great blessing for Asthma. She is very glad to say that it is doing her a great deal of good when hope had almost gone."

BRONCHITIS.

Dr H. G DARLING, M.D., Linden Cottage, Shepherd's Well, Kent, writes, 18th April, 1892:—"I had used the Carbolic Smoke Ball only a few times when it gave me immediate relief—although I am 83 years of age and have suffered more than one-third of that time from Bronchitis complicated with Asthma."

DEAFNESS.

Mrs. KINGSLEY writes from Woking Village, Surrey, May 10th, 1892:—"I have very great hopes of being able to hear quite well by the end of the month. My whole throat was in a dreadful state, and when we consider I have been deaf since 1884, I think the improvement in the two months since I commenced using the Carbolic Smoke Ball is wonderful."

One CARBOLIC SMOKE BALL will last a family several months, making it the cheapest remedy in the world at the price—10/- post free.

The CARBOLIC SMOKE BALL can be refilled, when empty, at a cost of 5/- post free. Address:—

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

"HOPELESS" CASE OF CONSUMPTION—A YOUNG MAN RESTORED TO HEALTH.

"DEAR SIR,—I have much pleasure in writing you to say that one of my sons, whose life was despaired of in consequence of Consumption having supervened an attack of inflammation of the lungs, has been completely restored to health by your invaluable treatment. I cannot speak too highly of your medicine, for a more complete and wonderful cure, I think, has never been effected by any other medicine.

"My son returned home in a hopelessly dying state. By accident I heard of your remedy and determined to try it. My wife and other members of my family were surprised and delighted to notice some change for the better, after a few days only; and in a few months, I am glad to say, my son was entirely restored to health, and is now one of the strongest and most robust of our family.

"As the publication of this case would, I think, do much good, you can make any use you like of this letter, etc. I shall write an account to my relatives living in Tasmania and Queensland, and should suggest you inserting this in the papers there.—I am, dear sir, yours gratefully, JOHN B. HARDWICKE, Selby-villas, Prittlewell-street, Southend, Essex."

In confirmation of the above, Mr. Hardwicke has sent me the certificate of his son's discharge from the Royal Navy: "Sydney Hardwicke invalided; case, Pneumonic Phthisis."

Also a certificate as to his present state of health from a surgeon at Southend:—"I hereby certify that Sydney Hardwicke is sound in body and of good constitution."—Aug. 9, 1892.

INTRODUCTION.

CHARLES HADDON SPURGEON was in no respect ordinary. He was great as a man; great as a theologian; great as a preacher; great in private with God; and great in public with his fellow-men. He was well versed in the three things which, according to Luther, make a minister: temptation, meditation, and prayer. The school of suffering was one in which he was deeply taught.

While a powerful loadstone to draw men, the attractive force in him was not selective, as in the case of the magnet; but miscellaneous and diffused, as in the case of the earth. John Ruskin could appreciate, while the common people heard him gladly. Large-souled though he was, he had a mind that was a meet associate; and, best of all, he knew the truth, and to the last upheld the banner of the Reformation.

The following chapters aim to supply an original Sketch and Portraiture of this distinguished servant of the Lord Jesus. The work is based, for the most part, on information obtained at first hand. For years the writer has had exceptional opportunities of converse with the great preacher; seen him under varying conditions; and heard him descant, at least scores of times, on matters of personal reminiscence, as well as upon numerous points of theological interest and inquiry. No apology, it is hoped, is needed for drawing upon sources that are personal and private. The seal of confidence is in no case broken. The Christian has nothing to conceal; and, in this case at least, what has been spoken in the ear may well be proclaimed from the housetop.

That this tribute of affectionate regard for the memory of Charles Haddon Spurgeon may bring glory to God, and be a means of grace to the reader, is the earnest prayer of

THE AUTHOR.

MOST FAVOURABLY REVIEWED BY ALL SECTIONS OF THE CHRISTIAN PRESS.

"An invaluable work. It is the book which the present period needs. It is solid, plain, conclusive argument. To spread such a treatise as this will be a very gracious work; and the results must be beneficial."—The Sword and Trowel

"A very popular treatment of some important questions connected with the evidences of Christianity. The work is one of the very best we have seen for the people, and may be eminently useful also to young preachers and Sunday-school teachers."—Christian Commonwealth.

"We affix our seal to the book as one of genuine and definite value."—The Rock.

"Would that all our young men—and especially such as are exposed to sceptical influences—could get hold of this able work! It would fortify them in the faith of the Gospel, and supply them with powerful weapons of defence against opponents. We commend its study to our Literary societies and Bible classes."—Methodist New Connexion Magazine.

"Full of argument and suggestion, and lighted up with striking illustration."—The Church.

"It is one of the very best aids to faith we know; no young man sceptically inclined can resist its conclusions, if he will conscientiously read it through. A book to read and pass on with a prayer of hope."—Illustrated Missionary News.

September 20th, 1892.

My Dear Friend,

The past year has been a remarkable one, crowded with proofs of God's continued goodness. In the face of almost every form of opposition and misrepresentation, the movement has gone forward, carrying out the one great purpose for which it exists, the deliverance of the poorest and the worst from the miseries of vice and sin, by leading them to Jesus Christ the Saviour of the world.

While I feel at times that God has given me as brave and devoted a band of comrades as are to be found on the earth, I am sure that I can praise God also for as many noble and generous spirits outside our ranks as ever held up the hands of any leader of God's people in any age. Their beautiful liberality and sympathy have cheered me forwards in some of my darkest and most difficult hours, and have helped me materially in the consolidation and extension of this wonderful work. Assuredly God will abundantly reward them.

My personal feelings would lead me to wish that there was not the present urgent necessity to appeal to you for financial aid. For twenty-seven years I have been endeavouring to serve my generation as God has helped me in this movement, and I am sometimes tempted to regard the begging part of my burden as a somewhat heavy one, but in this I have no choice.

In the meantime the requirements of the war press upon me, and I can only lay them before you in my Master's name, and ask that for His sake you will respond as you have done so generously in the past.

I know that some of my friends take exception to one or two of our methods: but surely the marvellous results of our work in the blessing and salvation of tens of thousands in many different lands should largely excuse, if not entirely justify, all that we do.

Our poor people all over the world will during the week following Saturday, September 24th, unite in special prayer for an outpouring of the Spirit of God, and will during the same period deny themselves of some little luxury or necessity in order that they may thereby do something by which to help forward the cause that lies so near their hearts.

I feel sure that in combination with this effort on the part of men and women whose lives are more or less a continued struggle with poverty, I am safe in asking you to give some practical expression of your sympathy, and thus to further assist in the advancement of the Kingdom of Christ among the most needy and wretched.

Believe me

Yours faithfully,

WILLIAM BOOTH

THE CURE OF CONSUMPTION BRONCHITIS AND ASTHMA.

DR. ALABONE'S REMEDIES.

By the success of these remedies all barriers have been broken down, and it is now an acknowledged fact that CONSUMPTION, BRONCHITIS, and ASTHMA are curable by this specific treatment, many thousands of cases having been abandoned as hopeless.

THE WHOLE OF THE REMEDIES ARE NOW, FOR THE FIRST TIME, AVAILABLE TO THE PUBLIC, and can be obtained from any chemist. Agent: J. Howard, 21, Queenhithe, London, E.C.

Dr. CRONIN, M.D., writes:—"You have done wonders for my patient. I hardly thought he could have improved so much under the treatment."

Dr. FAIRBAIRN, M.D., L.R.C.S., writes:—"The success of your treatment of Consumption is simply marvellous. I have had no less than 60 CASES OF CURE."

"Your remedy for Consumption has PROVED A SUCCESS in my own case, after having been GIVEN UP BY SEVERAL EMINENT PHYSICIANS."—T. YOUNG, L.R.C.P., L.R.C.S., &c.

B. WATSON DAVIES, M.D., L.R.C.S., writes:—"I have great pleasure in stating that a near and dear relative of mine, who was in an ADVANCED STAGE OF CONSUMPTION when I commenced your treatment (several members of her family having died of that disease), is now wonderfully improved in all respects, and has entirely lost her cough."

Members of the medical and other professions are testifying to the extraordinary results obtained from the use of these remedies.

A TABULATED FORM FOR SELF-TREATMENT, POST FREE.

Everyone should read the "Cure of Consumption," 120th thousand, post free 2s. 6d., by author, EDWIN W. ALABONE, M.D., P.A., U.S.A., F.R.M.S., late M.R.C.S. Eng., late Consulting Surgeon to the Lower Clapton Orphan Asylum, &c.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of the late Mr. Thomas Cook, of Leicester, originator of Cook's excursion tours.

At the earnest request of friends in Belfast and elsewhere, Mr. D. W. Whittle has come over from America to engage in Gospel work in Ireland. He crossed the Atlantic in the ss. Umbria, reaching Queenstown on Saturday last. He is accompanied by Miss Whittle, who helps him in Gospel song. For the present his address will be, care of the Y.M.C.A., Wellington-place, Belfast. Will our readers sustain him and his daughter in prayer in their service for Christ in the sister isle?

As we go to press we learn that Mr. Moody's two days' visit to Limerick closed on Monday evening. Six meetings were held, in the Theatre Royal, the largest building in the town. The ministers of all the Protestant churches were heartily united, and great blessing resulted. Mr. Whittle remains to follow up the mission. Mr. Moody left for Tralee on Tuesday.

There have been many responses to the request that Christian singers should enrol themselves in the special choir that will lead the singing at Mr. Moody's forthcoming mission in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, but the help of still others is needed. Will friends who can aid in this service send their names and addresses (stating the part they sing) to Mr. C. F. Davis, 4, Westover-road, Wandsworth Common, S.W. In conjunction with Mr. Davis, the honorary secretaryship of the London mission has devolved on Mr. W. H. Seagram, of Exeter Hall.

The Belfast Witness says that a very large section of the Roman Catholic people of Ireland is in a state of incipient revolt against the despotism of Rome. Colporteurs have access to the people to an extent not known before, and there are many great centres of population, particularly Dublin, where preachers get a ready hearing. Some of the Romanist newspapers say the same thing; one of these last week described clericalism as "the enemy." In view of this condition of affairs, how great is the need for earnest prayer and effort, that the greatest possible results may flow from the visitation by Gospel messengers, now going on in Ireland, north and south.

The reference to colportage work in Ireland brings home very forcibly to the mind the great opening that now exists for scattering good and helpful books among the masses of the people in that country. In connection with the meetings now being held by Mr. Moody in the south, there are endless opportunities for the wise and fruitful distribution of such books as "The Way to God," in which the evangelist puts the way of life in his own graphic and simple fashion. Any friends who would provide means for the diffusion of these Gospel messages to the inquirers whose names are taken at these meetings, would be doing noble service and would also gratify the evangelist. Many of those in Scotland and Ireland who have received spiritual stimulus under Mr. Moody's ministrations might adopt this plan of giving practical expression to their gratitude.

Referring to our recommendation of "after meetings," a minister writes that he has resolved to adopt this means of grace after long hesitation. He somewhat abbreviates the evening service, so that the congregation are not too wearied to remain a little longer if they wish. During the singing of the last hymn those who cannot remain are requested to leave; then two or three brethren are called on to offer short prayers, especially for a blessing on the Word; then the minister appeals to the undecided, and invites any who would desire the prayers of the congregation to hold up a hand, seen only by himself, all others bowing their heads in supplication. Special prayer is then offered for those who ask such help, and the service, lasting altogether about an hour and a half, closes with the Benediction.

An intelligent, devout, and aged deacon remonstrated against this practice, because it might injure those who, under passing excitement, made a public confession of a conversion not real. This is worthy of consideration. To urge all present to hold up a hand in sign of repentance and faith, and to regard all who do so as converts, often announcing the number as lasting fruits of such mission services, may be misleading and encourage false security. But is there the same objection if those who hold up the hand do so simply to show their desire to become Christians, and to ask the prayers of believers that they may, by the help of the Spirit of God "truly repent and unfeignedly believe his Holy Gospel"?

The value of "a word in season" has recently been illustrated in a statement made by the authorities of the Church Army in regard to a burglar, most of whose life had been lived in crime, twenty-one years out of forty-two having been spent in prison. A Christian lady who met him, spoke to him a few kindly words, which were so blessed as to lead to a total change in his life. The testimony of those who have associated with him since his conversion is that he has become steady and industrious and a Christian worker.

The more merciful method of dealing with juvenile offenders which has been urged upon the legislative authorities for some years past, has been successfully followed in Sussex, in which county, since its adoption, there has been a falling off in the number of juveniles sent to jails, and an increase in the number of those sent to reformatories. The figures for the whole of England, we are glad to say, show a similar improvement, a fact to be rejoiced over when it is remembered how injuriously the surroundings of the prisons used to affect the younger criminals.

The Liverpool licensing magistrates are to be commended for the action taken by them at the recent sessions in extinguishing thirty-two licences in that city, especially as it is stated that some of the houses from which the licences have been taken were anything but a credit to the place. The gratifying result is due largely to the pressure which has been brought to bear upon the Bench by the temperance workers in Liverpool. We trust that their example will be followed successfully elsewhere.

On another page will be found an extremely interesting and suggestive little narrative, by a student in Mr. Moody's Bible Institute, entitled, "As ye go, preach." This alertness to seize every passing opportunity for personal work is one of the things pressed home on the students at Chicago. Would that it were made as prominent a feature of the teaching in our Colleges and Divinity Halls. How many weary and heavy-laden souls might be gently led to the great Rest-giver, if all believers had the anointed eye to discover them, and the gift of wise sympathy in introducing them to the Saviour.

In a very forcible article on the sermon question, The Independent of New York lays the axe at the root of the tree. It declares that though the preacher is sometimes to blame for fruitless sermon hearing, the seat of the mischief more often lies with the hearer:—

> He goes to church to be entertained. He does not go eager for instruction, encouragement, direction. He does not go hungering and thirsting for spiritual truth. . . . . If it is required of the preacher that he come not before the people without having his message carefully prepared, it is equally the duty of the hearer that he should make ready to hear it with a clear attentive mind and prayerful heart.

As Mr. Moody sometimes says in addressing Christians, it is not "drawing pulpits" that are needed so much as prayerful and expectant occupants of the pews. It is easy for a man to preach when he knows that the Christians in the congregation are holding him up in their prayers. There is, of course, quite another side to the subject. Every true preacher has a message from God; but there is preaching which is only the preacher's own message.

After an absence of several months through illness, Dr. Dale preached at Carr's Lane Chapel, Birmingham, on Sunday. Speaking on the vicissitudes of words, he said:—

> He should like to know how often they had heard the word "justify" or "justification" from that platform since he was there last. There was a time when the mere sound of the word "justification" had an electric force—when it kindled Christian hearts into flame. Then, again, the word "grace." He was very much afraid its comparative disuse was a sign that we knew very little of its value. Many of them had no occasion for the word—their religious thought and experience found sufficient expression without it.
> If that was true, they might be sure that their religious thought and experience were greatly impoverished, for there was no other word that stood for precisely the same thing that the word "grace" stood for. It was a word which found various uses in the New Testament; but the grace of which Paul spoke was the grace which was the joy of those who already believed; it might be described as a special form of love,—love delighting to show kindness—free, spontaneous, unmerited kindness—finding happiness in showing kindness, and giving happiness in the showing.

Words and their fortunes have much to teach us. The Gospel has ennobled language as it has raised humanity. Educated pastors may inspire as well as instruct their flocks by working at this mine. We ought not to be behind our fathers in Reformation and Puritan times regarding the riches of the "grace" of God, and the pivotal doctrine of "justification" by faith.

The seventeenth volume of Dr. Parker's "People's Bible" (Hodder and Stoughton), concluding the Old Testament, contains chapters on the Prophets Hosea to Malachi. In his preface, the preacher says that it is quite in consonance with his experience, to affirm that the people who constitute the real strength of any church regard with appreciation all effort at consecutive teaching; and counsels his juniors in the ministry "not to be irregular textists, but to be Bible expositors." This is wise and useful counsel: would to God it might be generally followed.

Dr. Parker explains that in order to keep the work within the desired compass he has had to curtail the outline which he had hoped to fill up. This volume seems to have suffered most from this cause. Its discourses will, however, be found to be as terse and quaint, as outspoken and incisive, as those which have preceded. A favourite adjective with the early Friends was "weighty." Perhaps this word could scarcely be applied as characteristic of these chapters, but neither is it characteristic of the present period. It is one of our deepest needs. One extract—

What does Micah see? Whole nations coming to the Lord, and saying to one another, "Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and He will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the law from Jerusalem" iv. 2. Here is a popular sentiment; here is, indeed, a universal sentiment. At present, our ideal Christian life is represented by a one-man ministry. If you close your eyes, and look upon the ideal Church of to-day, it is that there shall be a congregation, and one man shall be addressing it; and that one man shall sustain the position of exhorter, and in high, poignant, hortatory tones he shall call men, and warn men, and bless men. Micah saw a much larger ministry. He said, The time will come when the people will exhort one another; when all the congregations shall mutually excite one another to higher enthusiasm and nobler endeavour. Wherever you meet a man he will say, Come to the mountain of the house of the Lord; wherever you see an assembly of men they shall, with one concurrent and dominating voice, say, Come! and their call will be to festival, to banqueting, to the holy rite of harmonious joy in the living Saviour. What wonder that Micah was rich and strong, and full of peace and gladness! The image is one of an inspiring kind.

The New Testament is to occupy eight volumes. The whole work will form one of the most useful commentaries for the general reader and for the expository preacher.

The religion and morality of a country may be judged somewhat by the pastimes of its people. It is surely no favourable symptom that a bull-ring of colossal dimensions and capable of accommodating 12,000 spectators has been opened at Lisbon. What good influence can the national religion exert when the Sunday is devoted to such a debasing, brutal pursuit?

NATIONAL THRIFT.—A test of national morality as well as national thrift is afforded by the figures published by the Post-office authorities. During the twenty-five years of the Post-office Savings Bank the frauds and inaccuracies have been covered by a half-penny for every £100 dealt with. In 10,000 post-office banks, 992,000 accounts were opened last year, and during the same period a total of twenty-one millions of money was handled by five millions of customers.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.—In a circular letter, the president, chairman, and vice-chairman of committees, and secretary of the Homes write as follows:—In a letter influentially signed, which recently appeared in the public press, "The Remarkable Diminution of Crime and Gradual Closing of Prisons" was stated to be due in great measure to the rescue and care by various agencies of destitute and outcast children. If this be a correct inference—and we do not doubt that it is—then the operations of the 49 institutions known as "Dr. Barnardo's Homes" may fairly claim to have had no inconsiderable share in the attainment of so excellent a result; for, although doubtless many other useful agencies have combined to produce this effect, it is probably also true that no set of institutions under one management has ever existed which, for width of scope, far-reaching ability to aid, diversity and thoroughness of industrial training, and general results, has equalled those for which we plead.

DEVOUT (?) CRITICISM.

Many eminent men who refuse to accept the Bible as an inspired book, have been ready enough to acknowledge its pre-eminence and moral worth. In a very miscellaneous assembly, including philosophers and materialists, the question was raised, "Suppose one condemned to a life-long imprisonment and allowed to choose only one book as his companion, on what book ought his choice to fall?" Reville, a French rationalist who relates this story in the Revue des Deux Mondes, answers us that all were unanimous in naming the Bible. No one who has read Professor Huxley's plea for the use of this Book as an instument of popular education can soon forget its force. One sentence of it may well find a place here:—

By the study of what other book could children be so much humanised and made to feel that each figure in that vast historical procession fills, like themselves, but a momentary space in the interval between the eternities, and earns the blessings or the curses of all time, according to its effort to do good and hate evil, even as they also are earning their payment for their work?

In his recent volume of Essays on some Controverted Questions, with the spirit and argument of which we have no agreement, he returns to the subject in the prologue and writes:—

It appears to me that if there is anybody more objectionable than the orthodox Bibliolater it is the heterodox Philistine, who can discover in a literature which, in some respects, has no superior, nothing but a subject for scoffing and an occasion for the display of his conceited ignorance of the debt he owes to former generations.

This eulogy is by no means so strong or sufficient as we have a right to demand or desire. Nevertheless, it entitles us to ask as an axiom to be admitted without question by all critics who profess to sit in judgment on the contents of this Book, that its writers were not fools. If this most reasonable request be granted, a very large proportion of the difficulties in its interpretation so frequently pressed to the front at present are at once removed. Our failure to understand a narrative may be due rather to our ignorance of the facts than to the ignorance of the writer. When the narrator is only concerned to put us in possession of such facts as, in his judgment, are necessary to be known, he may, without any sinister intention on his part, omit information which to us seems desirable. Especially must we make allowance for such omissions when the record itself shows that the suspicion of any incongruity is entirely absent from his own mind.

In the story of David, as written in the First Book of Samuel, the apparent inconsistency between his introduction to Saul as a minstrel boy, and thereafter as the conqueror of Goliath, has been long known. Probably a few years with notable changes may have separated the one meeting from the other. Be that as it may, the distinctness of the two interviews is fully present to the mind of the historian, and leaves him in no doubt as to the reality of both. In the first instance, we learn that the lad, being a skilful player on the harp, was sent for to soothe King Saul in his mad fits of melancholy. Then we are told that "David went and returned from Saul to feed his father's sheep at Bethlehem" (1 Sam. xvii. 15). Now, whether this be original or editorial, it indicates at least no consciousness on the part of the author of any contradiction between the first introduction and the second. When, after the slaughter of the Philistine, he appears again before Saul, and is asked, "Whose son art thou?" he replies, as if he would remind the King of a forgotten fact, "I am the son of thy servant Jesse the Bethlehemite" (1 Sam. xvii. 58).

Yet, will it be believed, critics professing to be devout find in this simple and straightforward account the existence of two distinct and conflicting documents, which the editor vainly attempts to harmonise! The folly of any such attempt in face of the plain statement of facts is apparent even to the casual reader. Were the writers or editors of the books of Scripture as guileful as they are guileless, they would not have left such superficial discrepancies to reward the suspicious scrutiny of nineteenth-century wisdom. There is not even the shadow of concealment of any part of the history. It is all set down as it occurred; only the author, conscious of his own integrity, is not careful to supply the link by which we might connect the two introductions. Such difficulty as there may be does not arise from his ignorance, but from our not being in possession of all the facts in the case.

Canon Cheyne in his recent volume entitled "Aids to the Devout Study of Criticism" lays much stress on this supposed disagreement in the two accounts. This, however, is soon disposed of if only we bear in mind the axiom for which we contend, viz., the writers of the Bible were not fools. We have a much more serious indictment to bring against the Canon's book. While labouring to discredit the story of David's triumph over the lion, the bear, and the Philistine, he proposes reverently to retain them as allegoric or parabolic enforcements of spiritual truth. That we may do him no injustice we quote his own words: "It may not, for the reasons which I have given, be historically true that David killed Goliath, or even that as a shepherd boy he killed wild beasts single-handed, not once nor twice; but the truth, which is the germ of Gospel truth, that God resisteth the proud but giveth grace to the humble, and that all true success is really a deliverance wrought out by God our Saviour, could not have been so forcibly expressed without its romantic setting."

Either to receive or reject Scripture in its entirety is an intelligible act; but to reject its history while professing to receive spiritual truth concealed within its folds, does not seem to us agreeable to logic or common sense. While giving full credit to this would-be devout, while critical, school, we can only exclaim, O sancta simplicitas! Assuredly such writers will alienate all reverent readers of the Word; and they will only confirm in their opposition to it all who already regard it as on a level with other records of human religions. These attempts at mediation between faith and unbelief may, for a time, satisfy their authors; they never can reconcile antagonists so deadly. On the part of Christians they are unworthy confessions of a weakness without reason, seeing it has no existence, and instead of conciliating their enemies, will strongly confirm them in their opposition. Only let the Word of God be read reverently and without prejudice, and it will speedily assume its wonted power over the hearts and consciences of men.

THE PALESTINE RAILWAY.—The railway from the Mediterranean to Jerusalem is completed. It runs from Jaffa to within a mile and a-half of the Jaffa gate of the metropolis of Christendom. It is to be opened before the close of the month. Travellers will have to traverse the Valley of Hinnom as they leave the railway station. The Jews are already returning; during six years the population has increased nearly threefold. What developments the steam engine is yet to forward leaves one in a strange wonder.

Native Churches.

If the world is to be evangelised, it would seem to be God's purpose that this great work should mainly be accomplished by the people themselves. The Apostle of the Gentiles rejoices that out from the Thessalonians sounded the Word of God, and that in every place their faith to Godward was spread abroad. The heathen nations must, indeed, first hear the Gospel; and how shall they hear without a preacher, and how shall they preach except they be sent? But when the Apostles had preached to them the Gospel of God, they seemed to have had more confidence in the work being carried on by the people themselves than is felt by modern missionaries abroad or missionary boards at home.

The Apostle said on the authority of one of their own prophets, that the Cretans were always liars, evil beasts, slothful gluttons; yet he left Titus there that he might ordain elders in every city; and he expected out of those quondam liars to find blameless men having faithful children; men fitted to be bishops, sober, just, holy, temperate. The aged women were to teach their younger sisters to be sober, to love their husbands and their children, to be discreet, chaste, workers at home, good, obedient to their own husbands. The very slaves of this degraded island were to be such model servants as any modern master or mistress would regard as treasures. The aged and the young, in all the relationships of life, husbands, wives, children, neighbours, masters, slaves, were to adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things. There is no lovelier picture of holy living than the sketch given by the Apostle of the possibilities of Christian life in Crete.

But the God of all patience did not force them. As a good shepherd (Gen. xxxiii. 14) leads on softly as the cattle and the children are able to endure, so the Lord has always dealt with the children of men. Because of the hardness of their hearts He suffered the men of Israel, as the less of two evils, to put away their wives. The Apostle does not appear to have insisted on the polygamist immediately putting his superfluous wives away; but he showed the evil by insisting that none should be ordained as an elder who had more than one. He did not at once probibit slavery. He exhorted them against lying, theft, uncleanness, and covetousness which is idolatry. Modern English Christians would think themselves insulted if they were thought capable of these sins, except the last. We exercise Church discipline on those who transgress in ways that scandalise society, but "the covetous man whom the Lord abhorreth" is an honoured member in many churches.

This respectable standard is English but not Heavenly. It gives considerable latitude to sins of temper, to idolatry of pets and hobbies, to love of the world; it has a special code of morals for "business"; it does not weep over those who "mind earthly things." We often hear of a more primitive conception of Christian living amongst converted heathen than obtains among the churches at home. The constitution of the native Church of Japan is like a chapter out of the New Testament.

While we preach the Gospel to them, and show them the kind of men who should be ordained as elders, and how family and other life should be lived, ought we not to expect that the Holy Spirit will purify their hearts by faith? and ought we not to encourage, more than we do, the formation of native churches, rather than seek to reproduce our own sects among them? So that instead of Chinese Methodists, Chinese Presbyterians Chinese Baptists, Chinese Congregationalists we should have Chinese Christians, and so of every other nation. The English Baptists thought it disastrous when the Cameroons were ceded to Germany, but "since the cession" (we quote from the centenary volume of the Baptist Missionary Society) "the native churches have manifested a very vigorous life. . . . They early formed themselves into independent communities, supporting their own pastors, building their own chapels, and carrying on aggressive work in the districts beyond; and, more than all, the Cameroons Mission has been the seed-plot of the larger work upon the Congo, its true antecedent, a necessary link in the accomplishment of the Divine purpose which, finding its visible starting point in the emancipation of the Christian slaves in Jamaica, has carried our missionaries more than a thousand miles up the basin of the Congo River."

Surely this great result would not so much temper the disappointment of the Baptist Missionary Society, as be accepted with profound and unmitigated thankfulness, as showing the mighty working of the Gospel when the Word of God has free course and is glorified.

THE COMING REVIVAL.

The various articles that have been appearing in The Christian from time to time on this subject are meeting with a very distinct response at the Antipodes. God's people here are on their faces before Him in the very hush of expectancy. The cloud, no bigger than a man's hand, appeared three years ago, and it has been growing and spreading, the heavens are getting black, and there is a sound of abundance of rain.

It is now three years since a number of ministers in Melbourne banded themselves together for prayer, and in their weekly meetings (sometimes held from 4 p.m. till 7.30 p.m., sometimes from 10 p.m. till 2 a.m., sometimes all night) the burden of their cry has been, "O Lord, revive thy work," and God is answering gloriously. By means of the "Conferences for the Deepening of Spiritual Life" that are being held in various places, God is preparing a host of consecrated Spirit-filled nurses for nursing and caring for the converts that will soon be on their hands. The Pentecostal College is again being crowded with students, and this is the precursor of Pentecostal success. By commercial disasters of one kind and another God has been bringing the people very low. Has He not prepared other lands for spiritual floods in precisely the same way before to-day?

Of late years we have had all kinds of booms here—gold booms, silver booms, land booms, etc.; now, thank God, we are on the eve of a boom that will leave nought but blessing behind it—a Salvation boom! "Awake, awake, put on strength, O arm of the Lord: awake as in the ancient days." "Ye that are the Lord's remembrancers, take ye no rest and give Him no rest till He establish and till He make Jerusalem a praise in the earth."

Faithfully yours, John MacNeil,
Evangelist of the Presbyterian
Sandringham. Church of Victoria.

PORTSMOUTH SEAMEN.—Mr. W. Punter, 27, Pembroke-road, Portsmouth, Wesleyan Seamen's Missionary, writes:—Meetings are held almost nightly on one or more ships in the harbour. Ships are also visited at noon, and much good is accomplished. Many an old salt has been turned from sin to righteousness, and many a young man fresh from home has been preserved from evil ways. I have access to the Naval Hospital, in which there are seldom less than 700 in-patients. The trooping season has begun; of the fifty-eight troopships which came and went last year, about 42,000 men embarked and disembarked at this port. Will friends help me in this work by forwarding booklets and tracts? A thousand Testaments and 100 Bibles are needed for my winter's work. Recently I have occupied an old public-house, and have turned the club-room into a meeting-room.

"AS YE GO, PREACH."

My story begins with Buffalo. I walked back and forth as the train was detained there by the strikers for an hour. Though the soldiers were out in full force (someone said 10,000) I saw only a few.

Once, on my going to the door, a poor tired porter stood outside. As he stood there a moment he looked at me and I smiled. He said, "I am so tired; it seems as if I cannot keep up much longer." I asked him if there were any special reason. He said he had only arrived in Chicago from New York, and they called upon him immediately to take the Boston Sleeper through. I made a few remarks, and then asked him if were a Christian. He turned quickly to me. I shall never forget his earnest look as he said, "No, lady, I'm not; but, oh! I'd give a heap if I only were one."

I asked, "Why are you not one?" He said, "I've prayed ever since I was a little fellow, but now it don't do any good, I've got a Christian mother 'way down in Tennessee. She's the best mother that ever lived. My father died four years ago—a happy Christian. They prayed for me."

The poor man walked a few steps away, wiped his eyes, and returned. "Oh, lady, I had the best wife man ever had. How I loved her and she me; we lived happily for eleven years. We had much trouble and buried our four children, and when I was away last December on my trip, 800 miles away from her, she died. Lady, she was a Christian, and died happy, they tell me, and she wanted me to be one. I've tried hard, but I don't know how."

I talked with him a few moments, and asked him (when the train had started, and he had time) to come and sit beside me, and I would show him how and give him something that would help him. About ten minutes after we left Buffalo he came and sat beside me. I showed him the way of life, and he gladly accepted. The tired look seemed gone from his face. I gave him a marked copy of John's Gospel, and some tracts. As he lingered, he said:—

"Oh, lady, you've done me so much good. I shall remember what you've said to me, and read the Gospel until I get home, and then get my Bible." He said that there was a lady where he boards who talked to him, but it wasn't plain. He left me and went in a corner to read. The conductor, brakemen, and many others came, but he paid no heed.

When we came to Boston he said, "Oh, lady, I shall never forget. I only wish that I had talked to you before. God bless you for your words." I then showed him how nearly I came not to go in a Sleeper, and spoke of his not intending to go to Boston, and how this was the Lord's plan. He put it in the heart of one of his children to open the way, and then sent him along. He was greatly touched as I said, "Good-bye."

WE ARE THE LORD'S.

(From the German of C. J. P. Spitta.)

We are the Lord's! or living we, or dying,
We are the Lord's, who once has died for all.
We are the Lord's! through Him e'en death defying,
We are the Lord's! our feet can never fall.
We are the Lord's! to Him let us be living,
In body and in soul we are His own!
Our heart and lips and conduct witness-giving:
We are the Lord's indeed, and not our own!
We are the Lord's! the path, however dreary,
We will not fear: still shines our star serene,
To lighten every troubled heart and weary;
We are the Lord's! with all the words must mean.
We are the Lord's! He'll give full demonstration
In that last strife, where other help is vain:
In pain and anguish He will bring salvation:
We are the Lord's, and death to us is gain.

SEAMEN AT BILBAO.—Madame de Ramsay, of Sweden, writes to us of a recent visit she paid to Bilbao, where she found a most excellent work among sailors, conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Brunell. In addition to his duties as English chaplain, Mr. Brunell is very active in all kinds of good work among the seagoing people, and he has a very devoted helper in his wife.

Perth Christian Conference.

[By Our Special Correspondent.]

Through the lapse of years and the recent multiplication of Conferences, the annual Christian assembly in the Fair City may have lost some of its uniqueness, but certainly it has lost little in power or practical value. Changes there are: loved and honoured ones, such as Mr. Mudie and others, formerly the life and soul of the gathering, have passed to their rest, and are sorely missed, but their spirit lives on in those who were co-workers with them, and who now labour untiringly to preserve the high tone and spiritual intensity which for so many years have marked this "Scottish Mildmay," as it has been not unaptly termed.

The morning prayer meetings, held in a hall in Tay-street, have been times of real waiting on God, earnest intercession on behalf of mission service at home and abroad being brought before the gathering for prayer and sympathy. Indeed, one special feature of this year's conference has been the prominent place assigned to missions. The subject chosen for consideration—"Weakness and Strength in the Spiritual Life"—was both weighty and worthy; yet but one meeting each day was devoted thereto; the others being given to evangelistic and missionary work of all kinds. Hence the outcome, it is hoped, will be the definite consecration of many young lives to the Lord's service at home and abroad.

The conference commenced on Tuesday in last week, when the theme specially considered was, "The sources and conditions of strength." Mr. W. S. Ferguson, of Kinmundy, who presided, read John xv. 1—11 and 26, and briefly dwelt on the great importance of a right understanding of the subject.

THE SOURCE OF STRENGTH.

Professor Laidlaw, D.D., opened with a closely reasoned address on this subject, as set forth by our Lord in John xv. Abiding, he said, is the whole secret of strength. Underlying it all is the grand doctrine of union with Christ. Listen to Him, "I in you," "ye in Me." Who is He? The Saviour who died for us; the Son of God who left the glory to come down and suffer for us; the One who said to the weary and heavy laden, "Come unto Me," and to the disciples, "Follow Me." Who is He? God in Christ, the Divine Christ, the Divine Son, the Word made flesh. He condescends to dwell in us and work by us his will and pleasure. His own figure is the vine; for He would have us learn that as the vine pours its generous sap through every branch, so He would have his life and fulness flow unhindered in each one of us. From the greatest to the least of us any grace or strength we may have, any fruit we may bear, is nothing but transferred sap of the heavenly Vine. That we should be in Christ is simple enough, but that He should be in us passeth understanding.

What, then, is our strength? That we should do our best and leave the rest with God? No, no. That He should do nineteen-twentieths, and we should do the rest? Not at all. What is it, then? That He should do it all. Does it not say, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling"? Yes; but "it is God that worketh in us." So it is co-operation in grace; God working in us to will and to work of his good pleasure. And notice, it is receiving from first to last. As old Marshall puts it: it is simply the reiteration of the commencement. As we came to Christ for pardon, so we come to Him for sanctification and strength. What are the channels or means? It is by faith, through the Word and prayer.

THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Rev. John Smith followed with an address on the Holy Spirit as the mighty Indweller, the force and power whereby spiritual life is preserved and maintained. He is in us to conform us to the image of Jesus Christ; and we on our part must yield to the conditions. We must walk in and by the Spirit, and we do so by seeking only and always the will of the Father—living in dependence on Him, guided by his Spirit, and keeping the conscience clear. We often grieve the Spirit by lack of consideration for the brotherhood, by lack of faithfulness, by lack of scrupulousness, and by lack of carefulness in business life. These things hinder spiritual life, and choke the flow of his fulness into our hearts and lives.

WEAKNESS: ITS SIGNS AND SOURCES.

The second day of conference was devoted to the consideration of Weakness in the Spiritual Life: how it begins and grows; to what it leads; how it may be removed. Lord Kinnaird presided, and briefly introduced the proceedings by reading various Scriptures bearing on the subject.

Rev. F. B. Meyer said that in thinking of the causes of failure we must begin by making it clear that Jesus Christ, having once taken possession of a human spirit, never ceases his tenancy. Much, however, may hinder and mar communion, and thus prevent fruitbearing. There is such a disease as spiritual weakness or decrepitude, and one of the saddest things about it is that it is not always discerned by the man himself. So in Hosea viii. 9, 10, we read of those on whom grey hairs were, and they knew it not. Moses "wist not" that his face shone, and Samson "wist not" that his strength had departed from him. The evaporation of spiritual strength is most insidious. The old round of duties and devotions continues to be gone through, but the life is not there.

The signs of decrepitude are self-satisfaction and complacency, lack of fervour, words without power, censoriousness, fault-finding, and uncharitable criticisms, increasing worldliness, and a failure to be moved by the presence of sin.

The causes may be traced in Israel's history as unbelief, sin unconfessed, unwillingness to yield to the will of God, the neglect of the Ark and of the Word, and a toleration of and following after idols. These things brought Israel to flee before their enemies, and they will expose the people of God to defeat and disaster.

Rev. A. Whyte, D.D., of Edinburgh, followed with what he called an historical illustration of the subject; being an account of a day as spent by William Law, author of "Serious Call." With a mingling of devotional fervour and clear insight into the underlying principle of the devout life, Dr. Whyte enchained the interest of his audience until long past the usual hour for adjourning. He told how Law, who lived at King's Cliffe, Northamptonshire, as a bachelor, was accustomed to rise at five o'clock every morning because unwilling that the labourers should be in the fields before he had commenced to serve his Master, and he said "he thought it shameful that Christian men should lie curling in their bed whilst the angels in heaven were sing Holy, holy, holy."

Proceeding, Dr. Whyte said that Law was accustomed to spend the intervening hours from his rising until breakfast at nine o'clock in severe study, so that he became one of the most learned men of his time. Before taking his breakfast he spent the first of four daily seasons of a quarter of an hour in communion with God, asking for the grace of humility. After breakfast he was accustomed to dispense hospitality to all who came to his open window for it, and the only time he lost his temper was when the cook did not make the soup strong enough for the villagers. Throughout the day he was in the habit of turning aside to hold fellowship with God, and at the close spent some time before rest in reviewing the past hours. It is such men, said Dr. Whyte, who, after having walked carefully with God, are in the habit of practising self-examination. On more than one occasion, addressing his audience as "you Evangelicals," Dr. Whyte urged the necessity for more method in the habits of Christian retirement and devotion, complaining that these things are left too much to haphazard, or to the dictation of whim. He further urged the desirability of having fixed hours for devotion, and concluded by exhorting his hearers to make themselves acquainted with the life of a man who so greatly influenced Dr. Samuel Johnson, McCheyne, and John Wesley.

Mr. W. S. Ferguson again presided in the evening, in the absence through illness of Lord Polwarth.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, in speaking of the maintenance of spiritual strength, gave a series of helpful and suggestive thoughts. To preserve this strength we must seek the united heart: "Unite my heart to fear thy name." The idea is concentration, as opposed to dissipation over many purposes and pursuits. Next we must see there are no taproots draining off our strength. A little leak may endanger a great vessel; so some trivial sin or habit (as man judges) may sap our force and power. Then let us learn to reckon on God's faithfulness. There are many things we must simply leave with Him, having no direct promise; but in things spiritual there are clear promises: let us get hold of these and rely implicitly on them. This is to learn the difference between praying and claiming. We may ask a loan, but we claim a cheque properly drawn and endorsed. So where God has promised, it is ours to claim; resting absolutely on his trustworthiness. Further, we must realise and count upon the gift of the Holy Ghost. True, every believer has the Spirit; but how few know his power and fulness for service! Lastly, let there be "still times" in our lives. Dr. Pierson's habit is to spend an hour the last thing at night, alone, silent before God; and he believes that he owes very much to these moments of still communion. By careful attention to these and similar matters Mr. Meyer maintained we should find our spiritual life deepened and strengthened.

A VETERAN'S WORDS.

Rev. A. A. Bonar, D.D., said: We have now met annually in this conference for thirty years, and I do not know that there are many here present who were with us at the first Perth Christian Conference. A whole generation has lapsed since then, and those who were our leaders are passing away, and getting very few indeed. They have crossed the flood, one of the latest called home being Dr. Omond, of Monee. They are waiting for us upon the Mount of God, and soon we too shall join the heavenly choir, singing praises to the Lamb that was slain. Yes, soon will some of us, unless the Lord Himself shall come and say:—

> Let all my saints together be > Unto Me gathered;
> Those that by sacrifice with Me
> A covenant have made.

Now, we are asked to consider—How spiritual life may be kept and increased. We have heard of promises and prayer, but there are a few other matters I would simply mention. We hear a voice from the throne of Jehovah speaking to us, "There shall no strange God be in thee" (Psa. lxxxi. 9). He will have no other God before Him. When we are weak it is often because we are not trusting in Him alone. One of the causes of Israel's weakness was that they went down to Egypt for help and made not the God of Jacob their refuge.

Then of those elders who obtained a good report, it is written that they ran the race set before them, "looking unto Jesus." So must we, "laying aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us," run, with patience, looking unto Jesus; or as it reads, "looking off unto Jesus." Spiritual strength decays when we look to others, but when we look off to Him we begin to run again.

Another source of weakness is the setting up of idols instead of God. We read in the early days of a Mohammedan conqueror in India who was bent on the destruction of all idols. He came to a very remarkable image, and was entreated to spare it because of its beauty, and art, and grandeur. They offered him a great ransom, but in vain. He lifted his mace and began to destroy, when out of the broken head rained down vast treasures of diamonds, rubies, and other precious gems. So in the doing of God's commands there is exceeding great reward. Our strength comes only from Him who alone doeth wondrous works.

I may indicate one other line of thought by referring you to Isa. xl. 31: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint." This is for the youngest believer here. The most illiterate may wait upon the Lord. Fellowship with God, fellowship with God: that is your strength and joy.

Another view of it is suggested by Israel in the desert. Their food came daily from heaven; so can we lay up no store, but daily draw from his fulness a supply for every need. We want to realise this constant dependance on Him every moment of our life.

Once more, if we would be vigorous, healthful, and increasingly strong, we must, as our Lord tells us, have our lamps burning, our loins girt about, and "we ourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord," so that "when He cometh and knocketh we may open to Him immediately." "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord, when He cometh, shall find watching." Let us every day be looking for our Lord, and this will do much to keep and maintain spiritual strength.

THE AFTERNOON MEETINGS.

The afternoon gatherings were devoted to Christian work. Mr. F. A. Brown Douglas, of Edinburgh, who presided on Tuesday afternoon, spoke of the condition of things among our young people as demanding close and careful attention. Children are not trained in the knowledge of the Scriptures as they were in former years, hence there is an increasing tendency as they grow up to drift away into utter worldliness.

Rev. Douglas Mackenzie followed with an address on "Strength for Home Duties," and very specially the duty of training children in the fear and admonition of the Lord. Mr. William Quarrier then spoke on "Family Religion," regretting strongly the fact that God is not now honoured in the homes as He formerly was, family worship being, it is to be feared, sadly neglected in many a Christian home. Mr. Boyle gave some details of the work of the Foundry Boys' Society and other agencies for reaching the young in Glasgow.

Amongst the speakers whose words awakened great interest was Lord Bennet, who not only gave an account of his own conversion on a ranche in Western America, but also pleaded with great force the claims of the utterly neglected cowboys of Montana and Wyoming (U.S.A.). He hopes, if he can find a suitable companion, full of power and fit to bear the hardships of the life, to return and labour in the Gospel amongst these cowboys.

On the second afternoon the Master of Polwarth presided, and the speakers were so numerous and their spheres so varied that we feel it better to group together the facts than merely to give a list of names. Work in Turkey and Asia Minor and Medical Missions in Damascus had two representatives, who spoke hopefully both of Mohammedans and Jews.

Work at home was represented by Mr. Wallace, the Free Church Rural Evangelist, who, once a farm labourer himself, devotes his energies to carrying the Gospel to farm servants.

Miss Leigh's homes in Paris were ably and eloquently represented as saving and helping English and Scottish girls employed in the gay city on the Seine.

Next came a pleader for the sunken Hill tribes of the Himalayas; then a missionary from South Africa, and another from the Livingstonia Mission, who thrilled every heart with his terrible descriptions of the horrors of the slave traffic. China was represented by a missionary of thirty-two years' experience, who pleaded for more workers. Lastly, Mr. Whytock gave a few further details of the Congo-Balolo Mission, and of the first tokens of God's blessing in the winning souls from among the Balolo people. From all parts of the foreign field came the urgent cry, "Send us more men and more women—the labourers are few, the work is great." If many be led to respond the object of these missionary meetings will be achieved.

On Thursday afternoon a united Communion service was held, addressed by Revs. Dr. Allison and E. W. Collinson.

THE EVENING GATHERINGS.

The meetings on the three evenings were devoted to evangelistic and general addresses; and it was very cheering to find the townspeople, who had of course been at work during the day, crowding in and filling the City Hall in every corner. Not only the townspeople, for many we found walked in each night from Scone, Collace, and even more distant villages; setting off at the close in little companies to tramp in the darkness the miles that lay between them and home.

On the first evening Professor Simpson, of Edinburgh, presided, and lent, by means of a few wise words here and there, much point to the whole proceedings.

GOD'S ANSWERS TO PRAYER.

Mr. William Quarrier, of the Orphan Homes of Scotland, moved many hearts with his wonderful story of answered prayer in connection with this famous Bridge-of-Weir colony. "Facts," he said, "are chiels that winna ding," and the tokens of a Father's care and bounty in regard to the origin and support of these homes are too strong to be disputed. Since the opening of the homes over 8,000 children have been received and cared for. About 3,500 of these have been sent to Canada, and the rest have been trained for home service. The funds have totalled to a quarter of a million sterling—all sent in answer to prayer. Mr. Quarrier's address seemed to stir greatly all who were privileged to hear it.

Gospel addresses followed by Rev. Douglas Mackenzie, of Edinburgh, and Mr. John Wallace, rural evangelist, and at the close large numbers lingered for conversation and prayer; not a few of these appearing to be deeply impressed.

A MISSIONARY EVENING.

The second evening was devoted wholly to missionary addresses; Lord Bennet presiding.

Rev. H. L. Mackenzie spoke of China's vast needs and of her dense heathenism. Amongst 350,000,000 of idolaters, 40,000 Christians are mere scattered specks of light. He believed in the future of the Gospel in China, regarded the native Christians as capable, energetic, and devoted, told of thirty-two years' experience among them, and closed with a strong plea for more missionaries.

Mr. T. Graham Bailey represented the Students' Volunteer Missionary Union for Foreign Missions. This is but in its infancy in Great Britain. It now numbers 300 members, every one of whom promises, if the Lord opens the way, to become a foreign missionary. Soon a travelling secretary will be at work visiting colleges and universities, and it is hoped the missionary movement among the students will attain something of the dimensions it has reached in America.

Rev. W. J. Sutherland followed with a remarkably fresh and thrilling story of work among the Hill tribes of the Himalayas, in Sikhim, and Darjeeling. His narrative deeply interested all who heard it, and I have asked him to give a paper on the work for insertion in a future issue.

Rev. James MacLaren represented Blythswood, and gave a long and minute account of the Kaffirs and Fingoes, and of mission work among them.

Mr. R. M. Gossip concluded with a narrative of the Livingstonia Mission in Nyassaland, and of recent advances into the heathen darkness in countries previously unreached by the ambassadors of the Gospel.

On the closing evening, Rev. Douglas Mackenzie sought, in a simple yet clear address, to gather up and present an outline of the truth expounded at the earlier gatherings as to spiritual strength and its maintenance. Not a few felt that in so doing he rendered good service to many who had been unable to attend the morning meetings. Gospel addresses followed by Messrs. John Wallace and John Scroggie.

REVIVAL IN SAN FRANCISCO.

A correspondent of The Independent of New York, writing of special religious interest in this western city, says:—

The movement has deepened and strengthened, and our city feels the mighty power of God in a marked degree. The opening services in the Pavilion for the whole city were largely attended, and of much interest. Saturday evening, August 20, Calvary Presbyterian Church was packed with Sunday-school officers, teachers, and pastors. Rev. B. Fay Mills outlined a vigorous evangelistic service in every Sunday-school the next day. Most of the schools carried out the plan, and the results were marvellous. In many schools, large and small, nearly every scholar, not already a Christian, signed a card, or otherwise signified their desire to begin the Christian life.

But the interest and prayers of the people largely centred in the service for boys only, at 3.30 p.m. Admission was by ticket, and for boys from ten to twenty-one years of age. The first suggestion of such a service came from the officers of the Boys' Brigade; and thirty of our companies, with six to eight hundred boys in line, marched to the meetings. Many of these lads had worked hard in distributing tickets and inducing their companions to come. Fully 5,000 boys were present. It was a sight such as few present had ever seen, and I doubt if any living man ever addressed such an audience. But would that number of San Francisco boys keep quiet during the sermon? This was the frequent inquiry. It was the first time that Mr. Mills had ever spoken to such an audience.

God gave him his message, and he has addressed no more reverently attentive audience in this city. Sometimes the hush was well-nigh painful. In the after meeting the scene was indescribable. In a very few minutes probably about 1,000 boys rose to their feet and said with all a boy's enthusiasm and heartiness: "I will accept Jesus as my Saviour." Over 1,000 cards were signed by them. Is it any wonder that strong men wept, and felt they had seen the glory of the Lord? Mr. Mills says now that services for boys shall be held wherever he goes. No work he can do has in it greater possibilities.

At the same hour Calvary Church was filled with an audience of girls, addressed by Mrs. Mills. In the evening all the co-operating churches were closed, and 8,000 people were packed in the Pavilion. An overflow meeting of 1,000 was held in a hall near by, conducted by Mr. Charles N. Crittenden. All the services are remarkable for the number of men in attendance, for the quiet, thoughtful attention given, and for the plain, searching manner in which the truth is presented. Each service thus far is fuller of power, and the week that remains will see yet greater things. Those who know Mr. Mills's methods need not be told that there is very little emotional excitement, that it is marvellously organised, and that he himself hides behind his message and his Master. Over 4,000 cards have been signed, which, making all due allowances for the undecided, indicates large ingatherings for the churches. To-morrow meetings will be held all day, and many hundreds of business houses will be closed during a part of it. And all this in San Francisco.

AFTER NORTHFIELD CONFERENCE.

It seems to be the purpose and hope of Mr. D. L. Moody to make Northfield a Christian Bible School, whose courses of instruction shall span the whole year, without vacation or intermission. The present year came near realising this hope. The interval of two months and a-half between the close and the opening of the Northfield Seminary and the Mount Hermon School has been nearly filled with daily addresses on Bible themes. It was only about two weeks after the commencement exercises of these schools that the World's Student Conference was opened, and several weeks after its concluding service came the ten days' August Conference.

Following this, without a day's interval, came what evangelist Needham facetiously called "the Conference Annex." Two weeks were filled with daily Bible addresses. Only ten days now remain until the opening of the school year, when some seven hundred students, under the care of from forty to fifty teachers, will take up their work in these schools. One month later, in October, the "Ladies' Training School" will again open its doors in the halls of the beautiful Northfield Hotel.

This experiment of prolonging the daily services two weeks beyond the Conference was not undertaken without some degree of anxiety, but the experiment became a success. During the first eight days the platform was occupied by Rev. F. B. Meyer. On the morning of each day he gave a Bible reading, having in view the practical end of lifting up the Christian life to the higher ranges of privilege and power, as well as of brightness and beauty. He spoke most winningly of "The Rest of God," of "The Life of Prayer," of "Power in Service," and kindred themes. Each evening he gave an address of singular beauty and spiritual power on some of the deep and sublime things of God in the Epistle to the Ephesians.

Tuesday was a Northfield "Field Day." Special invitations had been sent throughout the neighbouring towns and country for a grand rally of Sunday-schools and Christian Endeavour Societies, and the response was very encouraging. Mr. Meyer spoke in the morning, in his happiest mood, to the Christian workers on "Fishing with Christ," and in the afternoon he addressed the children in a similar spirit. Ira D. Sankey and Geo. C. Stebbins conducted the song services of the day with great acceptance.

After the departure of Mr. Meyer came the well-known evangelist, Geo. C. Needham, who occupied the next four days with a series of able addresses on the Jewish Tabernacle. As the fruit of thorough and long-continued study, he brought forth things new and old out of the wonderful storehouse of Divine types and symbols. He earnestly deprecated the too common neglect of the Old Testament, and maintained that it was impossible to understand the New Testament without a knowledge of the Old.

The last Sunday of the after meetings was filled with three services. Dr. Geo. F. Pentecost, who had just arrived from London, after a seventeen months' evangelistic campaign in India, occupied the pulpit, preaching two powerful sermons, and closing the day with a remarkable thrilling account of his observations and experiences in India.

Many hearts in the old world and in the new unite in thanksgiving to God for the spiritual and temporal blessings enjoyed during the Northfield "season" of 1892, and pray for still better things in the years to come. H. B. H.

Lights and Shadows of Mission Work.

No. VII.

I now come to the most marvellous mission I have ever known, whether considered in its length, or its results. It took place in a parish where I was working as a curate, after a season of special prayer.

The vicar was going away for his summer holiday, and asked me to arrange a fortnight's "services," by which street loungers and others might be attracted under the sound of the gospel. I had several working men to help me, and we began in a roadside field. A young brewery labourer was preaching, on one of the first nights of the effort, and taking "The Coat of Skins," with which God clothed our first parents, as his subject. It is as if I can hear him now—a fine strapping young fellow, with a powerful voice, inviting us to consider the folly of "the figleaf" idea, both in itself and in the attempts of man at self-salvation which he saw to be typified by it. In the next place, he asked our attention to the skins that afterwards became coats, while they remained on the living animals. "Here," said he, "you have a picture of Christ's life-righteousness, all ready for use, but the animals must die before their skins can be taken from them. And the Lord Jesus must die; his life-blood must be poured out for sin, before his justifying righteousness can be placed on the otherwise naked soul. The beasts are slain, however; their skins come off, and go in the place of fig leaves. God doesn't now find fault, for He looks on his own handiwork, and, mark you, God doesn't stop with applying Christ's sin-cleansing blood to the soul—He goes on, and covers what He cleanses with the robe of Christ's righteousness."

A poor man was in the crowd who, for more than a dozen years, had suffered from cancer, his soul having sunk into as deplorable a state as his body. This was like meat and drink to him. He went home to take to his bed and die; but so glorious was the testimony borne by his case to the saving grace of God that, in a ministry of nearly twenty-two years, I have scarcely met with anything like it. He affirmed, just before he died, that the twenty weeks he had spent in his bedroom—though to others they had appeared weeks of unspeakable agony—had only been as twenty minutes, because of the joy that had filled his soul.

Turning from the field to a schoolroom on the Sunday afternoon, we met with a most humbling experience. Our week-night hearers refused to follow us, and nothing remained, as we thought, but to turn again to the field. Suddenly, however, I asked my fellow-workers to sink on their knees and pray. The result was that, ere many more minutes had gone, the room was filled with artisans, labourers, old soldiers, tramps, and so many other sorts and conditions of men and women, that our hopes rose again to highest pitch, and we had every reason to believe that the power of the Lord was present to heal.

On the Monday night some of our men took what they called "outpost duty." They remained in the road and pressed passers-by to turn in and hear the Gospel. One dear fellow took seventy successive nights at this work, braving both sneers and insults: and when I think of him as he is now—one of the most successful ministers in "The Presbyterian Church of England"—I often wonder whether the humility and patience he exhibited then were not accepted and rewarded by God in his after ministerial success.

Every night now brought us a full room. If there were empty seats at the commencement of the meeting, we had only to ask God to fill them. When we arose from our knees it was to find that our prayers had been answered. The "Enquiry Room" door was thrown open at the end of each service, and directly men and women would flock into it. Some who had passed as Christians for years were brought to acknowledge themselves as lost sinners. I remember a Sabbath-school teacher, of whose conversion we had entertained no doubt. She suddenly rose from her seat and confessed that she had been deceiving herself. Another woman I had asked to come to the mission, and who had told me that she was a member of a dissenting church in the town, felt irresistibly drawn to the room when night brought the time of meeting. She could not have heard many sentences before a child began to cry. Uneasy in mind before this, the wail she heard seemed to have some connection with her soul's state, and she went down on her knees to seek God's mercy.

One remarkable circumstance was the power two hymns seemed to have in awakening the careless. The first, an old plantation melody, the tune being as wild as the words, was wonderfully effective in this. It began—

You'd better come to Jesus while you may.

Then, after each verse, with its pointed address to the thoughtless, came the chorus:—

Oh, turn, poor sinner, and escape eternal fire,
For you must stand the trial of that great day.

The other had a rather stronger claim to be regarded as poetry. Its leading idea had been taken from the parable of the ten virgins; and sung, as it was, night after night, amid such thrilling circumstances, its chorus—

Trim your lamps and be ready
For the midnight cry, seemed to have in it some of the tones of the archangel's last day's trumpet.

Week followed week, till our beloved vicar returned. It was on a Saturday night that he first saw for himself what great things the Lord was doing in his parish. The schoolroom was well filled even then, in spite of the counter-claims of the market, and chiefly with bonâ-fide working men. Of course, I instantly asked him to preside, but he most firmly refused. "Nay, dear brother," said he, "the Lord has been pleased to smile on the present arrangement of things, and who am I that I should interfere with it?" The sight that presented itself to him on the following Sunday afternoon was one not soon to be forgotten. Nearly a thousand people were packed in the large room of the parish, some of them standing through the service; and this state of things was continued, with but little change, for ten successive weeks, only concluding this special effort when we had finished our

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIFTH NIGHT.

The peculiar circumstances of this remarkable mission were these. There had been much prayer from the church for special blessing; but there were no extraordinary attempts made to get the people to our meetings—no bands, banners, or processions. We used a great many small bills, and did a good deal of "buttonholing"; but nothing more. The people were made willing in a day of God's power. Few of those we personally asked to come up refused our invitation; and, as far as we were able to watch results, few of those who professed conversion turned back again to the world. Then, again, with the exception of a few words I spoke each night myself, and an occasional brief address from our vicar, the speakers were, for the greater part, working-men—their only theme, the substitutionary work of the Lord Jesus Christ. But God's blessing seemed to be on all we did, and even on our very handbills. We put AT THE TOP of most of these the first verse of a well-known hymn, so that whether receiving it at the door, in the street, or in the market, the eyes of the one to whom it was given fell on the blended exhortation and inquiry—

Stop, poor sinner—stop and think,
Before you further go,
Will you sport upon the brink
Of everlasting woe?

And very strong reasons we had for believing that, in this way, many thoughtless ones were made to think.

I should like, before leaving this "mission," to offer the readers of THE CHRISTIAN one suggestion. It has become the established fashion now to make very lengthy preparation for such missions. I have more than once been invited to conduct one, twelve months beforehand; once I was asked to give promise to do so two years before the time arranged for. I may be wrong, but I believe this long anticipation often proves a great mistake, and certain it is that it often leaves a feeling of deep disappointment in the minds of many "workers" when the excitement of the "mission" has died away. Altering the position of the words as they appear in the text, I feel it best to PRAY AND WATCH—to pray for a special blessing, and to watch for such marks of God's presence in the church as shall show that such prayer is about to be answered. Then, as when that news was sent forth through Capernaum which drew such crowds to the house where Jesus was, let all methods, ordinary and extraordinary, be used to make people avail themselves of OPPORTUNITY. I believe, with regard to special opportunity, the Lord often moves in Spirit as, when on earth, He moved in person.

Soon after this mission at B——* was finished, we were permitted to begin another that lasted well nigh a hundred nights in a parish only divided from our own by a river, and we had never dreamt of continuing it more than a fortnight. I was preaching on "Lot's Wife"; and, a fearful thunderstorm coming on, circumstances were overruled by God to give to the service an exceptionally solemn tone. The after-meeting was of the most impressive nature. Some were praying, some were talking to the alarmed, and, to add to the confusion, a good woman belonging to the Methodists began to sing "There is a Fountain filled with blood." I was not at all surprised that some rushed terror-stricken from the room; but, nevertheless, that night, God took to Himself, from "the world," a fashionable young lady, who became one of the most honoured servants of Christ in the neighbourhood, and one whose early removal "home" was a blow to the whole of a large parish. There was little outward excitement after this; but the work went on till it was felt, as before, that the Great Healer Himself had departed. One more word and I have done. I was awfully distressed one night with the thought that I had played too much on the fears of sinners. In answer to prayer God referred me to Luke xiii., and showed me the closing door it speaks of. Then arose the still more painful feeling that I had possibly led some into a false peace. He turned my thoughts to the man who lacked the wedding garment, and asked me whether the king found fault with the servant who had been the means of bringing him in to the feast? This was enough; and I have often been comforted since then with what I learnt one night when returning home from one of these mission services.

EVANGELIST.

Imperial Mission Hall, Hanley.

THE tenth anniversary has just been celebrated amid much rejoicing. On Sunday, the 4th inst., the sermons were preached by Mr. Richard Johns, founder of the Manchester Ragged School Union, etc. On Sunday, the 11th inst., services were conducted by Mr. Wm. Baker, M.A., and Mrs. Baker, of London. At the various meetings our old friends the Pennsylvania Coloured Jubilee Singers (conductor, Mr. Archer) rendered valuable help by their exquisite programmes of slave songs, etc.

From Sunday to Sunday an aggregate attendance of 15,000 was registered. Notwithstanding the discouragements of trade depression, our poor people have done nobly, and everyone reports this anniversary as the greatest success since the start of the mission.

"Brethren, pray for us!" Help is much needed both for the ordinary funds and for the proposed new class-rooms for Sunday-schools, etc.

LANCELOT MIDDLETON, Superintendent.

Sheltering Homes, Liverpool.

AMONG the passengers who lately arrived in Liverpool was Mrs. Birt, of the Sheltering Home, Myrtle-street. She has been three months in Canada, and has placed satisfactorily the three bands of children taken out during the spring. She has been inspecting those placed out in former years, and returns much strengthened and encouraged by seeing the progress and improvement made by the young people in Canada.

Mrs. Birt, at the suggestion of the Canadian Government, also made a trip across the continent to the Pacific coast, viâ the Canadian Pacific Railway, stopping at various points to gain an insight into the condition of the great North-West and the openings for young people; these she found most promising. Those who have the courage to start for a new land, and willingness to engage in farming work, cannot fail to succeed if they go earnestly to work. They will find an exhilarating climate, which adds fresh zest to life itself.

The Sheltering Home, Liverpool, is now open for the admission of boys and girls over ten years of age, and Mrs. Birt will be glad to advise with any who wish to emigrate next spring.

DO NOT THINK that you will teach children by the simple truth of the abstract propositions which you put before them. You must win their confidence and move their hearts before your words will reach their souls.

* It is only fair to add that in this mission I received the greatest of help from the well-known evangelists, Mr. J. Wakefield McGill and Mr. Henry Lakin. Indeed, these two friends had the last week or two almost to themselves, as far as actual work went.

The Revival in Ireland.

The distressful country is highly favoured at the present moment in being the theatre of a concentration of evangelistic forces seldom found within such narrow bounds. Having passed through some of the northern counties, and left behind numberless traces of the Divine power and working through his agency Mr. Moody is now hard at work in the South. With what acceptance he is labouring our reports will show. As intimated elsewhere, he has been joined by Mr. and Miss Whittle. Rev. John McNeill keeps up the fight in Belfast; his work of the past week has been crowned with such result that he has been invited to stay on for the present week. At Dundalk Mr. Merton Smith is holding the fort and telling out the Gospel story with power.

The decision of the Dublin friends to erect a special building in which Mr. Moody may close up his Irish visit by a fortnight's services early in October shows spirit and earnestness. Surely the set time to favour Ireland has fully come. We append interesting reports from special correspondents at different centres.

MESSRS. MOODY AND VANCE.

In view of Mr. Moody's visit to Dundalk, a committee was formed of Christian workers from all Protestant denominations in the town. Mr. J. Barton, secretary of the Irish Evangelisation Society, provided a tent with good seating for about 1,800. Special trains were arranged to bring passengers by the four lines concentrating on Dundalk. The town is largely inhabited by Roman Catholics, and a considerable number of these attended the meeting of the two days.

The morning meeting on Sunday, September 11, was held in a pour of rain. The deep interest of the Christians was manifested by the large numbers who braved the weather, and they were well repaid for coming. After solos by Mr. A. W. Vance, and many hymns and prayers, Mr. Moody spoke with great power, dealing with the Christian's life in its every-day tempations and difficulties. This meeting seemed to give the key-note to the mission. The addresses were listened to with eager earnestness. The numbers who stood up to signify that they desired prayer, or to profess that they had found the Lord, were very remarkable, and far surpassed even the expectations of those who anticipated most result from the meetings. No such numbers as attended the meetings were ever seen assembled in our time in Dundalk for Gospel services. Those who stood up were from every class of the community, from the highest to the very lowest, and all confessing a common need of the great and loving Saviour. Some of those who professed decision had appeared to be Christians before, and some seemed so hard as to be supposed the most unlikely to be stirred. Surely it was the Lord who was working.

The meetings are being continued by Mr. Merton Smith, in connection with the Irish Evangelisation Society. He has laid considerable hold of the people, and a goodly number have professed conversion in the after meetings. Some give bright testimony of their new-found rest and joy in Christ.

A DAY IN ARMAGH.

Armagh is an important cathedral town, but no more than a single day could be given to it—Tuesday, September 13. It was a day never to be forgotten by the townsfolk, as well as many who flocked in from the districts around. The weather was beautiful, and this enabled two meetings to be held in the open air. The first was at noon, and it was estimated that some 4,000 persons were present in the field which had been secured. Solos were sung by Mr. Vance, and a powerful Gospel appeal made by the evangelist. An adjournment was made to the First Presbyterian Church for a second meeting, at which large numbers who rose for prayer were personally dealt with.

At four o'clock there was a crowded meeting in the church. It was addressed by Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, and impressions were made or deepened. At six Mr. Moody spoke to another immense assemblage in the open air, and again the church was crammed with those interested. The names of many enquirers were taken. Some valedictory words from Mr. Moody at nine o'clock brought the memorable day's work to a close. The evangelist and his party left by the night mail for Cork, the railway company having specially provided them with sleeping accommodation.

The whole town seemed stirred. Special trains and vehicles brought crowds from all parts of the county and from the neighbouring county of Monaghan. The ministers of the Presbyterian, Methodist, and other bodies mustered in great force; many regretted that the clergy of the Irish Episcopal Church did not show sympathy by their presence.

THREE DAYS IN CORK.

On Friday night Mr. Moody concluded a remarkable three days' mission in this city. Since the united invitations went to him last December, prayer without ceasing has been made by the churches to God for him. The committee were fortunate in securing the circus, a large wooden building recently erected, seated for nearly 2,000, and to which all sorts of people had been in the habit of resorting. The proprietor of the circus, Mr. Hill, acted in a most generous and kind manner towards the committee.

Preparatory meetings for prayer were held daily, and the meetings increased in interest. An excellent choir of over 200 voices was organised. With the exception of one short local line, every railway running into Cork agreed to give special rates for those desirous of attending the meetings.

The mission began in the Circus at three p.m. on Wednesday, when Mr. Moody was surrounded on the platform by a large number of clergymen. The hymn "Though your sins be as scarlet" was delightfully sung by Mr. A. W. Vance and a lady. Mr. Moody spoke with freedom and power on the abounding grace of God, and at the close an earnest prayer-meeting was held. In the evening an immense concourse of people assembled in the circus. The ploughshare of the Word went through many a soul that night, and the after-meeting, for which about 1,200 remained, showed that the Spirit's work of conviction was going on.

On Thursday afternoon Mr. Moody spoke of "Prayer." The after-meeting was a very blessed time. The circus was crowded on Thursday evening long before the opening hour, notwithstanding a storm of wind and rain. After a heart-searching address on "Regeneration" some 1,500 to 1,600 remained for the after-meeting, which did not close till after ten o'clock. The services on Friday, the closing day, were equally large, and the messages of God's servant were most weighty and powerful. The meeting on behalf of the local Y.M.C.A. is referred to on another page.

The number of known Roman Catholics present at the evening meetings, men and women, young men and lads, was very great. On Thursday night an overflow meeting was held in Trinity Presbyterian Church, addressed by the well-known Irish land agent and evangelist, Mr. J. Townsend Trench. There was another overflow on Friday night in the Lecture Hall, a large proportion of those present being Roman Catholics. Mr. Vance sang several solos at this meeting.

Results cannot be tabulated, but hundreds publicly expressed their determination to be on the Lord's side. We believe (says our correspondent) a brighter day for old Ireland has begun to dawn.

Mr. Moody, Mr. Vance, and Mr. Whittle (who had just arrived from America) proceeded to Limerick on Saturday evening.

MESSRS. McNEILL AND BURKE IN BELFAST.

Mr. Moody was most anxious that Rev. John McNeill should follow up his Belfast Mission, and through the kindness of Mr. McNeill's Scotch committee and himself this desirable result has been brought about. It was no child's play to follow the American evangelist. He had captured the city, and spoke to vast audiences upon whom the Spirit of God had moved like the autumn breeze bending the stalks of golden grain. Crowds had sought, and to all human appearances had found, the Saviour; many others were eagerly inquiring the way to Zion with their faces set thitherward, so that deep gratitude bound the people to Mr. Moody.

Mr. McNeill touched Irish soil on the closing day of Mr. Moody's visit. As we noted last week he saw the farewell meeting, which packed the vast Convention building with about 13,000 people, while numbers remained outside unable to get in. He watched the momentous proceedings and took his share in them.

It was to follow up this remarkable movement that Mr. McNeill was summoned from Scotland. It was enough to make him pause, speaking after the manner of men. God has, however, been helping his servant wondrously; he has made his way to the hearts of multitudes, and has filled the great vacancy well. Some feared that the immense crowds which flocked to hear Mr. Moody would largely drop off after he had gone. Those fears have not been realised. Although the weather has been cold, stormy, and uninviting, the wooden Pavilion on the Plains continued to fill up each day as it did through the preceding weeks.

Mr. McNeill has been seemingly at his best. His address on the first Monday evening on the slaying of the lion in the pit on a snowy day captured the audience. His sallies at the want of Christian enterprise, pictured by sitting down on his chair and warming his hands over an imaginary fire, talking to himself the while over the undesirability of going out on so cold a day to undertake so dangerous a task as killing a lion, stirred the spirit of many a broken-down Christian worker to new courage in fighting the battles of the Lord. All through the past week he has been preaching the old, old story in his own inimitable way to throngs of people which are in themselves a sight to see. Each night a goodly number have been enabled, so far as man can judge, to surrender to the Saviour.

Mr. McNeill's business men's meetings have been a remarkable success. Some local friends were afraid that active business men could not be secured in any large numbers to meet at 1.15 for a religious meeting. Every fear has been dispelled. The busiest men in our northern Linenopolis crowded St. George's Hall, and gave Mr. McNeill the most undivided attention. He well repaid them; all his addresses were of the very highest order. Sound common sense, keen wit, bantering humour, and pathetic appeal were blended in the half-hour's talk which Mr. McNeill gave to the most interested audiences we have ever seen.

If one address deserves special mention it was the one on Daniel. His point that Daniel had no "back-stair influence" at work to push him on, no influential uncle on the directorate who could put his nephew into a situation over the heads of more deserving men, told finely upon an audience of sturdy Northerners who believe in the blessing of God and the help that comes from their own right arms.

At the close of his Friday address on David and Goliath, groups of grateful auditors might have been seen gathering round the preacher to thank him for his earnest stirring words. Cases of restitution have been heard of through these dinner-hour meetings, but "the day" alone will declare the full extent of what God has wrought through the terse and telling and Scriptural utterances in St. George's Hall.

Mr. McNeill's old companion in arms, Mr. J. H. Burke, remained in Belfast after Mr. Moody's departure to carry on the service of praise and Gospel song in the great hall. His solos, rendered with so much heartfelt power and musical ability, have been most helpful in carrying the truth to the minds of the hearers.

A grave difficulty met the committee last week. They had agreed not to hold meetings in the Convention buildings during the three-day Convention of the Church of Ireland's Young Men's Society, which was arranged for September 19, 20, and 21. It was only fair to the brethren of that communion not to interfere with these meetings. In the meantime, however, the work had developed through Mr. McNeill. The committee could not break an honourable engagement with their Church of Ireland brethren, and they could not take the responsibility of stopping the great work being done in the Convention Hall, in which Mr. McNeill was willing to go for a second week. The way was made plain through the kindness of Mr. R. L. Hamilton, J.P., the Convener of the Church of Ireland Conference, who wrote to say that he would not interfere in the least with God's work, and that both meetings he thought could go on successfully and concurrently. This solution of the difficulty has been gratefully received on all hands, and a closer bond than ever binds together the different sections of the evangelical churches in Belfast.

Mr. McNeill, therefore, remains a second week in Belfast, addressing business men during the day, and general audiences in the evening in the Convention Hall. We beg the prayers of Christian people that God will continue and extend the interest in spiritual things which the visit of God's honoured servants has aroused and deepened, and that our land may quickly reach that happy condition when she will be among the isles that wait for God's law.

Let not any think, says Luther, that the devil is now dead; no, nor yet asleep. As He that keepeth Israel, so he that hateth Israel neither slumbereth nor sleepeth.—Thomas Brooks.

HOW TO WIN SOULS.*

By V. D. DAVID, TAMIL EVANGELIST.

THERE are five kinds of workers :—

1. Those who preach Christ with envy and strife (Phil. i. 15).

2. Who preach that they may be praised of men (John xii. 43).

3. Who preach that they may glory in the flesh (Gal. vi. 13 ; Matt. xxiii. 15).

4. Who preach Christ from love (2 Cor. v. 14 ; Col. i. 14).

5. Who preach because of duty (Luke xi. 46).

Many Christians are anxious to win souls, but when they hear the cost, they shrink back. If you are one of that stamp, do not read this, it will only be wasting your time. On the other hand, if you are anxious, earnest, and honest, I would gladly give you some words.

FIRST.—If you wish to become a soul-winner, your soul must have been already won. Are you saved? If not, you should not take his word in your mouth (Ps. l. 16-20). Do you know that your sins are forgiven? Can you look to God and say, "O Lord, I am thine?"

SECOND.—Are you really an anointed soul for his service? Are you called, chosen, separated (Rom. i. 1 ; 2 Cor. vi. 17). If you have not got these qualifications, you can never become a soul-winner. Many want to win souls according to their own way, and when they are disappointed, they put the responsibility on God, saying that He will convert the souls whenever He likes, but we need not trouble about it. If you say so you are entirely wrong. God never sends his servants out under these conditions. If you are a prepared soul you will listen to what I say now. A soul-winner must be consecrated as well as saved. What is consecrated? Separated from, consecrated to—(1) To be emptied of self, (2) to take the form of a servant, (3) to obey even unto the death of the cross. (1) Emptied of all—that is you are worse than nothing (Is. xli. 24). So if you are worse than nothing, there can be nothing in you. To be emptied of everything that the world thinks best (Phil. ii. 7, 8). (2) To act as a servant—true servants do not argue with the Master, but simply obey—obey at all costs. (3) Lose your life—be willing to lose your life for Christ, that means follow Him even to the death of the cross.

In order that you may be used, you must (1st) know the voice, (2nd) you must have guidance, (3rd) you must have a message, (4th) you must get wisdom. I will explain all these things.

After you are anointed for the service, you and God are agreed together. "Can two walk together except they be agreed?" (Amos iii. 3). So you will be able to know his voice when He speaks. "My sheep know my voice" (John x. 4). A child will not make a mistake in understanding the voice of the mother. As the child understands and knows the voice, it will exactly know what should be done when it hears the voice. In the same way you will know his voice when He speaks to you, and you will do the very thing He wants you to do. "This is the way, walk ye in it" (Is. xxx. 21).

(2) GUIDANCE.—"I will guide thee with mine eye" (Ps. xxxii. 8). So if you want to see his guidance, you must have your eyes fixed on Him. If you have taken your eyes away from Him, you will not be able to know his guidance, for He guides you by his eye. Many people do not know when to speak and when not to speak, for their eyes are off Christ, and they rush up to a person at a wrong time to ask him about his soul, and he gets vexed. Moreover, when a person misses the guidance he forces himself to speak, so is often disappointed at the results.

(3) MESSAGE.—What is a message? It is something directly from God, to give out. "Behold, I have put My words in thy mouth" (Jer. i. 9). The Bible is full of truth, but God gives a message from that whenever He likes. You may know how to preach, but that is not the message. A message is whatever God tells you to tell to others ; it may not appear to you to be the right one, but you must deliver it. The message may be simply, "Come to Jesus," as the woman of Samaria said, "Come and see." When you get the message it will burn your soul (Jer. xx. 9), and it will not be empty of words, and the words will also glorify Jesus. "The Spirit shall not speak of Himself, but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak." "He shall glorify Me" (John xvi. 13, 14).

(4) WISDOM.—Though you may have the message, you must get wisdom. What is wisdom? You must use the message in a way that will not drive a soul away. You must understand the way of the person to whom you speak ; some people like to be spoken to privately (Matt. xviii. 15), and they will be offended if you speak to them before others. Some are very solemn ; so you must speak with great solemnity, for if you are excited with those people you will drive the soul away. You should not expect them to come to your experience at once, but you must go to theirs, until they are brought to your experience. If you want to lead a child you must keep pace with the child till the child is able to keep pace with you. The child cannot at first keep up with your long legs. Many people do not understand your "Hallelujah" and "Amen," so you must ask God for wisdom, even in using these expressions. If you drive the soul away through your words, you are not a soul winner. Paul was all things to all men (1 Cor. ix. 19, 20). You have to be a Jew when you have to win a Jew, and a Greek when you have to win a Greek. I will give you an illustration. A butcher was converted, and he determined he would speak about Jesus to the first person that came to his shop the following morning. The next morning a young girl came with her basket to buy some meat. At the time the butcher was sharpening his knife, and, looking up, he asked the girl, still going on with his sharpening, "Are you ready to die, my girl?" No sooner had he spoken than the girl ran off with all haste, thinking he was going to kill her. The butcher blushed, and had lost the opportunity of selling the meat as well as winning the soul. How can you get this wisdom? You should ask God. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God" (Jas. i. 5).

MISTAKES IN WINNING SOULS.—(1) Many seem to think if they give up all their secular work and go out as missionaries, then only they are fit to win souls. Not at all, be where God has put you. "As the Lord hath called everyone, so let him walk" (1 Cor. vii. 17). You may be a missionary in the kitchen work as well as a parson in the parish. If you are faithful in the kitchen work, you will get the same reward as the parson, for you have been faithful to your Master in the kitchen (Matt. xxv. 21), showing by your cooking that you are a real Christian. So with the tailor, tinker, gardener, groom, shopkeeper, Government official.

(2) Some people are very much discouraged if they are not used like others. A carpenter has got many tools in his box. He does not use all daily ; perhaps to-day he only used his hammer, and the saw and all other tools, properly greased and wrapped up within flannel that they may not get rusty, remain unused. Yet those that are used and those that are not used are reckoned the same way : one is used by the master to-day, another is carefully wrapped up in the box, as that was the master's will that day. The same way you may not have any message for ten days ; the Master wishes you to sit at his feet and learn more. He wishes you to be quiet at his door. We are only to do his will : "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me" (John iv. 34). The person who goes with a message is just as good as the person who sits quiet at the Master's gate, as he is told, "Let Thy will be done" (Matt. vi. 10). Workers have only to do their Master's will.

(3) Some people may think, "Would I not do more work for my Master if I leave off this present work?" My friend, God is not pleased because you want to do more work, but He is pleased only when you do his will. For instance, in a battle all do not go out to fight ; some have to stay in the camp, yet both are reckoned the same, for they are obeying commands.

(4) Some people are not satisfied if they do not speak or pray in every meeting. If they are not asked to speak or pray they get irritated ; that shows they are not filled by the Holy Ghost. How can a messenger go out of his master's house without having a message from his master? People will not be benefited, because he had no message from his master, but used his own words.

(5) Some are not able to win souls because they try to win them to Christ before they win them to themselves. You must win a soul to yourself first by your love and then they will listen to you, and you will win them to Jesus. If you only have the words and not love you are not filled by the Holy Ghost. People do not care about your sermon, but they do care about your life. What is the life? Love is the life. Read 1 Cor. xiii., the whole chapter. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another" (John xiii. 35).

(6) Some try to win souls without mixing with them. They think it too low to go to cottages, huts, hospitals, streets, and so forth, and do not shake hands with common larrikins, but they move well in high society. If this is how you feel you are only a Pharisee, you are not filled by the Holy Ghost. "Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate" (Rom. xii. 16). If you want to win souls you must act like Christ acted. He was with rich men as well as with common publicans. If you do not take that form you had better give up the work.

(7) Some never expect souls when they deliver the message, but simply do it as a duty. You will never get souls if this is your case, for you are not earnest in this important matter. You must not blame God ; for if He gives you souls when you are not expecting, you will be surprised ; that shows that you doubt, so you are not the person filled by the Holy Ghost.

(8) Some are not satisfied simply to preach the Gospel. They want to give a lot of illustrations and many explanations, and Greek and Latin roots. If you are one of these you are not fitted by the Holy Ghost. You may use illustrations, but do not use them in the place of the Gospel, and do not be satisfied because you have said a good deal and think that will win souls. Only reveal the Truth, which is Christ—"I AM the Truth" (John xiv. 6).

In conclusion, a soul winner must have all the qualifications that I have mentioned, and he must never forget that he is only the common rod fitted by the Holy Ghost. All work is done by the Holy Ghost through you, and He is worthy of all praise and all glory.

Now, my brother, if you have not got this, get on your knees, consecrate yourself wholly to the Lord (Rom. xii. 1, 2), and receive the Holy Ghost by faith and obedience (Acts v. 32), and testify what God has done for you first, and do the Master's will only, wherever He puts you. Praise God for the blessed work!

THE MANCHESTER REFUGES.

STEADY progress and consolidation have marked the twenty-second year of the Manchester and Salford Boys' and Girls' Refuges and Homes and Children's Aid Society. It is deplorable to find how many among the youthful population of this great city and its surrounding towns come under the observation of the magistracy and police ; but as this beneficent institution becomes more widely known, its systematic help is being increasingly sought by public officials and Christian workers.

Intemperance on the part of parents is still found to be the most prolific source of child destitution and misery. The facilities for rescue and training have been much increased and improved by the extension now practically completed. Nearly two thousand destitute and suffering children were either entirely provided for or helped under the various roofs during the year, in addition to cases investigated and children protected by the Prevention of Cruelty branch, the attendances at the day nursery, and the discharged prisoners who accepted the invitation given each morning at the "Gate" to breakfast in the Mission-room.

The Central Refuge is the largest of the Strangeways group, and to it all applicants come in the first instance. Many of the inmates spend half their time in the school, and half in the workshops. Boys of working age, not provided for in the workshops, are employed in outside situations, bringing home their wages, and being dealt with like members of an ordinary family. Good organisation is a feature of the Boys' Emigrant Training Home, while a similar home for girls at Cheetham Hill still fulfils its useful Mission. During 1891 the two homes have sent forth sixty-nine boys and girls to Canada.

The Orphan Homes will always be a touching branch of the agency. Bethesda Home for crippled and incurable children is truly a house of mercy. A Seaside Home and a Summer Camp form part of the good work. Contributions of lost, neglected, and battered babyhood are nightly made at the portals of the Open-All-Night Shelter in Chatham-street, Piccadilly, by members of the police force and others, the former particularly exercising great tenderness towards their helpless charges. Mr. Leonard K. Shaw and Mr. Gilbert R. Kirlew are the hon. secs., and may be communicated with at Strangeways, Manchester.

By JOSIAH SPIERS.

All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all.—Isaiah liii. 6. O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself; but in Me is thine help.—Hosea xiii. 9.

HAVE you ever seen a sparrow? Of course, you say, "I have seen thousands." I will tell you a story about one that I saw some years ago. Returning from a walk one afternoon, I was rather startled as I went along the gravel path leading to my friend's house by a strange noise coming from the conservatory. On getting close the sound increased. I could see no one inside, so I hurried in, and found to my surprise that the cause of all this to-do was a poor little sparrow. It had flown in at the open door of the glasshouse, and seemed very much ruffled and perplexed to find that it could not fly out through the glass windows at the other end.

As soon as I entered, its fright increased tenfold. It flew wildly from side to side, and from pane to pane, dashing itself against the glass with terrible force. Whenever I tried to catch it, the poor little creature would dart away from me, just as though it were mad, and give itself such a frightful knock that it was evident that it would soon be killed. So I called a servant, and we both tried hard to get hold of the little thing. But it was no use. It seemed determined to kill itself. We were, however, determined to save it if possible. It made our hearts ache to see how fearfully the sparrow was hurting itself.

At last our foolish little bird gave his head a crack against the glass, and then fell right down on to the mould in a flower-pot, quite exhausted, lying there trembling and panting. We took it up very gently, and put the little weary thing into some cold water for a moment, just to refresh it. We then carried it out into the garden and laid it on one of the shrubs, fearing that it was too far gone to recover. But what was our joy, after a little while, to see it move, then shake itself about, and soon afterwards fly right away into a tall tree.

Having read my story, you must not skip over the rest. Having read the text, mind you pay attention to the sermon. The sparrow got itself into danger and trouble. Yes, it was its own fault. No doubt the pretty flowers in the conservatory looked very tempting; but it had no business to go in at all. And is not this just like the sinner?

Read Isaiah liii. 6: "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way." Also read Hosea xiii. 9: "O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself."

A missionary, addressing a school, observed, "There is nothing we can properly call our own," and put the question, "Can you think of anything that you can call your own?" "Yes, sir," said one of the heathen girls; "there is, I think, one thing. Our sins are our own!" Yes, dear children, your sins are your own, and every soul in hell will have to cry out for ever, "I'm lost, I'm lost! and it is all my own fault." You are indeed a sinner. You have sinned against God, and no sin can ever enter heaven. What will become of you? Let us look at our text again.

The bird soon found out its danger, and tried to escape out of prison, but it was easier to get in than to get out. See how hard the little creature tried to save itself. It dashed itself against one pane of glass after another, trying all ways but the right. And is not that just like the sinner? As soon as the Holy Spirit of God shows a little boy that he is a lost sinner, and in real danger of being lost for ever, the first thing he is almost sure to do is to try to save himself. "Oh," he will say, "I must begin to be a good boy, and then God will love me and save me." So he tries to behave better than he used to. But it is all of no use; he cannot save himself!

I pitied the sparrow when I saw it in such trouble, and I was quite able to set it free. Yet the foolish bird would not believe that I came as a friend, but flew from me as if I were its enemy. And so it is with the sinner.

When our dear Saviour Jesus Christ looked down from heaven, and saw that all the boys and girls, and men and women, were in dreadful danger, and quite helpless, his loving heart was filled with pity, and He left his bright home of glory in the skies, came to this world, and poured out his precious life blood. Now He stands at the door of the sinner's heart, and knocks again with that pierced hand from which the blood flowed. But no! the door does not fly open as you would expect. How is it? Why, the sinner looks on Jesus as an enemy, and not as a dear kind friend. Dear child, whoever you are, reading this paper, how have you treated Jesus—as an enemy or as a friend? Perhaps Jesus is knocking once more at this very moment. Open the door directly, and let Him come into your poor heart.

At last, when the little bird was quite weary and worn out with trying to save itself, it fell down utterly helpless. Now was the time to prove that I was its real friend. Did I beat and scold it for treating us so badly, and keeping us so long waiting. No, I saved it. I carried the little weary thing to the refreshing water, and then put it in the warm sunshine, where it soon soared heavenwards! Poor sinner, the sweet voice of Jesus says, "Come unto Me, and I will give you rest." Are you weary? Are you tired of trying to save yourself? If so, Jesus will gladly save you. Will you give yourself to Him just now? "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely" (Rev. xxii. 17).

Poor mistaken bird, you say, to try and get away from the friend who was longing to save it. What a much greater mistake the sinner makes who tries to get away from that dear Friend who is waiting to be gracious! Come then, at once, and drink of the refreshing stream of God's grace. Come and bathe your weary soul in the fountain of your Redeemer's blood; rejoice in the sunshine of his love, and set out on the road to heaven.

AN AFRICAN CONVERT'S LETTER.

ABOUT two years ago some young people in Brixton sent seventy Swahili Testaments to Uganda in response to an appeal from a native Christian who had written to Rev. R. P. Ashe, begging him to send out some Testaments. In each copy was a letter, translated by Mr. Ashe, stating that the books were sent by some young people in London who worshipped the God of the Bible.

A letter has lately been received by Mr. T. Aldous, of Streatham Park, from a native Christian at Rubaga. It has been translated by Mr. Ashe, and we append the translation, omitting a few repetitions. We have seen the original, which is written in a firm bold hand. Our young readers will read the letter with interest, and we hope will pray for the converts in Uganda, as the writer requests:—

"I have sent to you who are our friends in England. I rejoiced much, to see the letters which you sent us. I read mine, and rejoiced much. Thank you for sending the books of the Testament. Thank you very much, my friends. I salute you. But my heart, and my body, and my blood, rejoiced exceedingly, because of the words of the letters which you wrote to us. Mine I have by me, and when I read it it fills me with joy. My book which you sent me I read every day.

"My friends, I cannot now see you; but the words which you wrote us in the letter by which I can see, make me understand your feelings, that you are really our brothers in heart and soul, in our Lord Jesus Christ. But O our brothers! here in Buganda we pray God to keep us, and to guard you, and that He may grant us to continue in the understanding of his word, and that He may do the same for you. Pray for us; for He has all power.

"Here where we are in Buganda we are divided into three parties, and two of these want to put us to death. The Papists are not able to agree with us, for they wish to fight us. They are collected in a part of the country called Budu. Also the Mohammedans are in a part called Singo; they have obtained what lies at the side and we are in the middle; but we sleep in fear; for the French Bishop Monseigneur wrote to the representative of the company (I.B.E.A. Co.), "War with you Protestants is unavoidable." Well then, our friends, we are in trouble; for we have not peace, and I inform you of what is taking place in Buganda.

"Such is our position. Also we understand why it is they refuse to give us peace—they do not love the Gospel—and we who do, are pilgrims in this world, which is not the world we are of. As our Lord explains to us in the Gospel of St. John in the 15th chapter, verses 18 and 19 and 20. Wherefore our friends, pray for us mightily to God that He may give us his strength that we may not fear the power of these our enemies who surround us. Farewell."

THE BEST BEGINNING.

It was only one wee maiden,
But with willing heart and hand,
She pressed her rosy lips and said,
"I am going to be a Band,"

She didn't have to go so far,
This little maiden wee,
Before she found another one
Who did with her agree.

So they 'lected Molly secretary
And Ethel took the chair,
Though their minds were very hazy
As to what their duties were.

That day they made an iron rule
That each who joined, must seek
One other member. Then the Band
"Adjourned to meet next week."

So Mollie brought Clarinda
And Ethel found out Dan,
And him they made the President
Because he was a man.

Now it wasn't very long,
With such a stringent rule,
Before there really was a throng,
In fact 'twas all the school.

And they studied about the heathen
And prayed for their souls so sad,
And they worked to gather the pennies
To send them the tidings glad.

So just one little maiden
Who works with heart and hand
Is the very best beginning
For a Missionary Band.

"PRAYING MYSELF AWAY."

THE little missionary article, entitled "Praying Myself Away," which appeared in this column some months ago, has been reprinted, together with the pledge card. It was hoped that many Bible classes and girls' societies may form similar "Praying Away Bands" amongst their members, and thus increase the number of young ladies offering for the foreign field. Miss Tulloch, of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, was the first to go out as the result of this Prayer Union. In a recent letter she writes:—

"There are so few to keep the work open, and we see so many broken down and ill, but the Lord knows the weak places and the strong, and is manifesting forth his power. There is such a work to be done in praying for those already thrust out, so none need fear being unable to share in the work though they may never be sent from the home-land."

The band has been adopted as the inner prayer union of the Loving Service Union; and it is hoped many others will take it up. The pledge is the simple obedience to the Lord's command, "Pray ye." "We agree, God willing, to pray daily," and is printed in two forms, for scattered members, and for local bands. Sample copies of leaflet and pledge card will be forwarded by Mrs. Tulloch, 50, Grange-park, Ealing, W., on receipt of twopence.

AT NINETY SCHOOLS affiliated with the Ragged School Union there are training classes for sewing, cutting-out, carpentering, boot-mending, basket-making, fret-work, flower-making, and cooking.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Sun., Sept. 25, 1 Sam. xiv. 36-46; Mon., Sept. 26, xv. 1-11; Tues., Sept. 27, xv. 12-23; Wed., Sept. 28, xv. 24-35; Thurs., Sept. 29, xvi. 1-13; Fri., Sept. 30, xvi. 14-23; Sat., Oct. 1, xvii. 1-16.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—We have concluded a week of services for the children, conducted by Mr. Gilbert R. Kirlew, who is well known in Lytham for the great interest he takes in children. The meetings have been greatly blessed. After the last service a praise meeting was held, when many were the testimonies given of blessings received.—W. H.

THE CHILDREN'S HOLIDAY.—The daily outings arranged by Mr. John Kirk, secretary of the Ragged School Union, and Mr. C. A. Pearson, for the very poorest of London children, were brought to a close on Saturday. Since June 13th, sixty-nine parties of two hundred, and fifteen parties of four hundred, have had a grand day's holiday at Epping Forest, at a cost of £800, all of which was subscribed by the readers of Pearson's Weekly.

MARGATE.—The children's services on the sands at the west-end of the town, in connection with Shaftesbury House, the Seaside Home of the Y.M.C.A., have again been conducted by Mr. W. Monro Collings, with very gratifying results. Frequently at the afternoon service on the Lord's Day fully 700 children and adults assembled to listen to the Gospel story. A lantern service, which was held one evening, attracted a large crowd of people, many of whom would not care to be seen at a Gospel service during the day.

TEL SONO AND HER WORK.

One of the new voices heard on the platform of the Conference at Northfield, Mass., this year, was that of Mrs. Tel Sono, a high-class, refined, consecrated, Christian Japanese lady. It was an earnest, sincere, pathetic, pleading voice, that stirred many hearts with sympathetic emotion, and moved many hands to helpful service in the work to which the lady's life is devoted. Mrs. Tel Sono spoke first at a woman's missionary meeting, in Stone Hall, in the afternoon. Those who heard the address were so deeply interested that a strong desire was expressed to hear her again. Opportunity was accordingly given her to briefly address one of the largest audiences of the Conference. With charming Christian earnestness and sincerity she told the simple, touching story of her early life, and with a shining, happy face she poured out her heart in grateful recognition of the love and grace of her "dear brother Jesus." She also besought the sympathy and help of her dear brothers and sisters in Christian America, in behalf of the work she had undertaken for the welfare of her sisters in Japan.

Mr. H. M. Moore, who conducted the meeting, spoke hearty words of commendation, and at the close of the service he called on our sweet singer, Ira D. Sankey, to offer prayer in behalf of Mrs. Tel Sono and her work. The meeting was felt to be a time of very great interest, and several friends expressed their desire to further the effort in a practical way, their sympathy in behalf of the lady and her mission securing an addition of about 500 dols. to the fund she is trying to secure for her work.

Mrs. Tel Sono is of high scent. Her father was a philosopher, physician, and poet, and with his approval she chose the study and practice of law for her life-work, being the first female lawyer in Japan. During her experience in the courts of Tokio, she came to realise, as never before, the condition of her countrywomen. She came to America to study how to improve in some way their condition. While in San Francisco she found Jesus as her Saviour and Friend. After a series of trying experiences she was led into the plan that now engages her heart and life—to prepare herself and to secure means to establish a Christian school near Tokio, for the Christian education of high-class girls and women. Her heart burns to bring to them the good news of her "Brother Jesus," who has made her own life so bright and happy in his love.

Every penny given for her work is sacredly laid up for that one object. She calls it her "Jesus money." She hopes to secure 6,000dols. during this year. In December she proposes going to Japan, by way of England, to open her school. She has the assurance that God will prosper her. Lady Henry Somerset has promised to stand by her and aid her during her visit to England. Bishop Phillips Brooks cordially endorses her and commends "her devotion and great wisdom." Dr. William Elliott Griffiths, the well-known missionary preacher, and author of "The Mikado's Empire," who knows her and her country well, says:—"Mrs. Tel Sono is a refined and zealous Japanese Christian lady, whose great purpose is to do for her sisters in Japan what Joseph Neesima did for his countrymen. She desires to give her life to uplifting the women of Japan to the status which obtains in Christendom. No foreigners, however able and consecrated, can do the work and command the influence, especially among the upper classes, which a cultivated Christian native woman like Mrs. Sono may, by the grace of God and the help of American Christians, accomplish. Japan will never become Christian until the women, by becoming the disciples of Jesus, purify the home and cleanse their country of the licentiousness and idolatry that keep Japan uncivilised and pagan."

May God speed this noble, heroic woman on her Christ-like mission, and prosper still more the work of her diligent hands! To have known her, as a guest and a friend in the home, has been to us a great privilege and inspiration. To witness, as we hope to do, the realisation of her loving purpose in her own land, will be a great joy and consolation.

SCRIPTURE READERS IN IRELAND.

That the Word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified, is the object which has been steadily before the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland for more than seventy years. The records of the Society's labours during 1891 show men of unwearied perseverance and patience, finding their joy fulfilled in gaining access to houses long closed against them, and being able to open the Book, so as to make known the way of life to those who are sitting in the darkness of the shadow of death.

All through the year these faithful men were going throughout the length and breadth of Ireland—Irish speaking men in the districts in which Irish alone is spoken—seeking and finding opportunities to declare the unsearchable riches of Christ. No less than forty-nine have been thus at work in such large centres as Dublin, Belfast, and Waterford; and in towns, villages, or seaports, the work has been one and the same, reading the Word of Life. They have nought to do with a man's social or ecclesiastical position, his wealth or his poverty; but be he Protestant or Romanist, learned or ignorant, as they have opportunity, they delight to read the message of mercy as revealed in the Book. Again and again has the Lord honoured his own word to the acceptance of his great salvation.

One of the workers says: "I was heartily received by a good many who listened attentively while I read or quoted Scripture. I met with many anxious inquirers after truth. From my experience among the farming class of Romanists, I never knew them more anxious to receive the truth than they are now." Another: "One woman said, 'I thank you for your visit, but do not go into the next house, the woman is a sick Romanist and the priest has been to anoint her.' I said, 'I am just going there.' The sick woman asked, 'Who are you?' 'One who comes to tell you Jesus died for your soul.' 'But I am a Roman Catholic.' 'And has such a one no soul?' After a pause, 'Oh, yes.' After a little further talk she said, 'Glory be to God, Jesus paid my debt with his blood; but the priest never told me.' Calling again, she was so glad to see me. 'So you remember me?' 'Oh, yes; I shall never forget you and what you said about the blood which cleanseth me from all sin.' After the reading of Scripture, followed by prayer, she said, 'I shall never see you again here, but God bless you,' and she closed with a touching little prayer commending me to God."

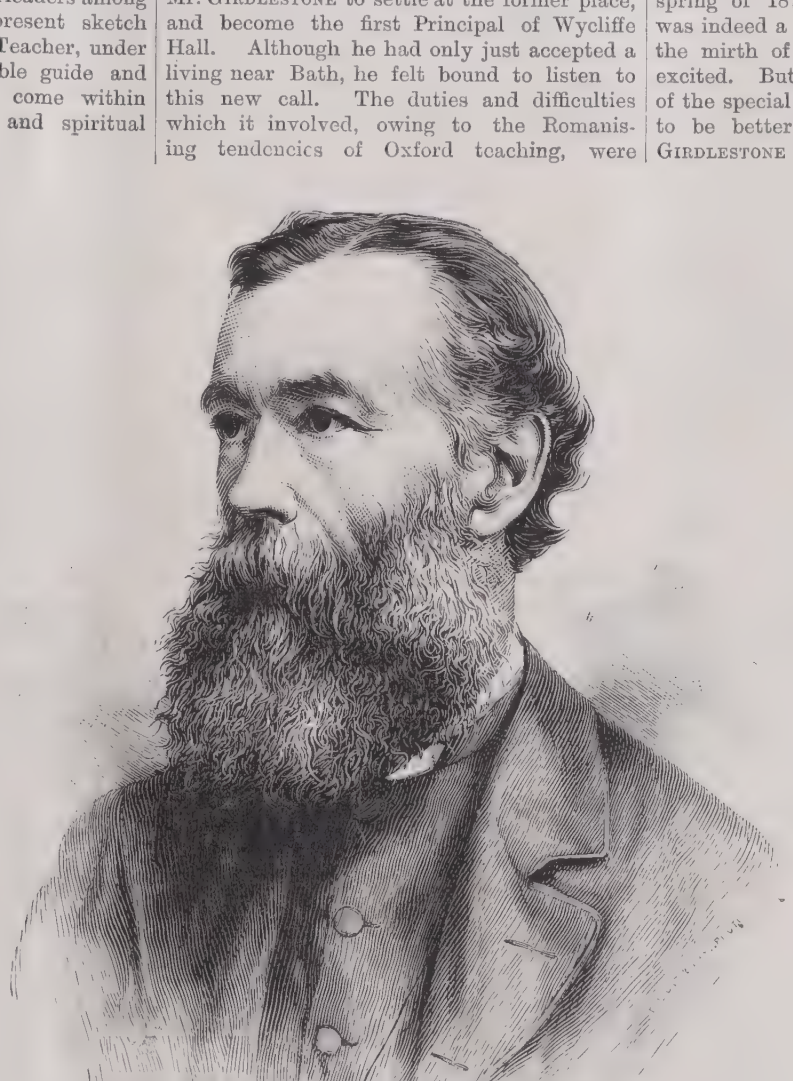
From time to time requests are made for the assistance of a Reader during special services or at the close. A venerable clergyman, author of "The Silent Comforter," writes that during a mission 108 persons entered into the vestry, after the services, utterly broken down under a sense of sin, and then they gave their hearts to Christ. He adds:—"I want a good, strong, able Scripture reader, and have lots of work for him. Could you let me have one for three months; from what I see, I have no doubt we shall have a glorious harvest of souls." Captain J. Kearney White directs this work, from the offices at 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin.

YOU CANNOT FENCE YOUR CHILDREN from danger by many regulations and restraints. If it could be done it would conduce to weakness and not strength of character.—Donald Fraser.

WHO WOULD EVER ATTAIN to a true knowledge of the Christian religion, in the full and just extent of it, let him study the Holy Scriptures, especially the New Testament, wherein are contained the words of eternal life. It has God for its author, salvation for its end, and truth, without any mixture of error.—Locke.

CANON R. B. GIRDLESTONE, M.A.,

CHRISTIAN SCHOLAR AND AUTHOR.



THIS week we give some details of the career of one who has long been well known as a Christian scholar and minister of the Gospel. There are many teachers who cannot with safety be followed, but whose learning makes them leaders among men. The subject of our present sketch is a loyal disciple of the great Teacher, under whom he has proved a reliable guide and helper to many who have come within range of his mental culture and spiritual experience.

Rev. Robt. Baker Girdlestone, M.A., is the sixth son of Rev. Charles Girdlestone, who was the author of a family commentary on the Bible, and many other works. Educated at Charterhouse, and Christ Church, Oxford, Mr. Girdlestone early declared for the service of Christ. After labouring as curate at Worthing, under a well-known tract-writer, the Rev. P. B. Power, he took charge of a parish on the borders of the Black Country, in South Staffordshire. The people were then beginning to discuss educational and trades' union questions; the experience was valuable, exercising Mr. Girdlestone's mind in directions other than his special studies and interests.

His more especial studies were in the field of linguistics. Possessing a strong and hereditary taste for Biblical investigation and literary work, Mr. Girdlestone was, during these years, qualifying for a career of peculiar importance. In 1866 he was appointed Superintendent of the Translation Department of the British and Foreign Bible Society. The duties of this post naturally brought him into contact with missionaries and translators all over the world, and also induced him to devote much attention to the original languages of the Old and New Testaments. Some results of these studies have been given to the world in instructive volumes, critical and practical, apologetic and edifying.

Ten years were passed in this responsible occupation, with which Mr. Girdlestone took pleasure in combining various congenial tasks, including the examination of candidates for the London City Mission, and an active part in the proceedings of the Christian Evidence Society. As he resided at Clapham he gave help in St. James's Church, and subsequently in St. John's and St. Matthew's, Brixton. These many engagements were all a delight, but at length they told seriously upon Mr. Girdlestone's health. In 1876 he resigned his post at the Bible House, though he has not ceased to be a helper in the cause of translating and circulating the Sacred Scriptures.

The following year a committee which had been formed for the establishment of Theological Halls at Oxford and Cambridge invited Mr. Girdlestone to settle at the former place, and become the first Principal of Wycliffe Hall. Although he had only just accepted a living near Bath, he felt bound to listen to this new call. The duties and difficulties which it involved, owing to the Romanising tendencies of Oxford teaching, were enough to deter any man from the task, but the work was an urgent need, and the post was accepted in faith and prayer. Mr. Girdlestone's first duty was to inquire into the methods of internal management and of teaching adopted in similar institutions. At the same time he had to consider what were the subjects bearing on ministerial efficiency which were taught by the professorial body at Oxford, and what subjects had, for various reasons, been kept in the background. At length he drew up a course of study in which the following subjects were emphasised:—The study of the text of the New Testament, the subject matter and age of the Old Testament, the various departments of Christian Evidence, the study of social and philanthropic questions and movements, and training in the use of the voice and in the power of extempore preaching and speaking.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, 55, Baker-street, London W.)

This curriculum was calculated to equip men against the inroads of erroneous teaching, and it was manifestly designed to make practical preachers as well as sound theologians. The Hall was actually opened in the spring of 1878, with one man in it. This was indeed a small beginning, and doubtless the mirth of Oxonians, young and old, was excited. But gradually the nature and value of the special training given at the Hall came to be better understood, and before Mr. Girdlestone retired from the principalship at the expiration of twelve years, not only had there been about a hundred residents and more than two hundred others who had attended the lectures, but the work was recognised as a good and useful one by many of the heads and professors at Oxford.

After two or three years of this work had passed, Ridley Hall came into existence at Cambridge, under the principalship of Rev. H. C. G. Moule, and whilst following the lines of Wycliffe Hall it soon eclipsed it in number of residents. In 1889 Mr. Girdlestone felt it was time to pass on the work to younger and more vigorous hands, his health having suffered a good deal through a severe attack of typhoid fever which he endured some years earlier. Rev. F. Chavasse, rector of St. Peter-le-Bailey, Oxford, was appointed to succeed him, and has since carried on the work for which he is so admirably fitted, with marked success.

Again taking up residence in London, Mr. Girdlestone was appointed to St. John's Episcopal Chapel, Downshire Hill, Hampstead, where he now ministers. Being relieved from such cares as are associated with a heavy parochial charge, he is able to devote his tongue and pen to the cause of Biblical truth. His earlier writings included "The Anatomy of Scepticism" (Hunt); "Dies Iræ," a discussion on the principles of the final judgment of heathen and Christians; and "Synonyms of the Old Testament" (Longmans), a very useful work which is now out of print, but will, it is hoped, soon be re-issued. The Religious Tract Society has published two small books written by him whilst at Oxford; one being a "Present Day Tract" on the age and authenticity of the Old Testament; and the other an elementary guide to Bible study, called "How to Study the English Bible."

More recently he has written "The Foundations of the Bible" (Eyre and Spottiswoode), a book intended to give an intelligible account of the age and authorship of the leading books of the Old Testament, and "Doctor Doctorum" (Shaw), a series of studies on the testimony of Christ to the Old Testament Scriptures. Thoughtful readers will be richly rewarded by a perusal of these works. A more popular work is "The Christian's Pathway of Victory" (Nisbet), the pages of which are practical and spiritual in a high degree. A few sentences from the concluding chapter will indicate the character of the book:—

We cannot too often remind ourselves that the aim of all God's redemptive work is to make us like unto Himself, that Christ may become the first-born among many brethren. This means that we should not only desire what He promises, but also love what He commands.

Life is much more than a series of prohibitions and duties. We must not neglect these things, but may we not aim at the higher sphere of existence? Otherwise, what can be the meaning of the words, "Your life is hidden, with Christ, in God"? (Col. iii. 3). Religion looks complicated when we look down, simple when we look up. In the one case we find ourselves encumbered; sin is on every side. There are sins which it is a shame to commit, or even to think of—yet they are not altogether beyond our reach; there are others which the world winks at or knows nothing about, but which a Christian recognises and sighs over . . .

The more instructed we are in the way of Christ, the more sensitive we are to these failures; and things which once we allowed now we forbid. . . . Success is attained by looking up rather than by looking down; and McCheyne was right when he recommended that for one look at self we should take ten at Christ. If it is good to say "Lord, I believe, help Thou mine unbelief," it is well to add, "Lord, I rejoice; help Thou my lack of joy." It is his good pleasure to give us the kingdom, and the kingdom consists in righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost (Rom. xiv. 17). These are the powers of the world to come (Heb. vi. 5), and we may taste them now, one and all of us.

Some years ago, the late Bishop of Oxford appointed Mr. Girdlestone to an honorary canonry in Christ Church. For two years, also, the Canon was Select Preacher before the University. If his words carry weight, no less do his public actions indicate the breadth and depth of his Christian sympathies. He has done good work in many directions, but he would be the last to embrace flattery or smile upon praise. His protestation would take the apostolic form, "Yet not I"; and his explanation would be "all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit."

The Canon is a vice-president of Dr. Barnardo's Homes. Last year he was a speaker at the Mildmay Conference. He recently gave a series of evidential lectures at Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. We trust he will long be spared to render to the Church of Christ services such as have made his past career so highly interesting and eminently useful.

Mrs. Seaman's Convalescent Home.

Undertaken at Mrs. Seaman's own cost three years ago for the London poor, this home at Brighton has been much in demand for Christian workers in home and foreign mission fields, and Christian women of limited means of the educated classes. While recognising the claims of mission workers, Mrs. Seaman's experience has shown her the special need of a house of rest for educated women of slender incomes, and those depending on their own exertions for their living. Many such have thankfully availed themselves of the rest and quiet of the home, and many more would be glad to do so if there were room to receive them.

Not unfrequently an application is made from a widowed mother with slender means for an educated young girl, either studying or engaged in teaching, requiring a seaside holiday, who could not be sent alone to a seaside place, but would be gladly committed to Mrs. Seaman's care, and so receive the benefit of sea air at as low a cost as possible. That the work may be carried on effectively, funds are required either to enlarge the present house or to purchase a house. Communications for full particulars may be addressed to Mrs. Seaman at Engedi, Eastern-road, Brighton.

Christian Endeavour.

HOW OUR SOCIETY WAS STARTED.

By Rev. J. J. Muir, Waterloo, Liverpool.

I am very glad to say something of how we were led to the adoption of the Y.P.S.C.E., for that has been one of the best things which have ever come to us.

I had long been interested in the children, and had for years rarely failed to talk to them for a little at one point in the morning service. But the very blessing on that and on several missions to children in my church, conducted by the preachers of the Children's Special Service Mission, raised new difficulties.

What was to be done with these good, well-taught, perhaps truly-converted children, as they grew on towards manhood and womanhood?

It was clearly impossible to provide Sunday-school classes for them all, or districts; besides it was dangerous to wait till they were ready for such, or asked for them. Many, truly well disposed, were clearly not fit to teach or win children for Christ. They did not know enough, nor had they had their lips opened.

I was greatly puzzled about this, all the more that I saw how enormous was the power for Christ that was running to waste everywhere. For this power of youth is the very power that forms and works tennis clubs, cycling clubs, cricket clubs, and endless other organisations, all which have wise and admirable rules framed and worked by the young themselves, close to the very church in which their enthusiasm and ability are lying idle.

I sent for papers, relative to the guilds which have been formed in Scotland in connection with the Established and Free Churches, and in England in connection with the Congregational body. But most that seemed to be aimed at in the guilds was already provided for in St. Andrew's congregation by an active well-worked literary society, while the direct dealing with the spiritual life of the individual, its cultivation, training to definite spiritual effort, and the discovery and provision of outlets for personal effort, were what I had mainly in my mind.

I was, therefore, ready, on finding in a newspaper a mention of the C.E. Society in America, to read with curiosity the "Pansy Book" called Chrissie's Endeavour, to see what this new thing was. It appeared to me at once, in the midst of some things which seemed foolish in the social plans described in that book, and some things which were inapplicable to the state of society on this side of the Atlantic, that this was the very society we needed.

Though I felt that the C.E. pledge was the strength of the society, I was still doubtful whether the stringency of the pledge would not frighten the young people. I called them together and told them what had been in my mind, gave an account of the Y.P.S.C.E., its pledge and working, distributed the papers I had received from Boston, and asked them to think over the matter for a week and meet me again. I found that the main difficulty was the phrase in the pledge promising to be present at and take part in every meeting, "unless hindered by some reason which I can conscientiously give to my Lord and Master Jesus Christ." At the second meeting I very carefully explained this, trying to make it plain, answering questions as to "a party at home the same night," fatigue, indisposition, and so forth. Indeed, the clause is of great value, as it teaches us all to try to bring all our common duties and hindrances into God's presence to be simply and honourably estimated there. Another difficulty was the monthly consecration meeting—was it like a Methodist experience meeting? Would it not tend to the manufacture of religious experience? It is really the monthly renewal of vows to be the Lord's, and it certainly will, if a living meeting, have an admixture of the personal element.

But we were to find out that all the supposed difficulties were imaginary, and the first surprise I had knowing something of what had been going on in the young people's minds, was, when I asked those who were prepared to take the pledge and become members of the society, to see sixteen young people rise.

The battle was really won; and it is, let me say, the right nucleus that does it. With a nucleus of true and earnest young Christians, however small, the right tone is set from the very first; the meetings are too much in earnest for any frivolity on the part of those who come in to see. And it is the best way to end criticism or gossip, which may or may not be good-natured, to get, after the young people have gained a little confidence, some of the older people to come in from time to time, and sit at the back and see what goes on.

Those early meetings were wonderful to me. As I sat in the chair and heard my own young people—young men and maidens—utter their first trembling words in prayer to God, showing a deep and true spiritual life, or give a text that had helped them, my heart was in my mouth. And the growth has been just as blessed as the beginning. For the numbers grew. A missionary society was started, the members being pledged to give whatever they gave to it, in addition to whatever else they might be giving to God, and we have now, say, £60 a year fresh money for missions, and a member of the society has been accepted by the Women's Missionary Association of the Presbyterian Church of England, and will go out in October, 1893, God willing, to China. Others are ready to go as the Lord may open their way. Giving in other ways, especially at the monthly consecration meeting collection, is very generous.

If any minister of Christ wishes to start a C.E. the general office in Boston U.S., or Mr. C. Waters (secretary of the British section), 56, Old Bailey, London, will supply him free with the necessary literature. He is ex officio head of the organisation, but he need not fear the tax on his time. The young people themselves will very soon organise and work their own society better than any one can do it for them. But the minister who stands back will be himself the loser. God gave freshness, courage, and initiative to the young to be a help to the older. And when once they seize the thought that each soul is brought to Christ to confess Him first, and then to work for Him, they will carry out their convictions with a sincerity and thoroughness which will at once reprove and refresh older Christians.

NOT MY WILL.

I would not have a will to rule
But thine;
For Thou art wise as Thou art good,
And none can better choose what should Be mine.

GOD'S LOVE.

The works of God are great,
All things on Him depend;
To all He giveth life and breath,
Upholds them to the end.
But oh, more wondrous far,
Surpassing every thought,
The marvels of his goodness are,
To souls his love hath bought!

THE LORD IS RISEN INDEED.

Tell all the world the Lord has risen,—
The Easter message, ever new;
The grave is but a ruined prison,—
Invisible, the life breaks through.

. . . . . .

And as the last upspringing grain
Breathes still the resurrection song,
That light the victory shall gain,
That death is weak, and life is strong;
So, with immortal vigour rife,
The lowliest life that faith has freed
Bears witness still that Christ is life,
And that the Life is risen indeed.

THE LORD'S COMING.

All God's dear and faithful ones are notably described by the Apostle to be such as love the appearing of our Lord Jesus, for certainly we cannot be true friends to those whose presence we do not desire and delight in. Now this appearing is either in his coming to us or our going to Him. O Saviour! come in whatever equipage or fashion Thou wilt, Thou canst be no other than lovely and welcome. Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly.—Bishop Hall.

FAITH AND SIGHT.

Infidelity and Faith look both through the same perspective glass, but at contrary ends. Infidelity looks through the wrong end of the glass, and therefore sees afar off those objects which are near, and makes great things little. It diminishes the greatest spiritual blessings, and removes far from us threatened evils. Faith looks at the right end: it brings close to our eye the blessings that are far off in time, and magnifies God's mercies, which have lost their greatness through distance.—Bishop Hall.

YOUNG MEN IN CORK.

Five years ago a Y.M.C.A. was formed in Cork, and it has been a power for good in the city. For some time it has outgrown its premises in South Mall. A new building is being erected in Marlborough-street, and the memorial stone was laid on Friday last by Mr. Moody, who said, in the course of a brief address:—"I am very glad to have the privilege of meeting the friends here to-day. I owe more to the Young Men's Christian Association than I do to any other agency. Thirty-two years ago I felt a call in my soul to work for God. I could not find any society that would have a man like me, for I didn't have many gifts; but there was a Young Men's Christian Association in the city of Chicago, and I left my business and went into that Association to work; and for the last thirty-two years I have been identified with the Christian young men of my own country and somewhat in this country. And one thing that makes me feel a little sad is the thought that I am growing away from the young men. I feel as young as ever, but they look upon me as an old man. The hair begins to turn grey, and young men don't feel quite as near me as they used. I want to say, if you are to do anything for young men you must do it when you are young. By and by you will grow away from them. I believe, down deep in my soul, if young men are to be reached, there is none that can do it so well as young men. I believe that this Association has been raised up of God to draw young men near to Him. The last prayer that Christ made was that his disciples might be one. I believe the Association has done more to answer that prayer than any other Christian agency. Before I went into Y.M.C.A. work I used to think the sun rose and set on the little denomination I belonged to, but afterwards I found just as good men in other folds and other churches. Active Christian work broadens out a man, and makes him nobler in his mind. Coming in contact with one another, and hearing of great works in other fields and in other spheres of life, helps young men.

"The Young Men's Christian Association was just raised in the nick of time. We are living in a different way to-day from the way our fathers lived. The young man of to-day has fifty temptations where his father had one. At the beginning of this century there were only a few people living in cities and large towns, and now nearly three-fourths of the people are located in large towns. In our country at the beginning of the century we had but few cities with large populations, but now we have them by the hundred. Fifty years ago, before the railways and the telegraph wires were laid, if a father had a son going to London, Dublin, or some other town he would go with him to get him a place to work in; and very often the man who employed him would board him and be responsible for his conduct and morals, and watch over him. But that day has long gone by. A father now does not go to the city with his boy. The moment a boy reaches sixteen or seventeen he wants to get away from home restraint, and he makes his way into some great city. Look at the pitfalls! at the palaces of hell, the gambling dens, and the gin palaces. Yet the churches are closed all the week except for a few hours, and if you have a good iron railing you put it up around the church. The Catholic churches are kept open all day, but most of the Protestant churches are kept locked up. The public-houses are wide open, and young men are drawn into these if they are not looked after. But these Associations are just raised in the nick of time, and young men can go into a city and get acquainted with people inside of a week whom it would take him years to get to know outside.

"When the churches are closed these Associations are kept open the week through. A young man comes up here and wants to get into good society; to know Christian men who will take an interest in him, and introduce him to Church people. He goes to an Association. If you want a young man you must take him within a month of his arrival in the city, or the public-house and the gambling-den will get him. A young man is a social being. He goes to the city to be near his companions, and if the Church of God does not reach out a hand to him you may be sure the devil will. Somebody is going to have him, and if the Church does not look out for him what is to become of him? I thank God that this door to salvation is opening in your city. This institution is going to live long, and when we are all dead people will rise up and bless you for erecting this building. I say to the young men of Cork, be aggressive. If you are not, your work is going to be a total failure. You have got to have an aggressive Christianity. I gave up singing 'Hold the fort' long ago. I want to get out of the fort now and storm the fortifications of hell. Go into the highways and into the public-houses, reason with the men you find there, and tell them of the better life. I have an institution for training men to go into these places to reason with young men, and there is no work I have ever engaged in that God has blessed more than this. At the present time, what we want is to call out a band of men who are willing to take their lives in their hands and lift up the lost."

Mr. T. A. Denny made a few encouraging remarks, and a collection was made which amounted to £40. About £2,000 are yet needed to defray the cost of the building, and the friends of young men in Ireland are invited to help. The General Secretary is Mr. T. A. Bailey. This ceremonial was a very pleasant incident in Mr. Moody's short stay in Cork.

DEALING WITH DOUBTERS.

BY REV. A. J. HARRISON, B.D.*

A working man of about thirty-eight years of age called at my house and asked to see me. He said, "I don't live in your parish, and you don't know me, but I know you. I have come some miles to see you. I heard you lecture once, and it was the turning-point of my life. I prayed God, when my wife lay dying, to give her back to me, and I did not give up hope till she became still and cold. When at last I knew she was dead—she was a Christian, and passed away in peace—a great passion of grief and rage rose up in my heart. I could not swear beside her, but I went into another room and I cursed God without ceasing until I was fairly spent. From the moment I knew she was dead I flung religion to the winds, and was, or thought myself, an atheist, until I heard you lecture. I don't know why I went or what your lecture was about; but one sentence gripped me and held me fast. It was what you said about there being a good deal of real faith running through a doubt that had power to excite men to frenzy, and that the patient pity of God would find excuses for such men. Then I knew I was not an atheist, for to curse God I must believe that He is.

"Well, I thought and thought about that; I couldn't get away from it. I said to myself, If my lass could only talk to me what would she say about it? Somehow, it seemed to me as if all at once I knew what was in her mind; as if somehow she made me know it. And it was that she was happy, but was waiting for me. She was sure it was better for both of us that she was taken when she was. I understand nothing about it, but I seemed suddenly to see God was good, and I threw myself down, again in a passion of grief and rage; only this time the rage was against myself and the grief was that I had doubted God. Since then I have tried to live worthy of God as I then saw Him and see Him still, and nothing disturbs my peace now. I have waited long before telling you, but I have come at last to say it." . . . .

I was taking a mission in a Midland town. The weather was anything but favourable, yet enough interest was aroused to bring together some hundreds of men in a public hall, including not a few sceptics and doubters. One night many questions had been asked in public, and many more in private, until I was pretty nearly worn out. I at last succeeded in reaching the ante-room, got my overcoat and umbrella, and took my way towards the hospitable home of the rector. I stepped out somewhat quickly, as the night was raw and chill, but, happening to pass a man whose face for some reason appealed to me, I slackened my speed, wondering whether by any chance he might be waiting to speak to me. There was, I confess, a struggle between the wish for shelter and rest, and the desire to do, if possible, some good. I turned back, however, and found my friend standing where I had passed him.

"May I venture to ask if you have been at my lecture to-night?" "Yes, I have."

"Would you like to have some conversation with me?" "Well, yes, I would."

"In that case would you mind walking on with me, as the night is rather cold?"

My friend and I walked up and down for, I suppose, nearly an hour, during which he told me much of his past history and present trouble. His case was an extraordinary one. This is, in substance, what he said:—

"I have become an atheist from the fear of death; I cannot remember the time when I did not dread to die. For years I prayed to God to take my fear away, but no answer came. When I had become a man, and could think the matter out, I came first to the conclusion that God did not care enough for me to take any notice of my entreaties, and then to the belief that on the whole it was more moral to think there was no God at all than that there was one who did not care. I do not know why I have attended your lectures, nor why I lingered in your path when I saw you coming; but now that you have spoken to me, and won my story from me, I confess it has been some relief to open my heart."

I said to him, "My friend, let us put aside for the moment the question of the Divine existence. Whether or no you are an unbeliever in God, you are not, as I gather from what you have told me, an unbeliever in right, good, or what we call duty."

He exclaimed fervently, and altogether forgetting that he was an "atheist," "God forbid!" And he seemed himself quite unconscious of any inconsistency; and, not in the least desiring any argumentative triumph, I took no notice of the remark but went on as follows:

"You would not say, 'I will be honest if honesty pays, or just if justice brings me comfort, or truthful if I find truth more profitable than lying.'"

"No, I would not. I were no man could I speak thus."

"You would not say, 'O duty, I will serve thee and live for thee if thou wilt take all sorrow out of my life!'"

"No, no! There can be no bargaining with duty."

"But, my brother, substitute for the word 'duty' the word 'God.' Have you not unconsciously been bargaining with Him? Have you not in effect been saying, 'O God, if Thou wilt deliver me from the fear of death, I will be thy servant,' whereas you ought to have said, 'I will be thy servant, come what may'?"

He exclaimed: "Stop, stop; I see it all!"

His atheism seemed to have fled instantly and utterly, and, raising eyes that were full of tears, he said, "Father, I yield." There came into his face a "light that never shone on sea or shore," and I saw that the fear of death had passed.

"YARNS, JUST YARNS."

In a bright volume entitled Yarns, Miss Sarah Robinson, of the Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth, sketches a very interesting story of her life and work. She says in the preface: "It is through the heart and not the head that the present-day soldier is reached; herein lies the advantage we women have in the various soldiers' Homes. When a man says 'You are very much like my mother,' or (as to me recently) 'You do so remind me of my grandmother, one feels so glad and hopeful of being really able to help that soldier; he will now talk freely and listen readily to his friend, even though he declines 'to sit in a hall in rows and be lectured,' as a man expressed it.

"Many incidents that I have related to our men are embodied in this little book, which does not aspire to be an autobiography, nor even a history of soldier-work. Yet I think these reminiscences of earlier days may find favour, even though offered in grandmotherly fashion as just yarns." There are a number of illustrations in the volume, which should make for Miss Robinson some new friends and sympathisers. Copies may be had (1s. 6d. each, postage 3d.) from the Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth.

Miss Robinson says towards the end of the book: "My first Portsmouth friend, Rev. J. Gelson Greg-son, who went to India and laboured extensively among our troops there, has now returned to England, and, at the invitation of the trustees, will soon (D.V.) take the superintendence of soldier-work here—living close by—while I still remain in the Institute as honorary and financial secretary and 'house mother.'"

A LARGELY-ATTENDED MEETING of the members and friends of the Irish Temperance League was held in Belfast last week to protest against any further increase of public-house licences in that city, where there are already no less 1100 licensed houses, or one for about every 250 persons in the community.

AWAKE! ARISE!

Notes of an Address at Belfast.

By REV. JOHN McNEILL.

"Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light."—Eph. v. 14.

Here is a text that is a sermon. You may forget what I say, but I want you to remember the text. I would put the trumpet to my lips and sound this text over and over again, "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." There is the sinner described; there is the sinner addressed; there is the sinner pointed to the Saviour. What more would you have?

"Awake thou that sleepest." The man who is not converted, the soul here that is not walking in the light of Christ's grace, is asleep; you are like one who at twelve o'clock in the day is still soundly snoring on his bed. It is not a complimentary description, is it? The Bible never was complimentary to a sinner; the Bible always speaks the plain, bare truth: that is why folks don't like the Bible, and don't like the preacher.

If you have not wakened up to knowledge of sin, a painful knowledge of sin, as a plague and a disease that has fastened on your vitals which you cannot shake off; if you have not wakened up to a knowledge of God, and of the judgment, of heaven and of hell, where are you but sleeping—soundly sleeping? The awful realities of existence are all round about you, but are unheard and unappreciated. If you want to rouse a man, you have got to rouse him; you will never rouse a heavy sleeper, like some of you, by standing up and washing your hands in invisible soap and water, and whispering polite nothings. If you are only wakened up, you will admit all I am saying. I will go bail for it, that you come to me to-morrow night, if you take Christ to-night, and you would say, "Preacher, you were right; my past unconverted life was just as good as a sleep, a dream—unreal; and I have only woke up to the realities of existence, to the realities of time and eternity." A man never forgets the time of his awakening.

Ah! my careless friend, or my busy friend, busy or careless with the things of time, but asleep as to the things of eternity, this is no world for sleeping in. There may be circumstances where sleep is appropriate, but that sleep of your soul is awfully inappropriate just now. Do you know where I once caught a man sleeping? I once caught a man lying asleep—a drunken sleep—between the four-foot, as it is called, of the railway, and the midnight express coming thundering down the bank. Such is thy state, oh, unconverted soul. Thou art asleep between the rails, and God's judgment express is coming down, and is almost on top of you. I wakened that man, didn't I? How could I pass him? And didn't I wake him rather roughly? Wouldn't I have been a fool if I had sat down and said polite things to him? Was I not his best friend when I gripped him and held him, and, half asleep and half awake, got him into safety. And am I not your friend to stand in the face of you to-night and tell you the truth?

In this wonderful little text of mine there is another trumpet blast—two trumpet calls in one text: not many texts like that! "Awake thou that sleepest, and"—and what? "and arise from the dead." What does that mean? I think there is a beautiful sequence in these two trumpet calls, in these two evangelical cries out from the preacher's heart, and out from God's heart, and out from the Holy Ghost's heart. First of all "awake;" that's the first thing. But every man who awakens is not a man who is up, is he? No, no! Some of us make a big difference between awakening and getting up. It is not so hard to awaken some of you, but oh, it is a job to get you on to you feet! If it were not for the spur that you have to go, some of you don't know when you would go. It is one thing to be wakened up, and another thing to get up. How many things come in between these!

And, spiritually, how true that is! I believe it is illustrated at every evangelistic meeting. If we are preaching the Word of God, we will have people interested, and they will sit back and say, "That is true, that is straight, this is plain; now that's the kind of preaching that doesn't fly over a fellow's head." You admit that this is true; you are awakened; but that is all. You do not come to Christ. There is one thing which keeps people from getting up; sometimes it keeps me. I have wakened and not got up; this was the fatal thing: I fell over again, and dreamed that I was up. Haven't you done that? I dreamed that I was up and dressed, and then afterwards woke with a start and an awful disappointment, to find that it was all to do yet. I'm afraid there are a lot of people that way in religion.

The life of unbelief and worldliness, and of taking the day as it comes—the devil is whispering, how sweet it is, how pleasant! He is telling you that to come to Christ is to come to a new Master who is hard, and whom there is no pleasing; and as to wages, nobody ever saw them. The devil says, "You know I pay you cash down." He is a liar; he does not. But he will dare to say it all the same. Come away to Christ; do not yield to the whispering seductions of the devil and the flesh. Spring to your feet like a man; it is high time—it is almost past time. "What meanest thou, oh sleeper? Arise, and call upon thy God."

Then, to help you to arise, do you notice what the text says? "Arise from the dead." What does that mean? That is the counter-blast to those seductions that are trying to grip you in their soft embraces while I am trying to arouse you. There is the truth, too, to describe what is round about you and the state you are in. Who would sleep in a graveyard? Who would live among bones and decay? And that is where you are living, unconverted sinner. "Arise from the dead." That is to help you make a jump; for you will be like them if you stay with them much longer, utterly dead, no more impressed at all with the rousing call of the Gospel; and the very Spirit of God Himself may say at last, "Sleep on, sleep on. Ephraim is joined to his idols, let him alone."

See the beautiful sequence of the text: first of all to awaken you, then to get you up, and then "Christ shall give thee light." When a man wakens under the preaching of the Gospel to the eternal verities of God's Word and truth, and springs up into activity, he usually finds that he wakens up to darkness and perplexity, and often in more or less of alarm, with fright upon his spirits. He awakens—to put it in Old Testament fashion—with Sinai gleaming in upon his soul. That sight, "that blackness and darkness, and voice of the trumpet, and sound of words," that lightning and thunder, and there is no peace and no rest. And nothing about him seems to give peace. Whenever a soul is awakened and aroused, then the Bible, that has been talking in thunder tones to you all along, suddenly changes, and brings in a new word, "Christ shall give thee light."

Trembling, anxious soul, look to Jesus! and the more you turn away your eyes from Sinai to another hill—the moment you turn your eyes to Calvary, you will get peace. Look to Him, the Light of the world. He is the Light that calms my fears, that delivers me from all my guilt and condemnation.

Christ shall give thee light—light to see by, light to walk by, light for all your path along the road; and light, you know, means everything here. Darkness means all that is fearful and gloomy and paralysing; light means everything that is helpful and hopeful, and liberating and enriching. Come to Christ: that is to say, let in the light of peace and pardon that streams from the crucified and glorified Saviour. Let Him shine on you, and let Him shine in you. Faith in Him is the opening of the eyes to let in the saving light. Dr. Horatius Bonar, the sweet singer of Israel, has beautifully written:—

I heard the voice of Jesus say,
"I am this dark world's light.
Look unto Me, thy morn shall rise
And all thy day be bright."
I looked to Jesus, and I found
In Him my star, my sun,
And in that light of life I'll walk
Till travelling days are done.

A HOLY LAND EXHIBITION.—Messrs. Lang Neil and Co., of 66, Chancery-lane, London, W.C., will open in October, at Brighton, a Holy Land Exhibition. Rev. James Neil, M.A., author of "Pictured Palestine" and "Palestine Explored," will supervise the arrangements of the exhibition and give daily sketches of Palestine life, in connection with a new diorama, comprising some thirty different scenic effects. The co-operation of Messrs. Holman Hunt, Henry A. Harper, James Clark, and other painters of Palestine and the Orient, who have promised to contribute important works for exhibition, cannot fail to make it a display unique in its portrayal of matters Eastern.

FARWIG MISSION, BROMLEY.

Some of the most fruitful work in the Gospel at the present day is done by "laymen" amongst the labouring part of the population; and when "ministers" take part in such meetings it is refreshing to observe how they unbend, and how much more at ease they seem than in the properness and starch in which the comfortable classes enjoy themselves at church and chapel. A very interesting anniversary meeting was held last week at the Farwig Mission, Bromley, Kent. About ten years ago Mr. W. J. Gibbs, a young business man, and others, commenced a mission in this neighbourhood; an iron room was built, which has been enlarged and added to, so that now the large hall seats 600, and again requires extension. There are class rooms and vestries, and though the erections are not architecturally elegant, the Father's business transacted in them is of the kind that makes the angels glad.

The first thing Mr. Gibbs explained, in showing me over the premises, was that prayer was their strong feature. The Lord's day is begun with a seven o'clock prayer meeting, attended by an average of fifty, and there are three or four more prayer meetings during the day. The evening meeting begins at 6.30, closing at 8; then a prayer meeting; then instead of the usual clearance, the lights continue burning, and those who wish remain in conversation. This affords young people who are not required home before half-past nine or later a place to meet in, better than the roads or streets at night; and gives an opportunity, sometimes more advantageous than a formal after-meeting, for close dealing with souls.

This is a Methodist Mission, and the ministers of the circuit take each a service during the quarter, and are thus in touch with the work. Mr. Gibbs, the secretary and practically the superintendent, has a very free hand.

This anniversary meeting was addressed by Rev. R. H. Lovell (Congregational), who spoke very timely words on the use of talents. The man with the one talent, which he wrapped in a napkin, illustrated the do-nothings and the give-nothings; he who had five talents represented the exceptionally gifted; those with two talents were people of ordinary endowment, who were earnest and faithful, to whom nothing came amiss, and who allowed no obstacle to stand in their way.

Rev. George Charter, the circuit superintendent, and Rev. T. Sanderson, his colleague, also spoke helpfully and hopefully, with high appreciation of the mission. The interest of the meeting, however, centred in the presentation to Mr. Gibbs of a handsome testimonial, consisting of a Bible, a large writing cabinet, and a travelling bag, "from the members of the Farwig Mission, as an expression of their affection and regard for his kindly services." Mr. Gibbs is not a preacher, but possesses human sympathy and love for souls. How many hundreds of average men and women, whose talents are now wrapped in napkins, might use them in some such work as this, and reap abundant reward here and hereafter. M.

Jews in Northern England.

For a long time it was felt by many Christian friends in Newcastle and the North of England that very little was being done to bring the claims of the Gospel before the minds of the Jews who reside in the northern part of England. It was therefore a matter of thanksgiving when "the Jewish Evangelical Mission" was begun about two years ago. It has as its superintendent the Rev. Aaron Matthews, who many years ago renounced Judaism, and embraced the Christian faith. Mr. Matthews is supported in his work by Mr. Jacob Jacobson, another convert from Judaism.

Excellent and suitable premises for carrying on Christian work amongst the Jews have been secured, and meetings of a very encouraging nature are held on the Lord's Day evenings and at other times.

Already the mission has borne spiritual fruit. Baptism has been administered to one who is now labouring energetically in the cause of the Saviour, and there are many others inquiring after the way of salvation. Though the work is under the direction of a committee of Newcastle gentlemen, Mr. Matthews has no guaranteed salary, and is dependent on the free will offerings of his fellow-Christians. I commend the mission to the prayers and practical sympathy of your readers. Mr. Matthews' address is 63, Ferne-avenue, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

REV. T. COOK AT THE CAPE.

Rev. T. Cook, the Wesleyan Connexional Evangelist, has held some remarkable meetings in South Africa. At Annshaw, on the banks of the Keiskamma river, between King Williamstown and Alice, he laboured with the hearty co-operation of the Christian chief Kama, who is himself a local preacher and class leader. The native schoolmaster interpreted the addresses to the Kaffir audiences. In his report to the Wesleyan Methodist papers Mr. Cook thus describes one Sabbath meeting:—

More than once I thought, as I watched the audience, that the Word was being applied to their hearts with even greater power than if I had been able to speak to them directly. Profound silence reigned during the sermon, but tearful eyes and distorted features indicated the keen piercing of the Spirit's sword. This developed into suppressed sobbing and smothered cries for mercy during silent prayer; but when we commenced to sing they could control themselves no longer. One after another, men and women hurried out to the communion rail, broken down and penitent, until the scene presented was one never to be forgotten. They were now all praying audibly, and the floor was wet with tears; such sighs and groans, such prostration, such agony of soul, I have never seen before. It was useless attempting to speak; even singing for a time was rendered impossible.

Each day afterwards the work grew and intensified. The experiences of the Sabbath were not only repeated, but the blessing was much more abundant. One of the early converts was the only heathen who held that position, but a man of such judgment and business ability his services could not be dispensed with. He was not only a man of considerable influence, but of substance. His conversion caused great rejoicing, because for thirty years he had held out against the truth, and had often boasted that he was a heathen. Two of his brothers the next day followed his example, and came out on the Lord's side.

The second Sabbath was emphatically the great day of the mission; none who were present had ever seen such a work of God. The Chief had sent out messengers calling the tribe (who number nearly 8,000) together, and the response was such that an hour before service time the church was more than filled, and crowds were still coming, so there was nothing for it but to have the service in the open air. A strange solemnity rested upon us from the beginning, which deepened into an awful sense of the presence of God and melting power as the service went on. About half way through the sermon the pent-up emotions of the people gave vent, and cries for mercy rent the air. Those in distress were hurried off to the church, and I went on with the sermon, but only to be interrupted again in a few minutes.

Some fell as dead, and had to be carried to the front. Others staggered forward, literally and when they reached the church seemed for a time in a state of utter collapse. Sobs, sighs, and groans were heard on every side.

Nothing before that I have witnessed so reminded me of what is recorded of the day of Pentecost. The excitement was intense, and no wonder, scores and almost hundreds were "deciding for Christ." In the midst of it all Mrs. Kama, the chief's wife, stood up and shouted something that I afterwards learned was as follows: "They are all coming, everybody is coming to Jesus; let them come!" Desperate earnestness was never better illustrated.

At first there was danger of chaos and confusion, but firmness on our part prevented all wild extravagance, and throughout the whole mission nothing that occurred was out of harmony with reverence and common sense. Altogether, on that second Sabbath alone, about four hundred persons came forward as anxious inquirers, nearly all of whom professed to realise God's forgiving love. The next day was very similar, one hundred and fifty names were taken, making the total of those who sought salvation during the mission over nine hundred. This in nine days is something to praise God for. We can only exclaim, "It is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes!"

TEMPERANCE CRUSADE AT BRECON.—In connection with the temperance mission of Lady Henry Somerset and Mr. John G. Woolley, at Brecon, South Wales, a determined crusade against the drink is being made. Recent victories in the police-courts will be followed up by personal and persevering application to almost every house in the town. Temperance friends may help to break the liquor yoke in the town by sending parcels of temperance tracts to Mr. David Devoir, Y.M.C.A., Brecon.

ROYAL ALBERT ORPHAN ASYLUM.

The annual distribution of prizes to the inmates of the Royal Albert Orphan Asylum at Bagshot, Surrey, took place last week in the spacious and handsome hall of the institution, at the hands of the Lady Mayoress, who was accompanied by the Lord Mayor. The asylum was established in 1864 as a memorial to the Prince Consort, for the Christian education of orphan and fatherless boys and girls belonging to the more helpless and neglected class in the community—viz., that above actual waifs and strays, and below the class that can command sufficient influence in friends or money to obtain entrance to other charitable institutions. In order to bring the benefits of the asylum within reach of these specially helpless children, the non-canvassing system of voting has been adopted. Her Majesty the Queen is patron of the institution, and shows her continued interest in its welfare by being an annual subscriber to its funds. Special attention is given to technical education. All the boys except the very young ones are taught a trade of some kind, and all the boots, clothing, and bread required are made by them. A capital band serves both as a recreation and for instruction of boys, who may afterwards be engaged in a like capacity in the Army. It is in contemplation, if funds permit, to set up a printing press, so that all the printing in connection with the institution may be done by the boys. In like manner, also, the girls are employed in domestic work during the day. The asylum has accommodation for 220 children, but the committee are unable, from want of funds, to fill all the beds, and many very distressing cases are now awaiting admission.

The children were seen at work at their various trades by the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, who, in company with other visitors, inspected the whole of the building, gardens, and farm. After the distribution of the prizes a hearty vote of thanks was accorded. The Lord Mayor, in returning thanks, said the Lady Mayoress and himself were satisfied that the institution, which they visited that day for the first time, was one of the best organised and best managed of its kind in the country. He was very glad to find that the non-canvassing system had been adopted, because the very poor and friendless obviously could not afford the heavy expenditure in time and money inseparable from elections where canvassing was allowed.

Y.M.C.A. MISSIONARY EXTENSION.

The meetings recently commenced by Messrs. McCann and Holmes, in connection with the Young Men's Christian Association Foreign Missionary work, have been continued during the past week. In addition to the places named in our last issue, the Y.M.C.A.'s at Sunderland, Newcastle, Bradford, Carlisle, Kendal, and Sheffield have been visited by these brethren, and very successful meetings held. The plan adopted has been to state the needs of work among young men in foreign lands, and to ask for practical support from the young men themselves. Special missionary boxes have been made, and the young men of the various associations have been invited to become holders. To this invitation a glad response has been made, over 200 boxes having already been taken home. Our brethren believe before their Association tour is ended this month that a very large addition to this number will have been distributed.

In order to make the work permanent, missionary auxiliaries have been formed where not already existing. In some cases a missionary parliament has been the outcome of the meetings held. Monthly circular letters from the missionary secretaries themselves when away in the East have been promised to each auxiliary, and the Associations will be visited for the purpose of still further deepening the interest in this vastly important work.

The Young Men's Christian Association has not yet risen to the high privilege and duty God has placed before it, in sending by their own free-will offerings missionary secretaries to organise work among their dark-skinned brethren in other lands. They are now beginning to realise that the fields are white unto harvest, and are determined to possess the land.

BAPTIST MISSIONARY CENTENARY.—The Centenary Breakfast takes place on Wednesday, Oct. 5, at Exeter Hall. Early application for tickets is necessary, as the number of tickets is obviously limited. The price is two shillings, and they may be had at the Mission House, Furnival-street, Holborn, not later than Saturday, October 1. Mr. George Williams has kindly consented to preside, and the following gentlemen will also speak:—Rev. Professor Legge, M.A., D.D., Oxford University; Rev. A. H. Lovell, M.A., Bromley; Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, M.A., Norwich; Mr. R. V. Barrow, M.P., Croydon; and Mr. Charles Townsend, M.P., Bristol

AMONG THE HOPPERS.

Captain A. P. Stone, of the Church Army, has been conducting special services among the hop-pickers and harvesters at Littlebourne, Kent. The meetings have been well attended. The last was held at Garrington Farm (Mr. J. D. Maxted) on Sunday.

A good work has been carried on amongst the large number of hoppers in the Goudhurst district of the Weald of Kent by the Hop-pickers' Mission, under the superintendence of Rev. J. J. Kendon, Mr. J. Burnham, Mr. Spendler and others. The spiritual results are very encouraging, the services having been extremely well attended. On Sunday afternoon about 500 hoppers were entertained to tea in front of Providence Chapel, and a bright and interesting service was held.

A special lady correspondent of The Daily Graphic is visiting the hop-picking regions near Malling, in Kent, and giving her impression of how the hoppers spend the Sunday, she thus describes a special service held:—

As might be expected, some special religious efforts on behalf of so large a gathering as that which annually comes down into these parts are made, not only by the local clergy, but by the London City Mission, who, from their active practical experience of the people in their homes, are also very successful in dealing with them when away. At Broadwater Farm, New Barnes, for example, a cheery series of Sunday and week-night services has been arranged, and no better centre could have been found, as some 670 pickers, to say nothing of an accompaniment of quite as many more young children, are employed immediately around. A large tent, with a good platform, has been erected, and brightly-printed texts hang around its sides. To this we bent our steps, passing the while a number of small bell tents, not quite so large as those now in use by the army, round which the first preparations for Sunday dinner were being made.

Though it had been announced that the service was specially intended for children, there was a good sprinkling of older folks present. Considering the scant accommodation and primitive arrangements for washing, it was highly to the credit of many mothers that the little girls were so neatly turned out. The men and big lads mostly came without any effort at smartening up their ordinary working clothes, but all followed the simple hour-long service of Bible reading, prayers, and hymns with marked respect and quiet. Mr. E. Barnett, of the London City Mission, who has visited the hop district now for five years, conducted it, and imparted a sensible touch of personal interest to it by asking if anyone present had any favourite hymn they would like sung. There was a moment's hesitation before one elderly woman rose and said, "Could the gentleman at the harmonium play 'What means this eager, anxious throng?'" The request was complied with readily, and all seemed thoroughly to enjoy Mr. Sankey's bright refrain of "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by." Mr. Barnett's address from the words, "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth," was short and straightforward, and at its conclusion several of the men and women remained to say a few words to him, and, as I heard in more than one instance, to tell him they were glad to see him in their midst again. The Sunday evening service appears from all accounts to attract very good attendances.

The War against Opium.

The Yorkshire branch of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade recently organised a series of meetings which have evoked much sympathy and interest. The hon. sec., Sir Matthew Dodsworth, accompanied by Dr. Pringle and Rev. J. S Adams as speakers, last week held meetings at Middlesbrough, Saltburn, Sleights, Whitby, Scarborough, and Filey; and this week they continue the work at Bridlington Quay, Hull, Harrogate, and other towns.

At each place committees have been formed of an influential and representative character, and many have felt that the blessing of God has attended the efforts made. At one meeting a lady present, who came from another part of England, asked for information, that she might do for her country what Sir Matthew Dodsworth is doing for Yorkshire. Others may be stimulated to take up the work, and so spread branches over the whole of England.

FAMINE IN CHINA.

The following letter was recently received by Pastor Frank W . The facts stated as to impending famine are corroborated by later letters from the same province. Contributions may be sent to us:—

I am thankful to say that, notwithstanding all the unrest in China, we are living in peace and safety. Even in this quiet little city, we too have had a little excitement, which but for the goodness of the Lord, might have ended very seriously for us. We have had scarcely any rain this year, and as the telegraph was something new and foreign, it was looked upon as the cause of the trouble. Accordingly a circular letter was passed round the villages calling upon the young strong active men to bring a saw or some implement, to destroy the apparatus on a certain date. It was known in the Yamen, and the district mandarin put out a proclamation, and went himself through the villages exhorting the people to do nothing rash. It was not generally believed that anything would take place, but sure enough on the day appointed several thousands put in an appearance, and after dividing into two bands, one going north and the other south, they very soon demolished the obnoxious "foreign poles," as they are called.

It was reported they were going to pay us a visit, and although some thousand or two came into the city, and went into the Yamen, they did not trouble us, although they had this intention, but were persuaded from doing so, or rather were influenced by the Lord not to go. They were actually on the way to the single ladies' house, but hearing that two ladies had been seen going out to a village they turned back. It was true two ladies had been seen going out, but one was a visitor and the other sister was at home. Since then, the air has been full of all sorts of rumours, but there has been no disturbance since the telegraph was cut down.

Strange to say, a little rain fell on the day the telegraph poles were cut down, but not nearly sufficient, and we have had none since, so that we are on the verge of a fearful famine such as has not visited this district before. The fact is this, last year the spring crops were a partial failure, the autumn crops completely so; this year the spring crops upon which they rely most are a complete failure, and so far the autumn crops are not planted. If rain does not come within a week or two, it means that before Christmas nine-tenths of the population will be in eternity. I don't know how we shall be able to stay here and see thousands upon thousands dying of starvation. Of course our first care is for our native brethren, whom we should like to be able to help even if we cannot help outsiders. But we have nothing to do this with. For a long time mission funds have been very low, and with food at famine prices we can only just make ends meet. The money you so kindly sent us has been very useful in helping a good many poor Christians, some of whom have been living on animals' food.

Funds are needed to enable us to keep our Christians alive, and if possible to help some among our heathen neighbours. Should the Lord send you money for this purpose, we shall be very thankful if you can cable the same to Tientsin. Even should we get rain within a week and the autumn crops are planted, it will mean a lot of deaths even then, as seven out of ten are without food now, and it will be three months or one hundred days before the autumn crops can be ripe.

Of course you will understand I am not writing in the name of the mission, but simply as a private member of the mission. With famines in Russia and India, and the late riots in China, the outlook seems very dark in the matter of relief, but I sincerely hope and pray you will see it is the Lord's will to make an appeal, which I am sure will have a response.

UGANDA.—It is beginning to be understood that if we once loose our hold upon Uganda we may never be able to recover it. The Germans and Italians must not seize the country, for they and we have agreed to a self-denying ordinance as to our movements in Uganda. But the French are under no such obligation. The Congo Free State may push its border further to the east if it wishes. No doubt the French in Uganda, without access to the East coast, would be in an uncomfortable position. But that might only mean new troubles for ourselves. If the Government decides to send a British agent to Mengo, they will have the cordial co-operation of the company. Bishop Tucker's departure for the interior has been delayed; but it is believed that he left the coast at the end of August. Captain Lugard sails from Mombasa this week, and should be in England by the middle of October.—The Record.

BERHAMPUR MISSION.

Berhampur is the civil headquarters of Murshidebad, is 185 miles distant from Calcutta, and contains over 30,000 inhabitants. Since 1824 it has been the centre of London Missionary Society work in the Murshidebad district, which has a population of over one million, almost equally divided between Hindus and Mohammedans. The loss by death last year of Rev. S. J. Hill, who laboured so long in this field, with rare qualifications and singular devotedness, has been keenly felt.

Rev. W. G. Brockway, who now has charge, in sending details of last year's work, asks the prayers of our readers for definite results. Natives engaged in preaching in the bazaar and town say that they are often greatly encouraged by the gathering of a good audience, though at other times they have no hearers though they try hard to get them. They find that the Hinduism of the people is largely formal; so that with more workers and more effort the way is open for pressing the claims of Christ. One of the Babus, Paul Biswas, has made six itinerant journeys during the year, sometimes accompanied, sometimes alone, and wherever he has preached the people have listened with great attention, and, in some places, have begun to think seriously of the Christian religion. He met with scarcely any opposition, but had many interesting discussions.

He says: "One day while I was preaching at Saktipore (sixteen miles to the south), I met a Hindu young man, who said he had no faith in the Hindu gods and goddesses, and that he believed in Christ as his Saviour. He bought a copy of the New Testament from me, and he had tracts in his house. He promised to profess his faith publicly, but he has delayed for the sake of his old mother. I met another Hindu young man at Jungipore, who said that he would become a Christian, and that as he had no near relatives, his way was clear. He bought some Scripture portions, and promised to write me."

In the schools and zenanas, though sometimes objection is made to Christian teaching, yet it is more often welcomed. The Bengali Christian community is rising slowly to a higher and better spiritual life, and the schools have Christian superintendents, and in many cases Christian teachers. These and other sides of the work have been well maintained, but it is hoped that an early increase in the staff may aid in drawing into the fold many who are now doubting and hesitating.

SOUTH-EAST AFRICAN MISSION.

Seventeen months ago the mission began with two workers, namely, Mr. Howe and myself. Since then God has sent seventeen others to our help, and it now numbers nineteen members, in addition to several associates and voluntary helpers.

One of our number started in July for the Zambesi, without any fixed plan. He may possibly be our pioneer to that needy region. Between him and our base of operations, Durban will be the new mission-centre in North Zulaland, near St. Lucia Lake. The site has been given to us by the Government of Natal. Mr. Olsen-Feyling and his newly married wife will shortly take possession of it, and live in a tent until their bee-hive hut is built. To enable them to itinerate together, we have provided a cart built for the purpose, and light enough to be drawn by the four mission donkeys. The station will be on a height above the thickly-populated fever district, in which they will be able to work with safety at certain seasons.

Amongst the Zulus in Durban Mr. Suter finds much encouragement. Forty are now in the inquirers' class, and we purpose having a Bible class for converts.

Three workers are itinerating through the colony with Bibles and books. They have numberless opportunities of preaching the Gospel in towns and villages, by the way-side, and wherever they pitch their tents.

An interesting meeting for railway-men in Durban is held at their dinner hour by the Misses Grieve, once a week, in one of the workshops, when sixty men assemble for half-an-hour.

We have just welcomed the arrival of three new workers, young men. They, with nine others in the mission, depend for their maintenance on what God shall be pleased to send us. This dependence means to us, on their behalf, a realisation of the nearness of God, and a freedom from care unknown until cast in very deed upon Him.

We shall be glad to correspond with anyone who may wish to bring South-east Africa before God's people at missionary prayer-meetings. Information may also be obtained from the hon. treasurer, Brigade Surgeon Robinson, 5, Western Elms-avenue, Reading. (Mrs.) M. S. Osborn-Howe.

MOHAMMEDAN WOMEN IN MYSORE.

The Church of England Zenana Mission began a small work amongst the women in Mysore in 1887, which, by God's blessing on the labours of Miss Anna Smith and her helpers, has since then been greatly extended. At present there is urgent need of a medical mission to work in concert with the other agencies; to this need the special circumstances of Bangalore give peculiar emphasis. The Roman Catholics have built a fine hospital of their own between the Pettah (native town) and the English cantonment, while a second native town has grown up around the station. In favour of this R.C. Hospital, the Government of the Rajah of the Mysore has closed its hospital in the Pettah, whilst our own Government have handed over to the R.C. sisters the entire sick-nursing of the English Cantonment Hospital. We need hardly point out what influence all this throws into the hands of Rome, especially over the native Christians, whose only refuges in times of sickness are these two hospitals.

Very early in our work amongst the Mussalmanis much medical help was given them by Zadir Bi, a valued Biblewoman and trained nurse, lent to our mission for a year or two by Miss Reade, of Panruti, and whose story has been so touchingly told by Miss Clara Lowe.* For the last two years Miss Anna Smith has had a small dispensary, under the care of a lady medically trained at Madras, but she is now leaving to be married.

More than a dispensary is needed, and it is hoped that the building of a very small hospital for women will be shortly begun. For this a devoted Christian and lady doctor is required at once. Two friends are already giving £50 a year each towards the support of this medical lady-missionary. We look to the Lord for the worker needed. May the Holy Spirit guide some willing hearts and skilful hands to take up this work! Communications may be made to Rev. G. Tonge, 9, Salisbury-square, London, E.C.—Yours faithfully,

A Late C.E.Z. Missionary at Bangalore.

Christian Schools in Syria.

I noticed in a recent issue reference was made to the work carried on at Swifat, near Beyrout, in Syria, by Miss Proctor. Having recently visited the important work in which this estimable Christian lady is engaged, I feel great pleasure in bearing testimony to the exceeding value of this institution. I spent three days holding meetings amongst the young people in the schools. Many of the parents also came to hear the Word of Life.

The school is well situated, and is doing admirable service, not only by the distinctly Christian teaching which is imparted, but by the remarkable adaptation seen in Miss Proctor to attract even the Moslem and the Druse peoples who live in and around Swifat. It would be a splendid investment to secure for the £300 named the parts of the building not yet possessed by Miss Proctor.

Of the many places visited and the large number of schools seen in various parts of Syria, none interested me more than the one at Swifat, unless I mention the orphanage and home for Moslem and Druse girls in Beyrout, of which Miss Taylor is the energetic and competent head. For more than twenty-five years this lady has carried on this extraordinary work with zeal, devotion, and success.

I shall be grateful if my letter leads some helpers in England to aid these workers, whose lives are given to and spent amongst the inhabitants of Syria. The principal difficulty is the poverty of the people amongst whom they labour.

Will many of your readers ask of God grace and wisdom to help in view of my arrival in Melbourne at this time of sorrow?

REV. THOMAS SPURGEON presided over a very large audience at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on the 14th inst., assembled to hear a lecture by Rev. W. J. Mayers, on "Homeless, Hungry, Helpless: What the Drink does for the Children, and what Christians should do about the Drink." The lecture was illustrated with striking photographic lime-light pictures, and many incidents of Dr. Barnardo's work among the children pointed the lesson of the Christian's duty towards the drinking customs of the day. Both the chairman and the lecturer received enthusiastic welcomes, and their words of appeal and instruction were listened to with the most thoughtful and appreciative attention. A very liberal collection was taken, of which Dr. Barnardo's Homes will receive the larger share.

GRINDELWALD AND REUNION.

SIR,—"What do you think of the Reunion Conference at Grindelwald?" "What is to be the practical outcome of these gatherings?" Such questions as these will be asked by many in relation to the above meetings. I can imagine some of my friends asking me, "What impressions did you receive as you listened to the several speakers?" "Were you favourably impressed or otherwise?" My reply is, "I was both favourably impressed and unfavourably." The desire for union is good, and must be pleasing to our Lord, but it seems to me that the way which is adopted to accomplish this end is wrong. I say this without prejudice, believing my ground for doing so is based on Scripture. If there is to be true lasting and vital union, that shall be a testimony to the the world, and an honour to the name of the Lord, then following seven links must form its encircling chain.

I. Faith in Christ is the Beginning of Union.—There can be no union on the basis of mere natural tie, for the union that Christ recognises is the union of the members of his mystical body, who are one with each other by virtue of their oneness with Him who is the Head. That this union begins with faith in Christ is plainly seen if we call to mind the words of Jesus in that great high-priestly prayer that his people may be one, as recorded in John xvii.; for there He prays, not only for his disciples, but for those who should believe on Him through their word (John xvii. 20). Those who believe in Christ have a common interest in his atoning work; are related through Him to one common Father; are sheep by Him in one common flock; are stones in Him in the one spiritual temple; are partakers from Him of the one Divine life; and are privileged to share with Him one common glory as the Son of Man. I need hardly say that the above blessings are not common to all men, but are confined to those who are "children of God, through faith in Christ Jesus."

II.—Christ Himself is the Centre of Union.—The purpose of the Scriptures is to reveal to us the person of the Lord Jesus, and the work of the Holy Spirit is to unfold to us the glory of Christ, and to gather us around Christ Himself (John v. 39; xvi. 14; Matt. xviii. 20). I remember at the recent Keswick Convention, that one of the outside meetings that was arranged was a missionary gathering on the Derwentwater. All the boats made for one point on the lake, where a rock projected. Around this rock the boats gathered, the occupants of each boat laid hold of their neighbour's boat, and thus they were kept from drifting as they surrounded the rock. It was not their hold of each other that kept them steady, but the rock which they surrounded. M. Theodore Monod put it well when he said, "Christ is the living unity of the Church." It is not a creed, nor a conference, nor one special line of teaching, nor a system, nor a Church, but the living Person of Christ, who must be our centre, and our centraliser; the nearer we get to Him, the closer we are to each other, as the pieces of steel scattered among the dust are drawn together by the powerful magnet, which fastens them by its attractive force to itself. As Dr. Stephenson said, "All the spokes of the wheel as they near the centre are nearer to each other." This to me was the one point that was overlooked by many of the speakers at the recent conference. They seemed to be working from the circumference of human methods, instead of from Christ the centre.

III. The Holy Spirit is the Power of Union.—"By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body" (1 Cor. xii. 13). What the life blood is to the body as it courses through it, so the Holy Spirit is to the members of Christ's body, for as the blood unites the body by diffusing itself over the whole of it, so the Holy Spirit is the one who unites the believer to Christ the Head, and causes oneness to reign in his mystical body, as we individually obey his promptings and heed his directions. If the blood ceases to flow through any member of the human body numbness follows, and unless circulation is restored corruption is the consequence. Tie a piece of string around the finger as an illustration of the former statement. It is the same in the spiritual realm. Let there be any string of worldliness, prejudice, unbelief, sectarianism, or self-opinion, and at once the Holy Spirit is grieved, and the power of union is annulled.

IV. The Word of God is the Basis of Union.—It was said that when the Severn Tunnel was being made, so careful were the engineers in carrying out their calculations, that when the boring machines met in the centre of the tunnel they were not more than an inch out. Why was this? Because the calculations that had been made by the experienced engineers were implicitly obeyed. Why does the battalion of soldiers act in a uniform manner? Because they all obey the voice of the captain, so as we all obey the words of Christ there will be unity of action, because we are acting under one authority, but if we get away from the sayings of Christ, then we are off the Rock of Ages into the quicksands of the shifting opinions of men.

V.—Love is the Evidence of Union.—"By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." It is not what we say, but what we are and do that demonstrates our attachment to Christ, even as the fruit on the branch shows that it is in vital union with the vine. And as the many bunches of grapes on the one vine all owe what they are to the vine (for the fruit is the abundance of the life in the vine), so all believers owe what they are to Christ, and his love should flow unhindered through them to each other in a practical and faithful manner. Love is always practical. Love is the reflection of the action of Him, "who loved us, and gave Himself for us." Love is reproductive, for as in nature like produces like, so every one that loveth shows that He is begotten of Him who is "Love."

VI.—Recognition of the Body of Christ is the Regulator to keep the Bond of Union.—The one thing that the Apostle had to complain of to the saints at Corinth, was that they did not "discern*" the body (R.V. 1 Cor. xi. 29), hence they called themselves after the servants of Christ, instead of after Christ. It is as we remember our oneness in the mystical body of Christ, that we see that the success of one member is the success of all, the suffering of one the suffering of all, and so on.

VII.—The Outcome of Union is a Testimony to the World that Christ was sent by the Father as the Saviour of Men.—Christ prayed that his disciples might be one that the world might believe that He was sent by the Father.

I trust and hope that the leaders of the Re-union Conference may see their way to keep closely to the lines of Scripture in their utterances and practice, and for this I shall pray.—Yours, very sincerely,

Grindelwald. F. E. MARSH.

MY DEAR SIR.—Of my grief over the deplorable divisions of the Church of Christ, and my desire to see those divisions healed, you have already had sufficient proof. You will, therefore, not misunderstand me if I venture to express the opinion that your references to the Grindelwald Conference in last week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN are more favourable than the Conference deserves. The pronounced Evangelicals who were not present at that Conference hardly merit the censure implied, if not intended, in your remarks. It is at least an open question whether, by their absence, they have not done more to promote true reunion than would have been possible by their presence.

To give my reasons for this opinion at any length, would involve a discussion of the methods of the Grindelwald Conference, and of the Lambeth proposals, which have been so often suggested as the only basis of reunion. It is not needful to do this.

I mention only three matters. 1. This is a proposal to reunite Churches. Representative Nonconformists, when they speak at Grindelwald, do not overlook this, and expect that their Churches are to be recognised in any scheme for reunion. "Churchmen," in their addresses, have emphasised the word Re-union, and have forced into that word the idea that all other Churches are to be absorbed in their own. This has created and is likely still to create confusion. Of such union the Bible knows nothing. There are not a few who begin to believe that the entire breaking up of all our existing Church systems would be the best possible means to secure reunion. If every one of our ecclesiastical systems is condemned by God, why should evangelical men, to whom the unity of the Body is already a blessed reality, take part in an impossible effort to unite them?

2. During this conference reunion overshadows other questions of very vital importance. Statements of an extraordinary character are made and allowed to go unchallenged. Peace is the object, and discussions that would raise discord are out of place. The all-important questions for Evangelical Christians to-day are the Inspiration of the Scriptures, the sole priesthood of our Lord Jesus, and the need of regeneration before membership in the true Church. But during my stay in Grindelwald the inspiration of the Scriptures as our Lord seemed to understand it was denied. Clergymen applied to themselves the term "Anglican Priest" without protest; and no one challenged the broad views of the Church propounded by Canon Fremantle. I do not make little of the subject of manifest union—who that reads our Lord's intercessory prayer can fail to yearn for it?—but I do feel that if we do not aim at this on God's own lines we do harm rather than good. That which God has committed to us, as faithful men we are bound to keep.

3. The most remarkable fact in connection with this Conference while I was there was that at no single meeting of the Conference proper was the Bible consulted. Why not? If "the Bible, and the Bible only, is the religion of Protestants," if it is "the judge that ends the strife," if it is the only authoritative guide for faith and practice, if it contains every direction as to ordinances and worship that the Church needs, the question must again be urged, Why not? The Prayer Book was opened, and one or two collects read from that at the beginning of each session. Why not the Bible? The Historic Episcopate was constantly insisted upon; but unless there is a difference between the Historic Episcopacy and the Episcopate of the Bible, why was not that consulted? I do not pretend to answer this question, but surely there can be no prospect of success to any attempt at re-union, which does not allow every matter to be decided by that infallible authority.

The answer to all this may be that more of our evangelical leaders should have been present to express their views. Well, I would not blame them for being there; but the path of duty is not so clear that they ought to be blamed for being absent.

I am sure you will receive this kindly criticism in the spirit in which it is given.

Yours in the One Body, GEO. WAINWRIGHT.

Bournemouth, Sept. 19.

[We really expressed nothing of the nature of censure of those to whom our dear friend Mr. Wainwright refers. Nor did we express a thought that Reunion was possible on the lines at present laid down at Grindelwald. We suggested, in the interest of the young people who attend, that such as those referred to should be present and express their views. —ED.]

Obituary.

REV. W. W. HOWLAND.

FOR nearly fifty years a missionary of the American Board in Ceylon, Rev. W. W. Howland died on the 26th ult., aged 75. He lived to see the Jaffna Mission grow until it has nine self-supporting churches and 2,700 members, while there are 135 mission schools and 8,500 pupils. One of his sons is president of Jaffna College, and his daughter is the principal of a young women's seminary.

DR. FRANCIS EDMOND.

Mr. Francis Edmond, LL.D., of Kingswells, Aberdeen, died recently, in his 87th year. He was a native of Aberdeen and was educated at the university, of which he was afterwards legal adviser for about half a century. Dr. Edmond was instrumental in getting the library of the great Latinist Dr. Melvin handed over to the university; he was also the father of the Society of Advocates, and founded a law bursary. He was a generous contributor to the funds of the Free Church and its Divinity College in Aberdeen.

REV. WM. GORDON.

The death is announced of Rev. Wm. Gordon, Presbyterian minister, Gilford, co. Down. He was born in 1834 in the neighbourhood of Glascar, to which congregation his family belonged. Having decided on entering the Christian ministry, he entered the old Belfast College, where he passed several sessions. He completed his college course at Edinburgh, and soon afterwards received a call from the Presbyterian church at Workington, in Cumberland. Here he laboured for some six years. He was installed at Gilford in 1853, and laboured with exemplary devotion until 1890, when he lost his health through an attack of influenza. He was beloved by his people, and held a high place in the affection and esteem of all classes of the community amongst whom he lived. He leaves a widow—a daughter of the late Dr. Cooke—and a daughter to mourn his loss.

M. GEORGE BARBIER.

Many will mourn to learn of the decease of Pastor George Barbier, who has for a short time been laid aside from active work among the poor French in London. In 1864, M. Barbier was called from the missionary schools, which he had been directing, to become the heart and soul of a work among the poorer classes of the French scattered in the metropolis. For two years, the work was connected with the Evangelisation Society; after this it became independent, and was entirely supported by voluntary contributions. The late Mr. Weatherley kindly superintended, whilst M. Barbier undertook to raise funds, and direct the Mission, which has now existed twenty-five years, In June, 1891, an attack of influenza brought him very low, and from its effects he never entirely recovered. M. Barbier was in his seventy-fourth year.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing upon a fourteen days' mission at Hackney-road by Mr. Matthew Burnett, commencing Sept. 22 Also, for blessing on a mission to be held at West End, Southampton, by Mr. W. Monro Collings, beginning October 1. For a meeting of the Railway Mission at Dartford on Wednesday, 28th inst. PRAISE for special blessing experienced during recent meetings for "Deepening of Spiritual Life," at Castleford, Yorks.

Personalia.

Dr. Lunn, it is stated, hopes next year to repeat at Lucerne the Re-union Conference experiment which he has tried this year at Grindelwald.

Dr. Schaff has so far recovered from his recent illness that he expects to deliver the address at the opening of Union Theological Seminary, September 29.

Rev. A. Tomory writes to say that the report that he proposes to retire from his work in Constantinople is untrue. He says:—"I have been connected with the work for forty-five years, and hope to live and die in it."

Dr. Geo. F. Pentecost, according to the New York Independent, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Marylebone Presbyterian Church, London, as successor to the late Rev. Donald Fraser, D.D.

Rev. Joseph Sidney Hill, Bishop Designate of the Niger, has left Liverpool for his see, charged with a two years' commission from the Archbishop of Canterbury. He will return to be consecrated in 1895, probably with a negro colleague.

Mr. G. H. Pember, who should have taken a leading part in the Birmingham Prophetic Conference last week, is still very unwell. He is suffering so much from weakness that it is necessary for him to put aside all engagements for three months at least.

Mr. John Hodge, president of the recent Trades Union Congress, is reported to be an upright, God-fearing man, member of a Christian church, and well fitted to lead his fellow-workmen to a sound and wise judgment. His excellent opening address bore evidence of a well-informed mind and a high moral tone.

Evangelistic Notes.

Rev. John Mitchell, 6, Downfield-place, Edinburgh (some of whose papers to young people have recently appeared in our columns), is free to conduct Gospel missions.

Whitehaven.—A special Evangelistic mission is being conducted in connection with Whitehaven Y.M.C.A. by Mr. Geo. Clarke. The mission was preceded by a series of special prayer meetings. There are already tokens of blessing received.

Barnstaple.—On Sunday, Rev. W. Smith, Pastor of Barnstaple Baptist Church, commenced a series of special Evangelistic services, the object being to reach those who do not at present attend any place of worship. The opening services were very well attended.

Mr. Matthew Burnett recently visited Hastings, and addressed meetings in the Calvert Memorial Chapel and at the People's Services in the Pier Pavilion. A correspondent writes:—"A marvellous power attended the message of life, and at the close of the evening service a number of hearers obtained peace with God. Many of the Lord's children experienced a deeper work of grace and a richer baptism of the Holy Spirit for service."

The Christian People of Chicago are taking hold in earnest of the problem of religious influence over the crowds that will gather at the Exposition. Among other means, they have organised a South End Gospel Association, which is to continue the open-air services, which for some time have been held opposite to gate "No. 2" of the Exposition, and will follow them up with daily prayer-meetings and evangelistic services during the Exposition. Mr. K. A. Burnell, the veteran evangelist, is much interested in the movement.—New York Independent.

Mr. Henry Thorne has concluded a successful mission in the Congregational Church, Annan. All the meetings have been well attended. Mr. Thorne's able and faithful preaching made a deep impression on many hearts, and at every evening service the workers had the joy of pointing anxious souls to the Lamb of God. The Bible readings were most helpful to Christians. A praise meeting was held, preceded by a tea, to which about 200 people sat down. From Annan Mr. Thorne went to Dumfries, where he addressed two large meetings in St. George's Hall. He is now conducting a mission at Hawick.

EXAMINATION IN CHRISTIAN EVIDENCES.—The books selected by the Christian Evidence Society for their examination next spring are as follows:—Kennedy's "Christ and Christianity," Row's "Manual of Christian Evidences," March-Phillipps' "Lectures on Divine Revelation," Butler's "Analogy," Flint's "Theism," Arthur's "Difference between Physical and Moral Law," Redford's "Prophecy," Westcott's "Bible in the Church," and Kennedy's "Divine Book." There is no restriction of sex, age, or religious denomination. Copies of the regulations may now be obtained from the secretaries of the Society, 13, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C.

The Book World.

Life of Henry Martyn.

A singularly valuable addition to missionary biography has been made by the publication of Dr. George Smith's volume, Henry Martyn, Saint and Scholar, First Modern Missionary to the Mohammedans. (10s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) We opened the noble volume with high expectations, as well as much confidence, for the "lives" of Carey and Duff demonstrate Dr. Smith's power as a faithful delineator of character, and evidence his warm sympathy with the cause of Christian missions. Our perusal of this narrative has been an unqualified pleasure. The author's personal knowledge of India, and his judicious manipulation of the material at his disposal, give animation to the most matter-of-fact statements, and sustain sympathetic interest throughout.

In the memoir which John Sargent published a few years after Martyn's death, many important details were suppressed, and never have the relations of Martyn with Lydia Grenfell been so fully described as in this volume. The pages also contain extracts from diaries and copies of letters which have not hitherto been used to set forth the story of Martyn's wonderful life. Was there ever such correspondence before or since, on the one hand characterised by such deep spirituality, and on the other marked by such perplexities and trials of mutual love? The great work of Bible translation is the subject of many passages, and Dr. Smith admirably exhibits Martyn as a missionary to the two Islams—in India and Persia, and in Arabia and Turkey. His friendship with Charles Simeon and other good men stands out prominently; also the persecution which, like them, Martyn had to endure. This volume gives all aspects of the life—filled with pious toils, and beautiful though short—and it fully deserves to be regarded as the standard biography of Henry Martyn. A portrait and several illustrations embellish the memoir.

Messrs. Partridge have added to their series of large-page coloured picture-books Our Playtime, by C. D. Michael; and Our Lifeboats, by William Luff. It would be difficult to conceive of more brilliant pictures for children, and the descriptive letterpress is full of animation.

The Land of the Ganges; or, Sketches of Northern India. By Rev. Jabez Marrat. (1s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) This is a capital book, intended for young people. The land is described, and its wonderful history outlined. Amply illustrated, the book should meet with very general acceptance.

Making a Beginning. By William J. Lacey. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) Here is abundance of encouragement for young people. Hundreds of stories and examples of great and good men emphasise counsels for life and godliness. A more readable and useful book, with such a praiseworthy object, it would be difficult to conceive.

The Ancient Irish Church, by John Healy, LL.D., rector of Kells, is a very attractive addition to the "Church History" series, published by the Religious Tract Society (3s.). The work is the result of much research and independent thought, and should not be overlooked by students. Dr. Healy writes for the ordinary reader, and his flowing style is well suited to his fascinating subject.

An interesting addition has been made to current monthly literature in The Young Woman, an early copy of which we have received. Its conductors have provided a varied budget of very readable and useful matter. There are articles by well-known writers on the choice of a husband, journalism, physical exercise, leisure, etc. Mrs. Mayo sketches the career of the Countess of Aberdeen, and Archdeacon Farrar beautifully interprets the story of Ruth. (3d. Partridge.)

From Advent to Advent; or, The Outline of the Gospel according to St. Luke. By C. E. Stuart. (3s. 6d. Marlborough and Co.) Mr. Stuart maintains that each evangelist had a definite plan before him when writing, and that the Beloved Physician introduces events in a moral order rather than chronologically. We should welcome outlines of the other Gospels equally lucid and detailed as this instructive little volume, which is, in fact, an exposition of the entire Gospel.

Epistles of Clement and Polycarp.—The two Epistles of Clement to the Corinthians, the Epistle of Polycarp to the Philippians, and the Teaching of the Twelve Apostles have been edited by Horace E. Hall, M.A., for the "Christian Classics" series of the Religious Tract Society. (2s.) There are useful introductions and notes, so that these interesting memorials of the Apostolic age may be intelligently approached and read with profit by all and sundry. The handy little volume will also be welcome to theological students.

Modern Science in Bible Lands. By Sir J. William Dawson, F.R.S., etc. We welcome a popular edition, revised, of this excellent work, which gives the results of long years of study, as well as an account of travels in Bible lands from the point of view of a geological expert. Much light is thrown upon a variety of Biblical questions. The author is an experienced Christian, as well as a scientist of world-wide reputation, and we trust his interesting and valuable work will have many readers in its present cheap form. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

What Rome Teaches, by Miss Cusack, is fittingly styled "a handbook of controversy." As Roman Catholic authority is quoted for the statements made, the manual may be commended as specially useful. It is written for the multitude, but it will also be of value to those who are well skilled in the controversy with Rome. "The Nun of Kenmare" may be supposed to know something of the Papal system. These pages not only demonstrate her knowledge, but show her zeal for Protestant truth, and her compassion for the millions who have been deceived by Romish teachings. (1s. 6d. Marshall Bros.)

Joined to the Lord. Thoughts on the Song of Solomon. By Annie Marston. (Marshall Brothers.) One of the marvels of the Bible is its unfailing freshness. It suggests something new to every mind. Of no book is this more true than the Song of Songs. Miss Marston's expositions and exhortations are full of holy thought, and if we are not able to adopt every one of them as indubitably the meaning of the text, yet we can assure our readers that each is in accordance with the form of sound words, and is strengthening, edifying, and encouraging to the soul stepping heavenward. It is one of the most practically useful books on the Song of Solomon with which we are acquainted.

The Epistle to the Ephesians. By Rev. G. G. Findlay, B.A., Professor in Headingley College, Leeds. (7s. 6d. Hodder and Stoughton.) This contribution to the "Expositor's Bible" series is in the strict sense of the word an exposition. Evidently the result of prolonged study of the Epistle, wide reading having been combined with close thought, the book will be very welcome to preachers and teachers. Professor Findlay is spiritual as well as critical, practical as well as scholarly. If the theme of the early chapters excites occasional eloquence of a high order, no less does the plain teaching towards the close of the Epistle, on topics relating to everyday life and experience, meet with admirable enforcement. This is a work of peculiar merit, written in a style consonant with the majesty and wealth of the Epistle.

The Design and Use of Holy Scripture.—Being the twenty-second Fernley Lecture, delivered at Bradford, 1892, by Rev. Marshall Randles, D.D., professor of Systematic Theology, Didsbury College. (3s. Wesleyan Methodist Book Room.) This is a work to our mind. With large knowledge and clearness of thought, Dr. Randles has treated a great subject in a masterly manner. It is significant that the Fernley Lecture should in two successive years have been devoted to the defence of the authority and integrity of the Sacred Scriptures. Last year's lecture, by the late Rev. F. J. Sharr, on "The Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures" was excellent. The work of Dr. Randles covers a wider ground, and is alike richer in facts and stronger in arguments. While both lectures deserve many readers, the most recent, with its very lucid arrangement and full index, is specially valuable, and has our hearty commendation.

Another new candidate for juvenile favour is Boys, an illustrated weekly. The first issue, dated September 17, is bright in style and wholesome in contents. (1d. Office: 60, Old Bailey, E.C.)

The first number has been published of The Boys' Mail Bag. Many friends of juvenile messengers have conspired to make its pages attractive, and we trust that, with God's blessing, this new monthly will do good wherever it goes. (1d. Partridge.)

DR. FORBES, quoted by Dr. W. B. Carpenter, says that, "as the result of his personal inquiries from the guides at Chamouni," he found that when they were out upon their winter expeditions, amidst Alpine snow and frost, they never experienced any gain in the use of spirits, but considered spirit-drinking to be decidedly inimical to their power of sustaining exertion in an atmosphere of very low temperature.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 25.—DEUTERONOMY VI.

We do not win the Promised Land by our obedience, but by our faith, but we can only keep in it as we observe to do. The life of daily, hourly obedience to the will of God is the secret of abiding in a state of rest and victory. Hence the necessity of a careful pondering of these repeated exhortations to obedience. And after all the obedient life is the only happy one. Only when we live up to the level of our light, do we know the secret of blessedness. Then, indeed, it is well with us, and we touch our highest good. "For our good always." But the obedience to which we are urged must be born of love. The one Lord must be supreme in an undivided heart. All other interests and relationships will become richer and more blessed only in proportion as the love of God is supreme within. As the air is not displaced when it is threaded with golden light, so all nature may pursue its wonted course, not hindered but helped by the one prevailing passion. When this is the condition of the soul, there is no difficulty or strain in speaking to children and neighbours, for the mouth speaks out of the abundance of the heart. And yet how much harder it is to keep thus in prosperity.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 26.—DEUTERONOMY VII.

The seven nations of Canaan are emblems of the mighty temptations to evil with which we have to contend even after we have entered the Land of Promise. They who sit with Christ in the Heavenlies have to wrestle with wicked spirits who are there too, until they are driven downwards to the earth. But we must make no covenant with evil. It must have no quarter, but be utterly destroyed. Oh, my soul, remember that thou hast been ransomed at a great price to be God's own peculiar possession; see to it then that thou be faithful in thy loyalty to Him; no traitor must intrude, there must be no joint-ownership. What a comfort it is that God did not set his love on us because of any qualities that He saw in us; not because we were good, but to make us so; because that love will still cling to us in spite of all our evil, till it has quite delivered us. He is indeed the faithful God who will not run back from the covenant into which He has entered with his Son on behalf of those who are one with Him in a living faith. A covenant-keeping God should make a law-keeping people, and then the spiritual counterpart of all these temporal blessings will be ours. No barrenness in our ministry, no clinging disease of the soul, victory over enemies, the evident presence and indwelling of God. The whole circle of blessing may not be ours at once. The Divine order always is "little by little," but as we live up to what we know, our circumference of light and power and blessedness will widen.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27.—DEUTERONOMY VIII.

How often do the words return on us; observe to do. Obedience is so clearly the doorway to the true life, multiplication, and land-possession. But how good it is to remember the past dealings of the Lord, not only to find materials for praise and thanksgiving, but to learn lessons of deep humility. Who can review the past, and not be humbled? The stern discipline of life reveals us to ourselves, and makes us realise our almost infinite need of God; and it reveals God, because its necessities, like so many foils, only set forth the various provisions of his tender pity. Only the Wilderness could have revealed the manna, the miracle of the raiment, and of the unswollen foot. Do we sufficiently feed on the Word of God, as Jesus did in the Wilderness, when in the strength of it He was able to repel the first temptation? Ah, we are weak when we might be strong, because we do not feed enough on Him. What a land is that into which our Father brings his chastened children; the rivers of his pleasure; the fountains of living water opened in the soul; the variety of the fruits of the Spirit; the abundance which makes scarcity and lack impossible; the unsearchable riches of Christ; the length and breadth and depth and height of his love. But, amid all, there is the constant need of the Spirit's grace, that we may not forget that our goodness is not inherent, it is Christ-derived. We must never look at anything we have apart from Jesus—all is in Him.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28.—DEUTERONOMY IX.

This chapter makes us think of what Christ may have to say to each of us one day, when we review the past by his side. When we stand with Him in glory, we shall see, even more clearly than now, how utterly we had forfeited all claim on God. Our righteousnesses as filthy rags; no merit or goodness or holiness to win his regard, whilst every halting-place in our life had witnessed some outbreak of perverseness or murmuring or stiff-neckedness. Each of us had Horebs, Taberahs, Massahs, and Kibroth-hattaavahs, as well as Kadesh-barneas. The tables of law splintered into fragments, so true a symbol of how we have broken the holy commands of our God and the noble resolutions of our better hours. But side by side with all this, there have been the intercessions of One greater than Moses. Four times in this chapter we find the mediator of the Jewish commonwealth engaged with God on his people's behalf, and winning for them respite. But who shall count the times when Jesus has pled for us? Is not his life, of necessity, one long intercession? Can we not hear Him saying: "Look not unto the stubbornness of this people, nor to their wickedness, nor to their sin, but for thy glory's sake, and for thy covenant have mercy on them"? The redemption of the Cross is an argument which makes the justice of God take our side.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 29.—DEUTERONOMY X.

We may break the law of God, but it cannot pass away. It is written again on the tables of stone. It lies at the base of the covenant. It is only still because it is covered by the perfect obedience unto death of our beloved Lord Jesus, who is the propitiatory (Rom. iii. 25). As the golden mercy-seat covered the law that lay beneath, so does Jesus satisfy the demands of the law; and then the Holy Ghost writes it on our hearts, and secures our obedience to it from love. What a delightful parenthesis that is which tells of Levi! His office in bearing the ark, standing to serve, and going forth to bless men in God's name; and then the divine reward of inheritance. Let us ask for the Levite work and for the Levite blessing. God has a right to all we are and have. It is a solemn question whether we have given Him all. If there is a single corner of heart or life held back, let it now be surrendered. We must specially submit to the circumcision of Christ, that is, the putting off of the sins of the flesh. Nothing less than this is becoming to those who are the subjects of the great love and holy choice of the great God, who stoops from heaven to find his beloved among the children of men. We must fear Him with fear born of love; serve Him as his slaves; cleave to Him with unswerving loyalty; and show to others something of that pitying love which He has shown to us.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 30.—DEUTERONOMY XI.

The life of consecration is the only right and blessed one. We never know what life can mean till it has been all laid at the feet of Jesus, to be taken back from his dear hands, and used absolutely at his dictation and direction. When God is first, and his will is done, then we are strong to possess, then our days are prolonged in their usefulness, then we live in God's special care and beneath his eye; we drink water of the rain of heaven, and exchange the galling strain of the works of the good-self for the ease and naturalness of the fruits of the Spirit. But even the consecrated heart may turn aside to serve other gods and worship them. We never in this world reach a position in the Christian life from which it is impossible to fall, and to lose all the bright beauty we had enjoyed. How necessary, then, to store up the words of God, keeping them always before us, repeating them to others, and exercising ourselves by them. Let us peruse well vv. 22, 23, 24, 25, applying them to ourselves in a truly spiritual sense, and claiming that God should give us their equivalents in the inner life. All along our lives there are Ebals and Gerizims, the "Come, ye blessed," and the "Depart, ye cursed," the consciousness of the smile or of the frown of God. Let us be attracted by the one and dissuaded by the other, till we climb, as by a spiral ladder, to those tablelands where we shall be beyond the possibility of falling back and away.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 1.—DEUTERONOMY XII.

We must give sin no quarter. The right hand cut off, the right eye plucked out. The heart is so weak, it clings and swings round with the current. Our sacrifices and burnt-offerings must be rendered to God through the One Priest, Jesus Christ our Lord. There is only one altar, one Priest, one Holy Place; and nothing can bring any delight to God which is not associated with these provisions of the heavenly Temple. Things which are permissible to those who live on a lower level of experience than ourselves can have no place with us who have entered on the rest and inheritance of faith. As our knowledge ripens, our responsibilities increase. How often are the people bidden to rejoice before the Lord! "Him serve with mirth." There are some who seem to be afraid of gladness as if it savoured of the devil. How little do such understand the spirit of the Gospel. And such joy is to link the whole family into one glad circle; man and maid with son and daughter. Animals required for food might be slain anywhere, only the blood was to be carefully eliminated from the flesh. The blood is the life. Man must not incorporate the life of beasts. But we are welcome to drink the blood, i.e., the life, of the Son of God. It is drink indeed. The shed blood of Jesus means his life laid down for us; let us daily wash in that blood, and often drink of the cup of the New Testament in his blood, the cup of salvation, and give thanks.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 2.

Saul of Tarsus Converted. Acts ix. 1—20.
Golden Text: Jno. iii. 3.

Next to our Lord's resurrection this is perhaps the most important miracle of the New Testament. Every conversion is a miracle; but in this case the surroundings are miraculous too. In these outward features it stands alone; but the inward change wrought in connection with them is necessary for all. For this reason Paul speaks of his conversion as "a pattern to them which should hereafter believe" (1 Tim. i. 16). In Gal. i. 13, 17, he makes further allusion to it; and in Acts xxii. and xxvi. he gives his own account of it. Let the lessons gather around the story itself.

1, 2. Any passion yielded to acquires increasing strength over its victims. This is illustrated in Saul, who first appeared as an approving witness of Stephen's persecution (vii. 58), then as an active persecutor (viii. 3), and here as more violent and bitter and cruel than ever.

3. Damascus, the ancient capital of Syria, lying about 140 miles north-east of Jerusalem. That there were many Jews in the city is evident from the fact that it possessed more than one synagogue (see 2 and 20). But there were Christians there also. Probably the Gospel reached the city through those scattered abroad in time of persecution. It was not until Saul neared the city in which he hoped to show his persecuting zeal that God met him. The Christians of Damascus knew of his coming (13, 14), and anticipated it with fear. When danger is nearest God's help is most sure.

By combining the three accounts we learn that those who journeyed with Saul fell to the earth when they saw the light (xxvi. 14), speedily recovered themselves, and stood amazed (ix. 7); heard the sound of the voice which spake with Saul, though they understood not the sense (ix. 7 with xxii. 9). The light flashed upon them at midday (xxii. 6), and was brighter than the sun (xxvi. 13). Saul saw Jesus in this light (17, 27, xxii. 14; 1 Cor. xv. 8), and was thus convinced not only that He lived, but that He was in a state of glory and exaltation. The revelation of this fact made Saul know that what he deemed his zeal for God was guilty rebellion against Him.

The words of Jesus (4, 5) deepened Saul's conviction. He learned that Jesus had perfect knowledge of him; that his conduct appeared very different in God's view from what it had been in his; that in persecuting the saints he was really persecuting their glorified Lord, who was intimately united to them; and that for this guilt Jesus met him, not in judgment, but in mercy. It is hard for thee, etc. The image is derived from the Oriental ploughman, who guided his plough with the left hand, while he held in his right hand a rod about six or eight feet long, to the end of which a goad was attached. When the goad was applied every attempt at resistance on the part of the animal only increased the pain. Further resistance on the part of Saul would be equally foolish and equally painful. The fact that Jesus should meet him with such entreaty, instead of visiting his iniquity as it deserved, humbled and subdued Saul, and led to the surrender expressed in his words, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Resistance was now at an end. This is the point to which God works in every conversion. The outward circumstances may be different, but the issue is the same. It is not the mere belief of a doctrine, but the surrender of the will, that constitutes conversion. 10. Hitherto the work had been miraculous, now human agency is to be employed. Nothing is heard of Ananias, either before or after this event. He was not an apostle. God chooses his own instruments for imparting spiritual gifts. 11.—The instructions are very definite. Tradition still points to a street called Straight in this city, and to a house which is declared to be the house of Judas. 12.—God does not do his work by halves. By a vision granted to Saul, he has prepared for the visit of Ananias 15, 16. Note the three classes of persons to whom Saul is to bear witness. Gentiles are given the first place; for he was to be emphatically the apostle to the Gentiles. Note also how suffering is included as a part of his witness. His after-history proves how true was his word (2 Cor. xi. 23-28).

17. Brother Saul.—After the experience through which Saul had passed, his recognition as a brother must have been a great joy to him. 19.—His baptism is connected with his remission (xxii. 16), not as the procuring cause of it, but as the symbolical representation of his union with Christ. It was also connected with his being filled with the Spirit (see ii. 38). 20.—He enters the synagogues not as a persecutor, but as a preacher. In this lesson we see him as persecutor, anxious enquirer, convicted sinner, surrendered believer, praying disciple, Christian brother, confessed follower, and earnest preacher.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of Truro has offered his first Hon. Canonry in Truro Cathedral to Rev. Joseph Hammond, LL.B., Vicar of St. Austell.

A Church Army Prayer Union has lately been started for strengthening the hands of those engaged in its work, and for blessing on those who have been and those who may yet be reclaimed.

Dr. Sandford, the Bishop-coadjutor of Durham, is confined to a dark room, owing to an affection of the eyes. The malady has rendered him incapable of attending to his many engagements.

Rev. Henry Pelham Stokes, a well-known Evangelical clergyman, has resigned the living of Isleworth, to which he was appointed by the Dean and Canons of Windsor a few years ago, on the retirement of Rev. Prebendary Richards.

Another Labour Home under the Social Scheme of the Church Army, is to be opened in Birmingham. When the plans of this society are completed, there will be one of these labour homes in touch with every prison and casual [illegible]

[illegible] Surry hopes to leave England at the end of [illegible] and to spend the winter in India. The Record [illegible]: "The Church in India may expect to profit by his [illegible], and we at home by the opinions of so trusted an [illegible] as to the condition of missionary work in the districts he visits."

The death is announced of Dr. John Medley, Bishop of Fredericton and Metropolitan of Canada, who was the oldest prelate save one in the Anglican communion. He graduated at Oxford as long ago as 1826, and was in the same class-list as F. W. Newman, the Cardinal's brother. Bishop Medley was an old-fashioned High Churchman.

The Bishops of both Provinces have issued resolutions to secure the better education of candidates for Holy Orders who have not gained degrees at the Universities. They require of them a preliminary examination, conducted by a central board of examiners, as a condition of their entering upon a final course of two years' study in a theological college.

The Conference at Armagh seems likely to become the recognised Church Congress for Ireland. In the course of a discussion on mission work, the Dean of Armagh expressed the belief that the missionary spirit in the Church of Ireland would be greatly strengthened if the C.M.S. and the S.P.G. would mark out some district in the mission-field to be worked, as far as possible, exclusively by missionaries sent from the Irish Church.

Mrs. Gooch, widow of the well-known banker, long resident at Camberwell, has obtained the sanction of the Queen in Council for the creation of this new ecclesiastical district, which will be known as the Parish of All Saints, North Peckham. A church and parsonage will be built, as well as an institute, club-house, and mission-room. The parish will be permanently endowed, and it is estimated that the gift, which is in memory of her late husband, will be over £30,000.

Rev. Charles Stirling, vicar of New Malden, Surrey, who has resigned his living in consequence of the Lincoln judgment, has issued a statement, which concludes as follows: "I respond to the call of duty, and quit the pale of the Romanised and Romanising Establishment, in the hope of being, with God's blessing, a pioneer, however humble, in the work of forming a 'Protestant Church of England,' with a Prayer-book purged of every vestige of sacerdotalism and sacramental error, which may rally to itself all that is good and holy in the land, and be a beacon light in these dark and dangerous days to England, to her colonies, and to the world."

Archdeacon Farrar thinks that the Lincoln judgment may influence the practice of many Ritualists, but it will not alter the opinion of a single person who is opposed to their methods. He holds that unless the extreme Ritualists learn wisdom and moderation, what is called a victory may prove ten times worse than a defeat. He declares that he and those of his party do not intend the Church of England to be Romanised, nor to be driven out of her communion; for their views are sanctioned by the whole of the New Testament, alike in what it says and in what it deliberately leaves unsaid. Nothing will tempt them to silence, or to swerve in the defence and maintenance of the truths which are the peculiar inheritance of the Church.

CONGREGATIONAL.

On Sunday week, Rev. Professor Duff, M.A., LL.D., of Yorkshire College, read the lessons in the parish church of Austwick, where he had been bringing his summer vacation to a close.

Dr. Brown, of Bedford, and Mr. T. W. Harrison, of Hanley, who are delegates to the Triennial National Council of the American Churches, which meets in October, are now on their way to Minneapolis.

Rev. W. Thomas has closed his pastorate at Waterhead Church, Oldham, where he has ministered for eight years, and is going out for missionary work in Central Africa in connection with the London Missionary Society.

Intelligence has been received of the arrival of Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson in the Roslin Castle at Cape Town. Mr. Thompson has undertaken negotiations with the Bamangwato chief, and the consideration of questions of policy and missionary operations in South Africa.

The Congregational Board has extended a very cordial invitation to the members of the Presbyterian Board of the "Three Denominations" to pay them a fraternal visit at the Memorial Hall, on Tuesday, November 15, from 4 p.m. till 7 p.m. The invitation has been accepted.

Dr. Parker, of the City Temple, has informed a representative of The Newcastle Daily Leader that he intends, before the close of the year, unless something quite unexpected should occur, to give formal notice of his retirement from the Congregational Union of England and Wales, and to have his name removed from all its lists and documents.

The reopening of the historic Moat Hall, Elstow, after renovation, took place on Wednesday. At the meeting the Mayor of Bedford (Dr. Coombs) presided, and addresses were delivered by Revs. W. Hay, M. H. Aitken, H. H. McCullagh, Rev. John Thomson, and Mr. W. J. Robinson. A report of the year's work was given by Mr. R. H. Poynter, superintendent. The musical portion was conducted by Mr. T. J. Ford, organist of Bunyan Meeting, Bedford, assisted by the Bunyan Choir, Bedford.

BAPTIST.

Rev. A. G. Barley, late of Paris, has taken the provisional oversight of the South Croydon Mission, pending its formation into a Baptist Church.

Haverfordwest College, which was founded in 1839, is to be removed to Aberystwith, so that its curriculum may be more exclusively theological, advantage being taken of classes in the University College. At the present time there are some twenty students at Haverfordwest.

Dr. Angus has consented to remain as Principal of Regent's-park College for another session, after which he will retire. The names of Dr. Maclaren, Dr. Glover, and Professor Gould have been mentioned as likely to come under the consideration of the College committee.

It is probable that Dr. Lorimer, of Tremont Temple, Boston, will succeed Rev. F. B. Meyer as minister of Regent's Park Chapel. Dr. Lorimer was formerly resident in Chicago. While in this country recently he preached in Regent's Park Chapel, and was approached by the deacons with a view to settlement.

Breachwood Green Church, Welwyn, Herts, had its origin in the preaching of Bunyan and other Puritans during the penal days. Of recent years the church has been richly blessed of God. Besides being in a bad state of repair, the chapel is far too small for the school and congregation. Accordingly an effort is being made by the pastor (Mr. M. Ashby) and his helpers to raise £450 towards providing adequate accommodation.

A new school hall, built for the congregation worshipping at Gildencroft Chapel, Norwich (Rev. T. Bullimore), has been opened by the mayor. The hall will seat 500 persons, and is furnished with class rooms. It will be used as chapel and school until the new chapel is built on the adjacent site which has already been secured. The new premises are situated in the heart of a thickly populated district, and occupy the site of an old brewery.

From the annual report of the Missionary Society, we learn that the number of missionaries in the list is 136, eight of whom are superannuated; evangelists, 778, rather more than half of whom are in Jamaica, which for many years has been independent of the Mission; stations, including Jamaica, 795; baptisms during the past year, 4,015; present membership, 50,875; day-school teachers, 441; Sunday-school teachers, 2,276; day scholars, 18,069; Sunday-school scholars, 26,849.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A memorial minute expressing their sense of loss at the death of Rev. Peter Leys, of the United Presbyterian Church, has been placed in the records of Hamilton Presbytery.

Dr. J. Monro Gibson, for many years pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Chicago, but now of London, had the pleasure of addressing his former church on a recent Sunday.

Rev. Gavin Carlyle is preparing a memoir of the late Rev. Dr. Adolph Saphir, and would be obliged by the loan of any letters from Dr. Saphir which may be in the possession of any of his friends.

The withdrawal from the Presbyterian Church of the Rev. A. L. Laird, late of Arthur's Hill Church, Newcastle, is announced. It is understood that Mr. Laird has connected himself with "The Brethren."

A "self-denial week" has been decided upon by the English Presbyterian Synod for its Foreign Missionary Society, and the committee has fixed upon the last week in November, and agreed that the money then raised shall be devoted to work in China.

Rev. J. Reid Howatt preached on Sunday evening week in Camberwell to a crowded congregation of young men and women on three religious novels of our day. He pointed out that the Holy Spirit was never named or recognised by any of them; all were in rebellion against the supernatural element in religion.

Prof. W. Garden Blaikie has left for New York to attend the Pan-Presbyterian council in Toronto, at which he is to deliver a presidential address. His health is not yet re-established, but he was anxious to be present. Rev. Dr. Ross Taylor has obtained from Glasgow presbytery three months' leave of absence. He will attend the Pan-Presbyterian council.

METHODIST.

The Joyful News Mission is receiving more generous support than hitherto. Should funds be forthcoming, Mr. Champness intends to send out two hundred more evangelists into the villages at home, and also to aid in the work abroad.

The movement initiated in connection with the Primitive Methodist Missions is progressing, £50,000 being the amount aimed at, one-fourth of which sum goes to the opening of new missions in Africa. The present amount promised is £22,000.

A committee of the Methodist New Connexion have been appointed to obtain full information respecting the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour, and the Epworth League, recommendations to be laid before the next Conference.

The principal of six memorial stones of a new chapel, to cost £900, at Fillonghey, in the Islington circuit, Birmingham, was laid by Lord Leigh, who said that though a staunch member of the Church of England, he did not see why those who did not conform to its worship should not have full liberty and opportunity of meeting together.

The Wesleyan "Synods" are now in session. Writing to the New York Christian Advocate, Dr. R. N. Young regards the innovations, "Synod" and "Church," as of doubtful advantage. "They will puzzle our people and do not enhance the popular estimate of our institutions. The majority will prefer the old and quaint terminology—'society' and 'district meeting.'"

The Primitive Methodists at the mining village of Denaby Main have hitherto only been able to hold religious services in a cottage, but arrangements have now been made with a view to the erection of a suitable building. Mr. Andrew Montagu, of Ingmanthorpe Hall, near York, the principal landowner, has consented to a piece of land being leased to them for a period of eighty years.

Rev. Edward White, preaching lately to the Wesleyans at Mill Hill, upon the coming of Christ, reminded them how earnestly both John and Charles Wesley had held the belief. It was a subject, he feared, much neglected in our churches, and he pressed upon them the prominence given to it in the prophecies, and in our Lord's teaching. The attitude of the early Church was one of expectancy and waiting.—"Even so, come Lord Jesus."

The President of the Primitive Methodist Conference, in his pastoral, just issued, says: "We need and desire, above all else, a great revival of religion, and the way to it is clearly marked out in the Holy Scriptures. If we have been straitened by selfishness, the way to enlargement is generosity. If our walk and conduct have been such as to alienate ourselves from Christ and others from the Church, the way to closer union with Christ and greater power over men is thorough reformation."

Six lady missionaries, going to India or China, left a few days ago with Rev. G. W. Olver, of the Wesleyan Mission House, who is about to make a tour of inspection in India. They were:—Miss Olver, who goes to Bankura at her father's expense; Miss Hudson, daughter of Rev. Josiah Hudson; Miss Trimmer, sister of Rev. J. G. Trimmer, of Ceylon; Miss Macdonald, daughter of Rev. J. A. Macdonald, of Birkenhead; Miss Lamb (Sister Florence, of the Birmingham Mission), who is the first lady evangelist sent out by the Ladies' Committee; and Miss Parkes, who is going to Hankow, and is the daughter of the late Rev. J. S. Parkes, formerly of Canton.

Mr. Price Hughes, in referring to his branch of the work at St. James's Hall, states that more than 8,000 regularly assemble on Sunday for Methodist worship in West London, where, five years ago, the Wesleyans had not a solitary service of any kind. Conversions are said to be of weekly and almost daily occurrence, and in the distribution of converts—for it does not appear that all remain in connection with the mission—most of the churches in the neighbourhood receive accessions. Altogether, £4,000 is raised on the spot annually in support of this branch, which is now practically self-supporting. The membership at the West Central in five years has reached a total of 1,200.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The eminent and successful missionary, David E. Sampson and wife, of North Carolina, have been liberated, and encouraged to visit Dublin and London yearly meetings, and to labour within their limits.

A very happy and well-attended eight days' mission has just been held at the "Captain French Lane" Friends' Mission, Kendal. For the last ten years a good and growing work has been maintained there, with results sufficient to fill the heart with thankfulness.

About thirty young men and women Friends belonging to the "Friends' Christian Fellowship Union" and the Young Women Friends Christian Union" paid a happy and welcome visit to Bristol early in the month, which proved to be alike cheering and helpful to visitors and visited.

The death of the poet J. G. Whittier naturally engrosses men's minds, and brings the Society of Friends to the front as illustrated in his noble words and works. Generations yet to come will rejoice in his pure teachings and far-reaching influence for good. The church of which he was an honoured member is proud of her "Quaker-poet."

The work at Ba'abdat, Syria (where a village numbering 657 left the Maronite Church and turned Protestant) goes bravely on. Theophilus Waldmeier and Friends are carrying Gospel truth to the people, amid the opposition and hatred of the Maronite priests. The same service in Mexico, similarly opposed, is being successfully carried on by Wm. Walls, and a door is wide open among the Roman Catholics there for the Gospel. Labourers are needed everywhere.

SALVATION ARMY.

Mr. Bramwell Booth has had a rather sharp attack of illness, brought on by overwork. He is now, we are glad to learn, convalescent.

An edition de luxe of the forthcoming life of Mrs. Booth is to be issued to subscribers in three volumes, price a guinea and a-half. A popular edition will be afterwards published.

"Self-denial week" commences on Sunday next. In 1888 the sum of £15,000 was thus raised; in 1889 £20,000; in 1890 £30,000; and last year £40,000. It is hoped that this year the sum of £50,000 may be reached.

The Daily Chronicle says: "A suggestion has been made that the Prince of Wales should be asked to nominate the proposed committee of investigation on General Booth's scheme. Whether the suggestion comes to anything remains to be seen, but it may now be assumed that there will be a committee. General Booth is anxious that the inquiry should go on, and if a committee is not forthcoming otherwise, there can be little doubt that he will himself nominate one."

The officer whom General Booth sent to South Africa, in connection with the possible selection there of a site for the "foreign colony," has returned. He reports very favourably on the tracts of land he inspected, and upon the suitability of South Africa generally, for the "colony." Quite a number of offers of land have been made to General Booth, some of them, at all events, on thoroughly reasonable terms. However, he has also had offers from Australia and New Zealand, and it may be some little time yet before he decides on any course.

At a meeting last week in Exeter Hall, General Booth said he meant to go forward with the "colony over the sea" scheme, and he did not believe the public would leave him in a corner. If the public did not come to the rescue, then he would have to mortgage the land and property and struggle on with this impediment round his neck in the cause of the poor people he intended to benefit. He had not the slightest intention of "going down" for less than £3,000,000, and then he quite expected the Bank of England would come to his assistance!

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Rev. Mr. Aspinal has been addressing a series of meetings in county Cork in the interests of the South American Mission.

The annual collection in aid of the Irish Mission was made last Sunday in all the Presbyterian churches throughout the country.

A branch of the Children's Home, London, of which Dr. Stephenson is the head, is to be established at Littlemount, county Fermanagh, by the Fowler family, of Liverpool and Chicago, at a cost of at least £20,000.

It is hoped that Rev. Thomas Waugh will be got, when he concludes his mission in Cork, to conduct a mission in Belfast, and thus to follow up the work which has been commenced by Messrs. Moody and McNeill. It is understood that the quarterly meeting of one of the leading circuits in the city has taken the initiative in requesting Mr. Waugh to undertake this work.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

The temperance party in Glasgow is busy, in view of the municipal elections in November.

An interesting conference on the improvement of church services was held last week in Aberdeen.

Rev. R. Balgarnie, of London, preached on Sabbath to large congregations in the U.P. and Congregational Churches in Dalkeith.

A correspondent of The Dundee Advertiser complains of the open profanity that is prevalent among many railway travellers in that district.

A special lady commissioner of The Daily Mail is investigating some of the insanitary bye streets in Glasgow, so as to compel the attention of the authorities.

Aberdeen has recently had to mourn the loss of three respected citizens—Dr. Francis Edmond, Mr. W. Milne, advocate; and Mr. J. S. Allan, a warm temperance reformer.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Budleigh, Rev. A. Balfour, Congregational Minister, aged eighty-two.—Mrs. Charlotte A. Jones, widow of the late Rev. Eliezer Jones, for twenty years pastor of Tacket-street Chapel, Ipswich.—Mr. Robert Burnard, one of the leading Methodists of Newcastle-on-Tyne, at the age of seventy-three.—At The Laurels, Belmont Hill, Lee, on the 11th inst., Anne Knox, wife of Rev. J. H. Wilson, D.D., in her eighty-first year.

THREE VALUABLE BOOKS.

New and Enlarged Edition.

CHRIST AND THE SCRIPTURES.

The Living Word and the Written Word.

By Rev. ADOLPH SAPHIR, B.A., D.D.

Crown 8vo. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.; Presentation Editions: Cloth extra, 3s.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"We thank God with a full heart for this fresh, powerful, living utterance of great—and some of them forgotten—truths which commend themselves to one's mind, as the Spirit-guided expression of the convictions of a Christ-filled soul. . . . We would earnestly recommend all our readers who intend to get it to do so at once, for by reading it we are sure they will have their minds informed, their hearts warmed, and their souls refreshed."—British Herald.

London:

And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

THE GIFT OF GOD,

A Series of Addresses.

By Pastor THEODORE MONOD.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"To the anxious inquirer, the new convert, the seeker after holiness, and the mature believer, we heartily recommend this book."—Wesleyan Methodist Magazine.

"These addresses are clear as a sunbeam, and full of spiritual force. The source, nature, reception, and consequence of the gift of God are treated, and the last chapters relate to its purpose and how to use it. Our counsel is, by all means get the book."—King's Highway.

London:
Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

CALLS TO CHRIST,

A Series of Gospel Addresses.

By Rev. W. R. NICOLL, M.A., LL.D.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"The addresses are marked by much freshness and vigour, as well as earnestness and warmth. The writer has the gift of putting familiar truths in new aspects, and of making admonitions strike and tell, which, coming even from earnest lips, are sometimes pointless and unimpressive. We heartily commend the book."
Presbyterian Messenger.

"Force and freshness are eminently the characteristics of these 'Calls to Christ'; they are also brief to a proverb, and hence they may be of great service to an earnest evangelist who knows how to use another man's thoughts. . . . But for all readers this collection of addresses contains admirable instruction, counsel, and stimulus."
Rev. C. H. Spurgeon in The Sword and Trowel.

London:
Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

GOLD PENS: MABIE, TODD & BARD'S

Manufacture, are 14 carat tempered gold, very handsome, and positively unaffected by any kind of ink. They are pointed with selected polished iridium. The "Encyclo. Brit." says: "Iridium is a nearly white metal of high specific gravity, it is almost indestructible, a beautifully polished surface can be obtained upon it." They will not penetrate the paper. Writer's cramp is unknown among users of Gold Pens. One will outwear 90 gross of steel pens. A choice is offered from 250 various shapes and points. They are a perfect revelation to those who have never used Gold Pens.

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes has used one of Mabie, Todd & Co.'s Gold Pens since 1857, and is using the same one (his "old friend") to-day; it cost him only 9s. 6d., it would have cost him, in money alone, over £10 to have done the same work with steel pens.

"SWAN" FOUNTAIN PEN, 10/6, Broad, Medium, or Fine Point. Unrivalled and Incomparable.

The "Swan" is a Mabie, Todd & Co. Gold Pen joined to a rubber reservoir to hold any kind of ink, which it supplies to the writing point in a continuous flow. It will hold ink enough for two days' constant work, or a week of ordinary writing, and can be refilled with as little trouble as to wind a watch. With the cover over the gold nib it is carried in the pocket like a pencil, to be used anywhere. A purchaser may try a pen a few days, and, if the writing point does not suit the hand, exchange it for another without charge, or have the money returned. Illustrated Price List, of various sizes (with testimonials), will be sent gratis and post free. Address postal card to Temperance Notes.

The use of spirituous liquors of all kinds has been abolished by Lady Carlisle at Naworth Castle and Castle Howard, the seats of the Earl of Carlisle.

Nearly 800 pledges have been taken as a result of a twelve days' temperance mission conducted at Bolton by Mr. Richard Coad, Cornish temperance evangelist.

The Methodist Conference Temperance Committee met last Friday in Belfast, and took a new departure in adopting a pledge against the use of tobacco in connection with its Band of Hope work.

Addressing a meeting at Luton the other day, Mr. S. Whitbread, M.P. (who is himself a brewer) declared his belief was that legislation on what were known as Temperance lines was certain to come.

The Master of Truro Workhouse states that during his tenure of office forty-two of the principal tradesmen of the town, in addition to between 600 and 700 other persons, have ended their lives in the Union owing to the effects of drink.

At the Brewster Sessions at Dover, for the county district, the magistrates refused to grant a new licence to an hotel at St. Margaret's Bay, the application having been made for three successive years uniformly in vain.

There is a story going the rounds at Aberdeen which, it is said, came from Balmoral, that Her Majesty would not appoint a young man to be one of her pipers unless he was a teetotaler. "There are so many temptations in the position," the Queen is reported to have said.

The Tunbridge Wells magistrates had before them the other day a little boy named Blackman, who, maddened by drinking a large quantity of his mother's rhubarb wine, attacked with a hammer a lady visitor named Gray on Rusthall Common, causing serious injuries to her head. The Bench ordered the boy to be birched.

William Cobbett wrote the following stirring words on drunkenness:—"When this vice has taken fast hold of a man, farewell industry, farewell emulation, farewell attention to things worthy of attention, farewell love of virtuous society, farewell decency of manners, and farewell, too, even an attention to person; everything is sunk by this predominant and brutal appetite."

Dr. A. F. Bradshaw, P.M.O., H.M.'s forces in India, says, in reply to the question: "When cholera breaks out in any cantonment, are abstainers more likely to escape the disease by breaking their pledge and indulging in alcoholic beverages, or by continuing the habit which they have cultivated?"—"The pledge-breaker not only 'tempts' the cholera, but weakens the power of his constitution to stand the disease! I have personally witnessed many lamentably sad instances of the absolute folly of taking to drink while cholera is going on in the station."

New premises have been opened of the Westow Church Institute in the East Riding. A year's experience in a smaller building had demonstrated the usefulness of such an institution dependent for support upon contributions and the fees paid for games, and open as a village public-house free to all. The men's rooms are used periodically for the discussion of subjects of general interest, and the boys' room, which has a separate entrance, for instruction in some manual craft. The supply of newspapers is large, but the library small. A football club and other agencies are in connection. Non-alcoholic drinks can be had at any time.

A correspondent writes of a town not sixty miles from London:—"There is a population of 2,100; but there are thirty public-houses, a grocer's wine and spirit licence, two breweries, and a wholesale agency in connection with a large brewing firm. Reckoning these as thirty-four licences, there is one licence to every sixty-two persons; and, assuming that two-thirds are those who cannot be called adults, there is a licence for every twenty or twenty-one of the adult population. As nearly as I can estimate, every tenth or eleventh house is licensed. Many of the public-houses are owned by a brewing firm, one of whose members is chairman of the bench of magistrates."

The licensing sessions just closed at Liverpool have been a disastrous one for the publicans. A prominent city publican, who has several hostelries, said to a writer in The Liverpool Post: "The trade now will scarcely make salt for one's porridge. It has received a staggering, if not a fatal blow. Some public-houses—I fear a large number of a certain class—will before long be thrown into the market. Townsmen will not invest their money in them, for they know what is coming. They cannot pay without the patronage of the class we are strictly forbidden to serve, and there is nothing before them but stark misery and bankruptcy. I came to this conclusion for one particular reason, and that is our opponents are ever on the watch, and the fact that few persons enter certain houses will be used as an argument to prove that they are not required."

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1892.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

A HOLY CALLING will be attended with a holy carriage. Many may be found who can talk of grace, but very few who taste of grace. It is not everyone who looks like a Christian that lives like a Christian, for there are some who make their boast of the law, and yet, through breaking the law, they dishonour God.—W. Secker.

House of Rest for Christian Women
AND OTHERS,
"Engedi," Eastern Road, Brighton.

ENGEDI HOUSE is a Sanatorium for the industrial classes, chiefly of such as toil in the large workrooms in London, etc., and these have largely availed themselves of the welcome and accommodation it provides since it was first established in 1869. Since then the Home has developed another department, viz., a quiet Seaside Resort for Christian workers from the Home and Foreign Mission Fields, and also a small number of the educated classes of limited means.

Cases in whom ladies are interested, needing change and recruiting, are often sent by subscribers, for which reduced charges are made. Mrs. Seaman will gladly answer any enquiries by ladies who wish to send anyone they would help in this way to the seaside.

The great need that has been felt lately has been the insufficiency of separate bedrooms for the increasing number of applicants, no less than sixty deserving cases having been refused during the last few weeks because of the want of single bedroom accommodation.

This increasing want of bedrooms has led Mrs. Seaman to make a definite effort to secure, if possible, a suitable house for the extending usefulness of her work, and to this end she, or her committee, will gladly welcome co-operation from any kind friends to whose sympathies the work carried on in this well-conducted Christian and Temperance Home will commend itself.

Contributions may be send to the London and County Banking Company, Limited, Pavilion Buildings, Brighton; or to any of the Branches of the London and County Bank; to the credit of the account at Brighton.

For Report of work and further information, address:—
MRS. EMMA SEAMAN,
Founder and Lady Superintendent, as above.

THE CHRISTIAN IN THE WORLD:
HIS PATH AND HIS GUIDE.
By MARTIN HOPE SUTTON, F.R.H.S.,
Forty Years President of the Reading Church of England Young Men's Christian Association. c780
London: Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Ltd.

The Cork Young Men's Christian Association

EARNESTLY APPEAL to the Christian Public to assist them in completing the erection of their New Premises. In their city a "home from home" for young men is sadly needed. Many young men who have gone there from England have drifted away because the association had no comforts (such as they had in other towns) to offer them. Already nearly £3,000 has been collected or promised, but about £2,000 is still wanting. THE MEMBERS (PRINCIPALLY YOUNG MEN IN BUSINESS) HAVE PROMISED £500 BETWEEN THEM besides helping to collect.

Mr. D. L. Moody, in laying the memorial stone, on Friday, 16th inst., made a stirring appeal on their behalf.

The Christian Public of the city, as well as some leading Christian Workers in England, have already responded liberally, and the Committee are looking earnestly to others to assist.

The following accommodation is to be provided in the building: A large Reading Room, Members' Parlour, Assembly Hall to seat 320, Caretaker's Apartments, Office, Meeting Room to seat 50, well-furnished Gymnasium, Bath and Dressing Rooms, Cloak Rooms, Photographic Dark Room, Class Rooms, Lavatories, Boys' Room (with separate entrance), Secretary's Office, Bicycle Stable.

Contributions to be sent to H. CARR CAVE, Savings Bank House, Cork, Treasurer, or to THOMAS A. BAILEY, Y.M.C.A. Rooms, 54, South Mall, General Secretary.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.

PATRON: Admiral H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH, K.G.

LORD BRASSEY has, with great munificence, promised £5,000 towards the £30,000 needed for a carefully elaborated scheme to cope with the evils afflicting seamen in the Port of London; including a MISSIONS TO SEAMEN Church, Institute, Gymnasium, Officers' Rooms, Class Rooms, Adult Schools, and Coffee Bar, etc., in one block, with four smaller branch Seamen's Institutes, to be worked by two chaplains and five experienced readers. Besides the above £30,000, about £3,000 a-year additional will be needed for maintenance of staff and buildings in East of London.

COMMANDER H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, R.N., K.G., is president of the London Funds Committee of the Missions to Seamen to raise the necessary moneys. It includes, amongst others, the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Mayor, the Prime Warden of the Fishmongers, the First Lord of the Admiralty, and many leading shipowners and merchants, etc. Offertories and drawing-room meetings, etc., are solicited. Subscriptions and contributions for the General Fund, and for the Special "London Fund of the Mission to Seamen," should be sent to Messrs. Barclay, Ransom, and Co., Bankers, 1, Pall Mall East, or 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or to the General Secretary, Commander William Dawson, R.N., the Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, London, W.C.

Appeals.

Beyrout.—Rev. G. Mackie, of the Church of Scotland Foreign Mission, Beyrout, Syria, writes to the friends of the "Fellow-workers' Union" in Scotland that a sewing-machine and a harmonium would be valuable acquisitions in carrying on the work among the girls and women. Any helpers who can supply these needs should write to, Fellow-workers' Union, 22, Queen-street, Edinburgh.

Among Mohammedans in Egypt. — Quarter-master Sergeant Wm. Dawson, of the first battalion S. Stafford Regiment, writes from the Citadel, Cairo: "Will the readers of The Christian remember in their prayers efforts in Egypt for the conversion of Mohammedans? We shall be glad of their help in scattering the good seed. Mrs. Grimké, Wellington House, Higher Broughton, Manchester, has some small text cards in Arabic at 1s. per 100, the postage of which is only 1½d. I have been enabled to give away a few, and the eagerness with which they are received shows what a blessed work it would be to scatter thousands of them here."

Spanish and Italian Mission, Buenos Ayres.

Friends interested in this work will be glad to learn that the Lord is answering prayer with regard to those that have of late been converted at one or other of the preaching stations. Some of the converts are already preaching the Gospel, while their changed lives are a proof of the power of Christ to keep as well as save. A man and his wife, who lately gave their hearts to the Lord, are most active in telling others to come. The woman is being described as a "female Billy Bray," going about amongst the women with her Bible tucked under her arm telling them the "good news."

The workers have, of course, met with opposition, and not long ago a man threatened some of them with his knife, but God has used this incident to advance his cause, and it is hoped that the would-be assassin will soon be won to Christ. The free school established by the mission for the poorest children is now quite full, there being eighty on the books. An earnest Spanish Christian woman has charge of that work, her chief object being to lead the little ones to Christ.

It is hoped that very shortly sufficient funds may be received to put up a mission hall, which is greatly required, the work being at present carried on in private houses. As Mr. W. Barnett, of Redhill, who is interested in this work, is about leaving England for South America, the communications of friends will, during his absence, be attended to by Mr. G. Maynard, 34, Gracechurch-street, E.C.

Togoland.

In a communication from Ho, West Africa, Rev. Wm. Innes writes:—The North German Missionary Society has been carrying on work in Togoland for over fifty years. In the first ten years the missionaries were not permitted to see any fruit of their labours, but from the eleventh year up to the present time the number of converts has steadily been increasing. The total number of professed Christians up to date is about 990. The society has three head stations:—Quittah, Ho, and Amedschorhe, besides twelve out stations.

Three missionaries died last year. The society applied to the Chrischona College, near Bâle (Switzerland), for workers to fill up the vacancies. Mr. Vetterli was sent by the Bâle Mission House, Mr. Schosser and I were sent by the Chrischona College. We left on April 21, and after a brief stay at Bremen, where we were set apart for the work, we sailed from Hamburg and in due time arrived at Quittah.

Mr. Vetterli and I received orders to go to Ho, three days' journey. On Easter Monday we began our journey inland, and received a hearty welcome on arrival. We are now six Europeans in Ho, and it is comforting to see souls seeking the light of the Gospel.

"A BOOK—FREE."

We mean it; you shall have it sent you, post free, if you will but favour us with your name and address.

It is a book, but not an ordinary one.

No novel, no book of travels, no book of adventures on land or sea could be more interesting and full of wonderment.

This book opens up to you, in a simple yet graphic manner, the mysterious workings of nature in your own stomach.

You would not believe what delicate mechanism, what clocklike precision, what faultless processes are secretly and quietly in constant operation; how all these are set in motion by a bit of food entering the stomach.

Studying these things teaches us what to eat, what to avoid, and how to promote health.

Those who suffer from weak stomachs or any form of dyspepsia should certainly read it.

Please send your address, mentioning The Christian, to

THE MOST SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT IN THE WORLD.

"I WAS SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."
So writes a grateful Patient to

MR. C. T. CONGREVE,
relative to his case of
CONSUMPTION

"YOUR MEDICINE IS PRICELESS"
FOR THE TREATMENT OF CONSUMPTION & ALL CHEST DISEASES, AND
RESULTS OF INFLUENZA.

Read Mr. CONGREVE'S Book "ON CONSUMPTION, Etc.," which may be had, post free, for ONE SHILLING, from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.; or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NOTE.—CONSULTATIONS FREE at Coombe Lodge, Peckham, on TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings only. No charge except the usual charge for three weeks or six weeks' supply of medicine. All patients should read the Book first.

Mr. Congreve is always willing to meet the cases of those whose circumstances are such as to need a reduction.

The FORTY-SECOND SERIES OF CASES.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
DISEASE OF BOTH LUNGS—CASE OF A LITTLE BOY AT ROCHESTER—AND OF HIS MOTHER.

This little patient—now about ten years old—is the child of Mrs. BROWN, Baker-street, Burham, Rochester.

It is three years since the mother first applied to me for advice. The child had never been well since an attack of bronchitis of the previous year, and was fast failing. He had a very bad cough and phlegm, causing frequent sickness, periodical attacks of breathing, pains in the side, night perspirations, feeble pulse, bad appetite, and wasting of flesh. The doctor's report was, "Lungs diseased—the left most."

In writing for her little boy, the mother says:—"Ten years ago I was cured by your treatment. I came to you recommended by two old patients of yours." On referring to my books I see she was seriously threatened with Consumption. She had a violent cough, flesh and strength were failing, and she had other symptoms. She had been under several doctors, but gained no benefit. Diagnosis of the case: "General debility, chronic cough, and sluggish liver." She goes on to say: "I took six bottles of medicine, recovered, and since then have had no return of any symptoms. Remembering the good I received, I should like my little boy to realise the same."

The child commenced the treatment, and in six weeks the mother reports a very marked improvement—in fact, "a different child altogether." In two months he was quite well.

I had lost sight of this little patient until hearing from Mrs. Brown recently, and referring to my notes on the case and correspondence. She says in a letter lately to hand:—

"I thank God my little son has kept well and is in good condition to this day. I am deeply indebted to you for the restoration of his health and my own."

NEW LIFE OF MR. SPURGEON.

BY REV. JAMES DOUGLAS, M.A.

The Prince of Preachers.

C. H. Spurgeon

A Sketch; a Portraiture, and a Tribute.

With Life-like Portrait.

Cloth Boards - - - 2s. 6d.

Cloth, Bev. Boards, Gilt Edges - - - 3s. 6d.

Rev. THOMAS SPURGEON says of this book:

"I have been happily conscious that the book is not a mere narration of oft-told facts (with some fiction) and worn-out anecdotes. The 'Sketch' is good; the 'Portraiture' is better; the 'Tribute' is best of all. Right glad am I that Mr. Douglas has succeeded so eminently in his difficult but congenial task."

BOOKS FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.

THE TABERNACLE, THE PRIESTHOOD, and THE OFFERINGS.

"This is the best book on the subject we have seen." —Preachers' Analyst.

By HENRY W. SOLTAU, Author of "The Holy Vessels of the Tabernacle," &c. New and Revised Edition. With brief Memoir of the Author.

Numerous Illustrations, including 4 new and beautifully Coloured Plates.

Cloth Boards, 5s.; Library Binding, Gilt Edges, 6s.

Cheap Edition (without the Plates), Tinted Covers, 3s.

"We heartily commend this work to all students of the Bible, and especially to young Christians. Its teaching is calculated to root and ground them in the faith. There is no uncertain sound given by the author, and we trust that still to many he, being dead, may yet speak."—Footsteps of Truth.

THE TABERNACLE, and THE TEMPLE;

Their Symbolic Teaching and Spiritual Import.

"Bible-class teachers and students will find this book helpful and suggestive." —Word and Work.

By ARABELLA E. WEBB. Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth Boards, 1s.

"Conductors of Bible-classes will find it useful in preparing lessons on many parts of the Old Testament."—Day Dawn.

"An excellent little book, in which the lessons to be drawn from the foreshadowings are clearly set forth by way of question and answer."—The Rock.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MOSES,

As seen in the Tabernacle and its Various Services.

"A very spiritual as well as instructive little book." —Churchman's Monthly Magazine.

By Rev. GEORGE RODGERS. Twenty-first Thousand.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.

"We cordially recommend this short and very suggestive treatise."—The Bulwark.

"This volume is a beautiful, charming, and able exposition of the ceremonial economy of the Hebrews. Priests, sacrifices, tabernacle, are all made to tell their doctrinal and symbolical significance."—Brighouse News.

THE GOSPEL IN LEVITICUS.

Types and Foreshadowings of the Great Redemption.

"A great help in the study of Leviticus." —Christian Progress.

By Rev. JAMES FLEMING, D.D.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

"Its theme is the great central fact of our faith—the fact which gives all its meaning to the New Dispensation, and which was clearly and impressively foreshadowed in the rites and ordinances of the Old. The typical import of the Levitical economy is very forcibly pointed out. The subject is set forth with a clearness, a directness, and a persuasiveness which leave little to be desired. Every lover of sound Scriptural theology, especially in regard to the momentous doctrine of the Atonement, will find in the book a rich treat."—Baptist Magazine.

NEW LIFE OF MR. SPURGEON.

BY REV. JAMES DOUGLAS, M.A. WITH LIFE-LIKE PORTRAIT.

THE PRINCE OF PREACHERS:

A Sketch, A Portraiture, and A Tribute.

C. H. Spurgeon

REV. THOMAS SPURGEON says of this book:

"I have been happily conscious that the book is not a mere narration of oft-told facts (with some fiction) and worn-out anecdotes. The 'Sketch' is good; the 'Portraiture' is better; the 'Tribute' is best of all. Right glad am I that Mr. Douglas has succeeded so eminently in his difficult but congenial task."

Another Correspondent (intimately associated with the late Mr. Spurgeon) writes:

"I had expected great things of Mr. Douglas, and I am more than gratified. Within the scope designed by the author, the 'Portraiture' is by far the truest and fullest to life of any I have seen."

THE PRINCE OF PREACHERS is a thoroughly original book by Rev. James Douglas, M.A., a neighbour and intimate associate of the late Mr. Spurgeon. The author had many opportunities of seeing the great preacher in the seclusion of his charming home at Beulah Hill, and as a result, the present volume is freely interspersed with personal reminiscences and incidents which will be of great interest to the large circle who could claim a personal friendship, as well as to the thousands who knew and loved the man for his work's sake.

He has gone to his rest, but the memory of his devotion to the truth will long remain with us; and in Mr. Douglas' volume will be found a comprehensive survey of the life-journey along which the Lord led His servant to success in His service and to the sure reward at last.

BOOKS FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.

THE TABERNACLE, THE PRIESTHOOD, and THE OFFERINGS.

"This is the best book on the subject we have seen." —Preachers' Analyst.

By HENRY W. SOLTAU, Author of "The Holy Vessels of the Tabernacle," &c.
New and Revised Edition. With brief Memoir of the Author.
Numerous Illustrations, including 4 new and beautifully Coloured Plates.
Cloth Boards, 5s.; Library Binding, Gilt Edges, 6s.
Cheap Edition (without the Plates), Tinted Covers, 3s.

"We heartily commend this work to all students of the Bible, and especially to young Christians. Its teaching is calculated to root and ground them in the faith. There is no uncertain sound given by the author, and we trust that still to many he, being dead, may yet speak."—Footsteps of Truth.

THE TABERNACLE, and THE TEMPLE;

Their Symbolic Teaching and Spiritual Import.

"Bible-class teachers and students will find this book helpful and suggestive." —Word and Work.

By ARABELLA E. WEBB. Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth Boards, 1s.

"Conductors of Bible-classes will find it useful in preparing lessons on many parts of the Old Testament."—Lay Preacher.

"An excellent little book, in which the lessons to be drawn from the foreshadowings are clearly set forth by way of question and answer."—The Rock.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MOSES,

As seen in the Tabernacle and its Various Services.

"A very spiritual as well as instructive little book." — Churchman's Monthly Magazine.

By Rev. GEORGE RODGERS. Twenty-first Thousand.
Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.

"We cordially recommend this short and very suggestive treatise."—The Bulwark.

"This volume is a beautiful, charming, and able exposition of the ceremonial economy of the Hebrews. Priests, sacrifices, tabernacle, are all made to tell their doctrinal and symbolical significance."—Brighouse News.

THE GOSPEL IN LEVITICUS.

"A great help in the study of Leviticus." —Christian Progress.

Types and Foreshadowings of the Great Redemption.

By Rev. JAMES FLEMING, D.D.
Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

"Its theme is the great central fact of our faith—the fact which gives all its meaning to the New Dispensation, and which was clearly and impressively foreshadowed in the rites and ordinances of the Old. The typical import of the Levitical economy is very forcibly pointed out. The subject is set forth with a clearness, a directness, and a persuasiveness which leave little to be desired. Every lover of sound Scriptural theology, especially in regard to the momentous doctrine of the Atonement, will find in the book a rich treat."—Baptist Magazine.

BIOGRAPHICAL WORKS

PUBLISHED BY

MORGAN AND SCOTT.

DUNCAN MATHESON:

THE SCOTTISH EVANGELIST. HIS LIFE AND LABOURS.

By Rev. JOHN MACPHERSON.

With Life-like Portrait.

Presentation Edition; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Cheap Edition; Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.

"We very strongly advise every reader who wishes to get a glimpse of a real man, a real Christian, and a real worker for eternity, to get this volume. And we make bold to say that every out-and-out Christian who peruses it will rise from the study saying, 'After all, reality is the great thing,' and be thankful that he has been in the company of this noble man of God."—The Weekly Review.

HENRY MOORHOUSE:

THE ENGLISH EVANGELIST.

By REV. JOHN MACPHERSON.

Presentation Edition;

With Portrait; Cloth gilt, bev. boards, 2s. 6d.

Cheap Edition: Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.

"Full of interesting incidents from which counsel and encouragement may be gathered. We heartily commend this record of simple, unaffected piety to the attention of those who would know what may be done by workers somewhat off the ordinary recognised lines."—The Rock.

GEORGE WHITEFIELD.

A LIGHT RISING IN OBSCURITY.

By J. R. ANDREWS, Barrister-at-Law.

Presentation Edition:

With Steel Portrait; Cloth, bevelled boards, 5s.

Cheap Editions:

Tinted covers, 6d.; Limp, 1s.; Boards, 1s. 6d.

"The popular and powerful preacher, whose efforts synchronized with those of the Wesleys, is here set before us in a striking piece of portraiture; and the extracts from his diaries give many life-like touches to the sketch. The details of his work, both in America and in this country, are full and complete; and afford a striking proof of his immense capacity and unceasing energy."—Publishers' Circular.

JOHN WESLEY:

HIS LIFE AND TIMES.

By JOHN W. KIRTON, LL.D,

Author of "Buy Your Own Cherries," &c., &c.

Presentation Edition:

With Portrait; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

Cheap Editions:

Tinted covers, 6d.; Cloth limp, 1s.

"The spirit of a great reformer's life has seldom been presented in a form at once so brief and lively. There is no disproportion in the memoir: it portrays Wesley in all the aspects of a character that was many-sided. Every page sparkles with edifying anecdote. . . A better bit of biographical work in the same compass and at so moderate a price we have seldom seen."—Christian Leader.

LITTLE KATHLEEN;

SUNNY MEMORIES OF A CHILD WORKER.

By ANNIE R. BUTLER.

With Two Striking and Life-like Portraits.

Tinted covers, 6d.; Cloth boards, 1s.

"One of the sweetest testimonies to the grace of God in the heart of a little child which has appeared in these days; it will make an attractive gift to readers both old and young."—Medical Missions at Home and Abroad.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a sketch of MRS. WILLARD, of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union, with portraits of herself, Miss Frances Willard, and her helper, Miss Gordon.

Mr. Moody closes up his visit to the Irish provinces this week. On Tuesday and Wednesday he was at Sligo; to-day he is at Enniskillen, and to-morrow at Newry. The early part of next week is given to Manchester, and the latter half to Bradford.

The Dublin friends are making large preparations for Mr. Moody's mission in that city, which will begin, we understand, about October 22. The Irish Christians will no doubt make a strong rally in the capital city, and do their utmost to make the mission memorable and lasting in its results. The members of congregations in outlying towns might do themselves good service by arranging to send their pastors to Dublin during the mission, or a part of it, so as to catch some of the evangelistic fire.

In his forthcoming mission at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, Mr. Moody expects to address meetings afternoon and evening on the Sabbath. On several of the week days the arrangements will be :—

For ministers and workers at 11 a.m.; for the general public at 3 p.m.; for men only at 8 p.m.

This division is made so as to reach the greatest numbers. Next week we hope to give a complete programme.

Mr. G. C. Stebbins, the well-known singing evangelist, many of whose beautiful melodies are to be found in Mr. Sankey's collections, sailed this week from New York to join Mr. D. W. Whittle in Gospel work in Ireland.

Rev. F. B. Meyer will commence his ministry at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, next Sunday, October 2, preaching at 11.0 and 6.30. The galleries will be freely thrown open to all. Mr. Meyer proposes also to hold a service each Thursday morning at 11.30, on and after October 6.

We would direct our readers' attention to an Anti-Opium Convention which it is proposed to hold at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate-street, on Thursday next, October 6. Particulars will be found in our advertising columns. In addition to the speakers there announced, we understand that other well-known friends have expressed their intention of taking part.

The London City Mission, by the help of its staff of Jewish missionaries and other friends, is about to have an eight days' mission to the Jews of the East End of London. A large hall has been taken, and it is purposed to hold three or four meetings daily. Any who desire to help in this special effort, commencing on Oct. 6, are invited to communicate with the secretaries of the City Mission, 3, Bridewell-place, London, E.C.

A specially interesting meeting to take leave of missionaries going out in connection with the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society, will be held in the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, on Tuesday, October 11, at 3 p.m. Sir Charles U. Aitchison, K.C.S.I., will preside. The address will be given by Rev. J. Ireland Jones, late C.M.S. Missionary, Ceylon. Twenty-eight lady missionaries are leaving for different parts of the foreign field; eight of these are returning after furlough.

An unwelcome division of opinion has arisen at the Metropolitan Tabernacle with respect to the succession to the pastorate. Mr. Thomas Spurgeon, who has filled the pulpit for three months past, has acquitted himself with such ability and acceptance, that a section of the congregation desires that he should be invited to become pastor. On the other hand, Dr. A. T. Pierson has formally accepted the invitation of Dr. James Spurgeon and the diaconate to return as preacher for a period. The friends of Mr. Thomas Spurgeon are petitioning the office-bearers to call a special church meeting in order to consider the situation. We do not see how this demand can be constitutionally resisted, as the circumstances have quite altered since the Church agreed to request Dr. Pierson to resume his pulpit labours among them.

In the face of the following letter sent by Dr. Pierson to a member of the Tabernacle, it cannot be said that he is in any way responsible for the present imbroglio :—

East Northfield, Mass., U.S.A.,
Aug. 30, 1892.

Dear Sir,—Your communication of Aug. 19 to hand. The officers of the Tabernacle know that they are free to act in any matter pertaining to the Tabernacle without reference to me. As I have often told them, no invitation extended to me must for one moment hinder them in calling any man who is likely to serve the Church acceptably. My devout hope is that God would guide this beloved congregation to a speedy and unanimous choice of the man whom He has chosen.—Yours very truly,

ARTHUR T. PIERSON.

We sincerely trust that by the prayerful exercise of mutual confidence and kindly feeling, the overhanging cloud of difficulty will speedily pass away, and that the greatest pulpit in Christendom will in due time again be filled by the one whom God has fitted and designed for the post.

All friends of the man, faithful and beloved, whom God made the instrument of erecting the Metropolitan Tabernacle, and of building together the living stones which form the church worshipping there, must regard with pain a conflict which we trust will be amicably settled. It is being discussed not only in denominational organs, but in the daily press. May we not urge patience and forbearance upon each party? Satan is always inciting to haste and hurry. God takes time; and he that believeth shall not make haste.

When C. H. Spurgeon passed away our first impression was that the Metropolitan Tabernacle should be primarily regarded as an evangelistic centre for the South of London. Even if another pastor could be found who could hold together and feed and tend and shepherd so large a flock, there is a very substantial reason against the maintenance of so numerous a church, to be found in the distance at which a large proportion of its members live from the place of meeting. Consequent upon this is the fact of railway, omnibus, and cab being freely used to convey them there.

We are of opinion that it should be a rule in every city church that no person living beyond walking distance should become a member, and that members removing beyond such distances should be transferred to churches nearer to them. There must, of course, be exceptions in the case, e.g., of those who reside in country places. Yet even such Christians would often find it more edifying to themselves if they arranged meetings in their own neighbourhood and exercised their own gifts, or, if necessary, invited others to help them.

The increase in the numbers of women who appear in our London police-courts charged with drunkenness is exciting public comment. In too many cases the offenders are mere girls of fourteen or fifteen years of age. No wonder that The Daily Telegraph has taken up the subject of intemperance among women prominently, as being "A National Shame." But when will our daily papers be fair enough to look at the question from the standpoint of the facilities that are afforded for drinking in London and other large cities and towns. To a very great extent the supply creates the demand, and unfortunately our legislators are in many instances favourably disposed towards the drink interest, with its frightful train of poverty and crime.

The Telegraph in its editorial comments says :—"We are face to face with what is no less a plague than ty phus or cholera, and it ought to be attacked and conquered with all the resources which civilisation and morality can command." True and heroic words, no doubt, but we can recollect the expression of quite different sentiments by our contemporary, when this national curse has been under discussion. If our great organs of public opinion were persistently and consistently to strengthen the hands of temperance reformers, Parliament would soon have to take effective action. If the drink curse is as bad as the cholera, why not stamp it out with as much thoroughness and promptitude as our sanitary authorities have shown in warding off the black death from our shores?

In our solemn judgment the drink evil is much more fatal to the best interests of a community than any physical plague, or than all of those plagues put together; as Mr. Gladstone once observed. Let that veteran statesman, now that he has the reins of power once more in his hands, encourage, if he cannot initiate, such legislation as will not only tend to cure the drink disease, but prevent it springing into existence.

The other day a man was sent to prison from the Thames Police Court for having failed to send his children to the Board School. The offender was stated to be destitute, having been out of work for a long period, owing to an injury received at the docks; and the family were sleeping upon a piece of sacking in a "scrupulously clean" room at Bow Common. Asked why he had not taken his family to the workhouse, he stated that if he had done so he would not have been allowed to seek employment without taking his family out first. This points to the need for some wholesome and sensible reform in the workhouse regulations. The magistrate sent the unfortunate father to jail, and the mother and children to the parish—a cruel and monstrous decision, seeing that the only offence was poverty. There is yet a great gulf between law and justice in some of our social enactments.

It is stated that the Brighton authorities propose appointing female inspectors of nuisances with a view to visiting houses and giving more efficient and exact advice than it is always possible for male inspectors to do. The step would be one in the right direction, for in such matters there has been too much want of consideration of the feelings of the poor, whose unhappy surroundings are only too often their misfortune rather than their fault.

Apropos of efforts, as at Grindelwald, to unravel the tangle of difficulties and differences which separate the army of believers into so many hostile camps, the following words of the Archbishop of Dublin, a few years ago, may be quoted :—

If there cannot be fusion, why should there not be federation? Why should we not retain our own standards, articles, and views, and yet find some way of meeting together from time to time, and showing the world that upon essentials we are agreed? If we cannot have a bar of solid iron, we may have a chain of many links, each, it may be, of different substance and shape, but yet all bound together by a common bond of adhesion.

A correspondent who is an evangelical member of the Church of England writes :—

I am about to start on my holiday. In these days how can one discover in a strange place what teaching may be met with in the churches? If the evangelicals would adopt the practice of placing a board outside their churches, stating the hours of service, especially the hour of the week-day prayer-meeting, one would imagine such a church to be alive, and could form one's own conclusions. For Christians to meet each other, when taking holiday, at the prayer meeting, would I think be found a mutual help. But is there any outward and visible sign by which we may know evangelical churches?

The question is an important one. It would be well if Protestant people could somehow be enabled to distinguish Protestant places of worship, from buildings which go far towards deserving the designation of "Popish mass houses."

The fact that a monument has just been unveiled in Venice to Pietro Sarpi, shows how far Italy has travelled away from that blind subjection to the Pope which characterised the attitude of the country a quarter of a century ago, for Pietro Sarpi was the monk who, under his designation of Fra Paolo, fought manfully against the pretensions of Pope Paul V., and whose conflict with the Papal power was one of the boldest attempts recorded in history to do away with the soul-enslaving doctrine of Papal supremacy. Fra Paolo was a pioneer in the movement for religious toleration, and his history, as recorded in Mr. Thomas Adolphus Trollope's "Paul the Pope and Paul the Friar," may be read with profit by all who are interested in the treacherous workings of the Romish system.

Humanly speaking, the future of East Central Africa largely depends on decisions that must immediately be made. The Church Missionary Society, which has firmly planted the banner of the cross at Uganda, may be obliged to call home all its agents, if the British East Africa Company withdraw operations there. The Times recognises the period as critical :—

Mohamedans, profoundly irritated and alarmed by the menace of attack upon their lucrative traffic in human flesh and blood, have changed their attitude of surly observation into one of active hostility. Had the British East Africa Company never penetrated into the interior, the missionaries could no doubt have held their ground in their own way. But the conditions have been so entirely changed, by no act or fault of their own, that they must now stand or fall with the general British occupation of the country.

If the missionaries are compelled to retire, the product of the printing press will remain. Nearly the whole of the New Testament has been translated into the language of the country. We have the experience of Madagascar as to the living power of the Word; but it is no slight blow to Christianity in that quarter of the world, that the slave-traders advance with their ruthless traffic where the Christian missionary is compelled to retire.

ALDERSGATE-STREET NOON PRAYER MEETING.

At the noon prayer meeting, which has been held daily in the heart of the City of London for more than twenty-six years, many interesting testimonies are given from time to time. For instance, on Monday last Mr. W. R. Lane told of the crowded audience at the Great Assembly Hall on the previous evening. The hall was not only full to overflowing, holding, as it does, more than 4,000 people, but hundreds who were desirous of entering were unable to do so. This is a wonderful proof of the power of the Gospel, for there is nothing novel or sensational about these meetings, and as regards novelty it is proposed on Friday next (to-morrow) to celebrate, by a special prayer and testimony meeting, the 600th meeting of the Tower Hamlets mission, held under the auspices of Mr. F. N. Charrington, its founder. On Wednesday evening a special effort was put forth to gather in as many men as possible from the 2nd Battalion of the Coldstream Guards—the evangelist's old regiment—now on duty at the Tower.

Mr. Taylor, evangelist, Aylesbury, then spoke of the blessing attending earnest efforts put forth in the county of Buckingham. He instanced two cases, one recent, one long-standing. In the latter case determined opposition was manifested against the preaching of the Gospel by the titled landowner of the district. The cottagers who attended the little chapel were evicted, but better dwellings were speedily erected for them by some sympathisers in London. The steward of the estate himself attended one of the services, by instruction of his employer, to see for himself the pestilent nature of the teaching, and to take any action possible to bring the work to a close. The steward himself was soundly converted at this first meeting he attended; he became not only a devoted member but an earnest preacher of the Gospel throughout the district.

A police constable in the same neighbourhood was recently removed to a different part of the county, in connection with the same prejudice. His removal has been overruled for good. Since his arrival in his new sphere, the village chapel has been reopened, and when off duty this guardian of the peace may be seen actively gathering in the villagers to the preaching of the Gospel.

This reference to the police constable led to many testimonies to the faithfulness of these men, and to the multitudinous opportunities they enjoy of testifying for the Saviour. An evangelist told how his wife when out walking in one of the western suburbs recently was distressed by seeing a constable bending over a poor old man apparently in trouble. Fearing that he had been guilty of an offence, she walked near to learn what was going on, and was rejoiced to hear the constable repeating into the old man's ear: "There is a fountain filled with blood."

Christian Commercial Travellers.

The quarterly conference of the Commercial Travellers' Christian Association was held on Saturday last in the hall of the City Temple, Farringdon-street. The conference was presided over by Colonel J. T. Griffin.

The general secretary, Mr. Leonard Courtney, gave a report of the work done. The "Forward Movement," started a little more than eighteen months ago, had resulted in a rapid development of the association; upwards 400 new members had been enrolled, and new branches had been established in Bristol, Leicester, Southsea, Hull, and Carlisle. At the present time there are eight branches, the members of which are more or less active in extending the operations of the association. Preliminary arrangements have been made in Norwich, Sheffield, Newcastle, Nottingham, Liverpool, and Birmingham, and it is hoped ere long to have flourishing branches in each of these centres.

Short addresses followed by Messrs. John Jackson, P. J. Whitaker, Henry Holme, T. Fish, and W. J. Robinson.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR CONVENTION.

The first annual convention of the Manchester and District Union of Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavour was held on Saturday in the Independent Chapel, Oldham-road. There was an attendance of over 300 members of the various societies, and the meetings were very enthusiastic. The first meeting was presided over by Rev. J. E. Newell, of Samoa, who spoke of the great assistance the Christian Endeavour Society was to the missionary in his work abroad. Mr. Thomas Ashton spoke on "Our Pledge," which might be summed up in two sentences—1, "I believe I am a Christian"; 2, "I want to do something for Christ." Mr. S. Smale, of Ashton, took for his topic "The Prayer-meeting and Look-out Committees." An open conference followed, during which much interest was created in a stirring speech from Saänga, a Samoan youth who joined the first society in the South Seas.

The president of the Oldham-road Society remarked that since the last anniversary of their society three friends who took part in the proceedings had offered their services for foreign missionary work, viz., Rev. R. J. Ward, William Thomas, and an Oldham-road youth; and during the past week, at a meeting of the general committee of the Nottingham Institute for Missionary and Theological Training, three out of the four young men accepted were "Christian Endeavourers." Mr. Morris, of Marple, pointed out that one of the grand secrets of the success of the movement was that no one was allowed to take up too much time. Rev. M. Reed, of Warrington, said that in all his experience of work amongst the young, he had found nothing that so well suited the activity of young people as this society. A devotional service, conducted by Rev. R. Sutton, of Openshaw, brought the afternoon conference to a close.

After tea a large open-air evangelistic service was conducted near the chapel. Later on the meeting resumed, under the presidency of Mr. Charles Stevenson, of Marple. The secretary of the Union, Rev. W. H. Towers, read an appeal for Christian Endeavour workers to assist in the work of the Ancoats Girls' Institute. The evangelical principles upon which the movement is based having been confirmed by resolution, the secretary read an objection to the City Watch Committee granting a dramatic licence to the Palace Theatre of Varieties, Manchester. This was carried, the audience singing impromptu a verse of the well-known hymn, "Yield not to temptation." The chairman read a telegram of greeting from 2,000 Christian Endeavourers met at Bradford, which was cordially received. Addresses were delivered by several friends. The consecration service was afterwards held, and was brought to a close by the united societies singing, "All hail the power of Jesu's name."

Views in Palestine.

Rev. Haskett Smith, M.A., delivered a most interesting lecture on Syria and Palestine, at Addison Hall, W., on the 26th inst., to a large audience. Mr. Smith has spent many years in the East, and as the author of "Murray's Handbook to Syria and Palestine" is an acknowledged authority on the matters of which he treated in his lecture. The numerous limelight views which were thrown on the screen added greatly to the interest of the evening, and the marvellous architectural and engineering achievements of the ancients excited great admiration. In rapid succession the lecturer, by his vivid description of the various pictures, transported us from Sinai to Edom, thence through Moab, Gilead, and the "giant cities of Bashan," across the Syrian desert and to Damascus.

The culminating point of interest was reached at Baalbek, where in the quarries we obtained an idea of the stupendous stones which were there prepared; the one measuring 70ft. long by 14ft. high, and 14ft. broad was especially noticeable, the calculation (said the lecturer) had been made that it would need the aggregate strength of 40,000 men pulling at one given moment to move the gigantic mass one quarter of an inch. Our readers will remember an engraving of this stone in one of our Letters from Palestine last year. In the next view we saw the cyclopean wall in which three of these huge stones had been placed, and that with such precision as regards cutting and adjusting, though without any cement or mortar, that it was difficult to discern where one ended and the next began. The technical skill and engineering ability necessary for this work must have been simply marvellous, and is equal to any of the achievements of modern days. With some remarks of the lecturer as to the moral and religious value of Mohammedanism we must join issue; the influence of Islam must be studied, not in some individual and isolated examples, but from a general point of view, and then we can see its essentially blighting effect.

Rest in Christ:

THE SECRET OF POWER FOR CHRIST.

EXTRACTS FROM AN ADDRESS BEFORE THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE AT DUNDEE.

By REV. CLEMENT CLEMANCE, D.D.

WHAT is rest in the high and holy sense? Would it not be realised under some such conditions as these? When the soul has reached a fixed, certain centre-point of truth; when it has found an adequate Object of love, trust and worship; and when, in consequence, all restless craving after satisfaction ceases—surely that would be something like rest. So full, so rich, so complete is our rest in Christ.

We need no other revelation of God than we find in Christ. He could say, "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." The Apostle says of Him, "In Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." We may want to know more of Christ; we can never, in this respect, want to know more than Christ.

We need no other centre-point of truth than our Incarnate Lord. He is the Truth. The Truth in Jesus is the absolute truth, which brings with it to the loyal soul its own seal, and a certitude of its verity, which man can neither impart nor destroy. "I wanted," said a Christian to his pastor—"I wanted to be a religious man; but I did not know how to set about it. I wanted a centre-point; and by God's blessing you showed me that Christ was that centre-point; and so I find it. Christ is everything to me."

Receiving Christ, we need no other ground of trust. We can, we do entrust our all to Him, with joy unspeakable. We know whom we have believed. We need no other object of love or of worship. Further we need not go.

Our Great Teacher does what no other ever did or can do. He lives in us, puts his own Spirit in our hearts, and by his power He drives out the old spirit of self-seeking, and implants a copy of his own: in this school, believers are not under the régime of mandatory law, but of creating grace.

As this teaching on Christ's part and the learning on ours go forward, we do, as Christ says we shall, find rest. In the former case, Christ gives rest by stilling the craving for something without; in the latter he secures it by removing the disturbing elements within. And as the diseased elements of unrest become fewer and weaker, the mind of Christ, which takes their place, will bring with it Christ's own peace. We shall have the rest of an approving conscience, the conscious glow of returning spiritual health, the joy of knowing that what we ought to be is what we are pressing to be, and that we are through Christ's love and grace launched forth to new and blessed activities for Him—

To do the will of Jesus, this is rest.

Our affirmation may go even beyond that with which we began, and we may say that Rest in Christ is an imperative condition of active power for Christ. There can be no power without firm standing. But that firm standing once attained, through absolute rest in Christ, the believer may have as many kinds of power, as large a measure of it, and as constant a supply of it, as the exigencies of life, or the leadings of the Master, require from him.

For the Lord Jesus Christ, in whom he stands, and from whom he draws his life, has an infinite storage of strength for him. His Saviour is not only his Sacrifice and his Object Lesson, but also the Baptizer with the Holy Ghost; and as such He confers a plenitude of power, as really as a plenitude of pardoning love. Whether the service required of the believer be that of active toil, passive suffering, or mighty witness-bearing, he will have power for all, because he is "rooted and built up in Him."

This absolute rest in Christ will tell powerfully on a man's witness-bearing for Christ. He will have power as a witness for Christ in a three-fold form. First, he will have the power of a man who feels sure of his ground; his certainty of those things wherein he has been instructed is immovably calm. In an age like this, when doubt oft chills the blood and checks the tongue, it is more than ever imperative, if men would wield the highest power for Christ, that they should have that solid assurance which is born of God alone. We who are resting in Christ know that we have not the truth yet to seek. We have it in Christ. Hence we can speak for Him with no faltering tongue. An essential element of power is here! What impression for Christ can that man make who speaks as if he hung in doubt, as if he knew not where the criticism of the day would lead, and as if he almost needed to apologise for speaking at all? Give me a man who can say, "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ."

Such a one will have the power of a man who is full of enthusiasm over his theme. For he knows it to be entirely independent of the changes in the public thought, sentiment, or feeling. Whatever may be the cast of present-day theology, whatever the conflicts over the higher criticism, the fact that he lives in Christ and that Christ lives in him, gives him a vision of that which transcends all thoughts of man. He is not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ; he has no need to be, for after a careful study of all the substitutes by which man would displace it, he has weighed them in the balances and found them wanting. He finds in all human thinking nothing that can for a moment compare with the Christian's theme, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." Yesterday, for his Spirit was the life of forms that have passed away; to-day, for He is the life of the forms we now observe; for ever, for He will be the life of believers, when the forms we now observe shall have passed for ever away. Hence his theme, though capable of indefinite application to troubled thinkers, will never need to be changed.

A third kind of power is this:—Over and above the subjective power working in him, there will be the objective power of God working by him; as he honours his Saviour by the calmness of his trust and the enthusiasm of his joy, God will make him everywhere to "triumph in Christ," and through the magnetism of his service much people will be added to the Lord.

Borough Road, Southwark.

A SUNDAY MORNING breakfast has been given to the young people attending the ministry of Rev. G. W. M'Cree. The Tuesday evening prayer meeting has been a great blessing to the Church, and forms a most hopeful feature of its work. The open-air services have been maintained with vigour during the season, and will be followed by evangelical services at 8.15 p.m. in the Lecture Hall.

An interesting service for the deaf and dumb, held at 6.30 on Sunday evening, is well attended, and has done much good. The friends here are still intent on buying the freehold of the chapel, and have already secured £1,000 towards it. This is a great effort, and for all purposes another £1,000 will be needed, but this, it is hoped, will come in due time, since a praying church is never left desolate by its Divine Head.

NOTES FROM LLANDUDNO.

NEAR the summit of a rocky promontory on our Western Coast, and not far from the edge of the limestone cliffs which overhang the sea, is an ancient church, founded more than a thousand years ago, long in ruin, but recently restored. No dwelling place is near, but once a week people gather from afar to worship at St. Tudno Church; the music of the waves as they break on the rocks beneath blending with the voices of prayer and praise. At other times solitude reigns supreme, except when an occasional visitor climbs the steep ascent from the shore, or strolls across the grassy wold tufted with golden furze and purple heather.

Here rambled one day an eminent leader of the "Society of Friends," with his little boy, who, admiring the scene and the solitude where the dead were sleeping under grassy graves, said, "Father! when I die I should like to be buried here." In less than a month another little turf-covered bed had been spread, entrusted with the body of the child. On a very simple marble slab is this inscription:—"In loving remembrance of Leonard Bright, son of John Bright, M.P., and Mary Elizabeth, his wife, who died at Llandudno, November 8, 1864, aged nearly six years. 'And there shall be one fold and one Shepherd.'"

It has been the custom of the Friends to have separate places for the interment of their members—often known as "The Quakers' burying ground." This was a protest against what they regarded as the superstition of consecration and services they disapproved. In this case the most prominent of their number brought the body of his beloved child to be interred amongst Episcopalians and divers others, in consecrated ground. He often visited the spot afterwards, pouring from his devout and tender heart prayer and praises to the one Shepherd. How diversities of opinion disappear in the light of Eternity and the real presence of the Lord!

The Revisers more accurately render the verse quoted from the old version by John Bright—"There shall be one flock and one Shepherd." One flock belonging to one owner, and feeding on one wide pasture, may have many "folds," but they remain one "flock," under one shepherd. So all who believe in, love, and follow the "one Shepherd," are alike claimed by Him as his one flock—though they may meet in different folds. Oh, that we all made less of the differences of the folds, and more of the real, abiding, Divine harmonies of the flock. "One Lord, one faith, one baptism."

NEWMAN HALL.

Birmingham Prophetic Conference

THE first of these conferences in Birmingham has recently been held. The subjects selected for consideration were grouped under the three great lines of prophecy. On Wednesday, September 14, The Gentiles was the subject; on Thursday, the Jews; and on Friday, the Church of God. The outline of the programme was practically that suggested by Mr. G. H. Pember, who was to have been chairman, but who has been laid aside for a time by overwork.

Rev. E. Brewer, Vicar of Old Hill, who was mainly instrumental in getting up the meetings, took the chair, and the speakers included Revs. W. Fuller Gooch, G. D. Hooper, L. Liesching, N. S. Taylor, and John Wilkinson. The last address on "What manner of persons ought ye to be?" was given by Rev. Walter Searle, who is going out shortly to South Africa to work in the Cape General Mission. The numbers present throughout were larger than were anticipated, and the large hall of the Y.M.C.A. was crowded every evening, an overflow being held in a room above.

God's Sheep.

An Encouragement to Bible Study.

The people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand.—Ps. c. 3; xcv. 7.

Some of us have said or sung these words Sunday by Sunday, from our childhood upward. I wonder how many of us have ever stopped to think of the treasures that underlie them. They are words for the lips of those who, from the heart, can say with David in the 23rd Psalm, "The Lord is MY Shepherd." Much has been written upon the Shepherd, much also about the sheep; may I offer now, by way of a suggestion, a few simple thoughts about the pasture—God's provision for his flock; and, in a subsequent paper, a thought or two as to the blessedness of being the sheep of his hand?

I.—The Pasture or Provision for God's Sheep.

We are told repeatedly in the Bible that the Word of God is the food of the believer's soul. Jeremiah says (xv. 16), "Thy words were found, and I did eat them," etc. In 1 Tim. iv. 6, the Apostle speaks of being "nourished up in the words of faith and of good doctrine." In 1 Pet. ii. 2 we read, "desire the sincere milk of the Word, that ye may grow thereby." The Apostle to the Hebrews (v. 12-14) speaks of the Word as supplying "milk" for the babe in Christ, and "strong meat" (or solid food, as R.V.) for the full-grown man. Thus we are taught that the Word of God contains all that is necessary for life (John vi. 63, Acts v. 20), growth (1 Pet. ii. 2), strength (Heb. v. 14), and usefulness (2 Tim. iii. 16-17); ever remembering that the written Word reveals Christ the living Word, who is the true "bread of life" (John vi. 35), and in whom "dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." Let us try and find out something of the nature and extent of God's pasture, and see whether we are using and enjoying it fully, or whether we are spiritually starving in the midst of plenty.

1. God provides good pasture. "I will feed them in a good pasture" (Ezek. xxxiv. 14). Although spoken of Israel, yet surely God's spiritual Israel may lay the hand of faith and appropriation upon the promises of this chapter. One chief idea of good pasture in the mind of a shepherd would be pasture from which nutriment could be derived without fear of deleterious herbs. The Psalmist says, "Thy Word is very pure" (Ps. cxix. 140), and again, "The words of the Lord are pure words, as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times (Ps. xii. 6). The writings of men may be good and very helpful, but God's Word is essence. No other book will fully satisfy the soul that has found a living Christ in the written Word, and that knows experimentally how pregnant with life and meaning the Holy Ghost can make the simplest verses of God's Book.

In these days of "many books," great and small, a word of warning seems specially to be needed. Let us value and use the writings of men so far as they are in accordance with, and explanatory of, the Scriptures; but never let us allow them to take the place of our Bibles. Nor let us be content to get our food second-hand, but, depending upon the teaching of the Holy Spirit, whose work it is according to the promise of the Lord Jesus, to teach all things (John xiv., 36), and to guide into all truth (John xvi. 13), let us daily draw nourishment direct from God's Word, and we shall find that it is indeed good pasture, pure and unmixed.

2. God provides large pastures (Isaiah xxx. 23). This seems to refer to literal cattle, but 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17, embodies the same thought. In God's Word may be found everything necessary for the soul's real good, but not anything for curious speculation. Yes, large—wide as the needs of the human heart—extensive as the infinite fulness of God. Every promise from cover to cover belongs to the believer, and there is no need of man which has not its corresponding supply in the promises of God. But the mere letter of the Word will profit little; it is only as Christ the living Word, in whom all fulness dwells, is seen and appropriated through the written Word, that the need of the human heart and the infinite fulness of God are brought together. We can only know the items of that grand general fulness through reading and studying our Bibles. We feel the need, but only in the Word, through the teaching of the Holy Ghost, can we acquire a certain knowledge of Christ, who alone can supply that need. We repeat that the pasture of God's Word is large as the needs of the human heart—extensive as the infinite fulness of God.

3. God provides green pastures (Ps. xxiii. 2). "He maketh me to lie down in green pastures"; or, as the margin, "pastures of tender grass"—someone has rendered it "springing grass." Evidently the idea is that of freshness—not stale food. There is a great tendency in our day to feed upon stale spiritual food. One says, "I had a great blessing last year through Mr. So-and-So's preaching." Another says, "My Bible seemed to be lit up one morning last week, and I have been living upon the blessing I got then ever since." If God's pasture is ever green and springing, why have you had no fresh food to-day? In the country you will see the sheep turn from the rank grass of long growth, to seek the delicate, fresh springing grass. Your body cannot be strong upon yesterday's food, neither can your soul be strong upon past experiences of blessing in the Word. The fresh pasture is still there, and the Holy Spirit waits to nourish the soul by means of it. Get fresh food daily.

Grass is sweetest when the dew is on it. And so, the early morning hour, as a rule, is the best for Bible study. Let God speak before the voice of man, or of necessary earthly pursuits, is heard. Depending upon the Holy Spirit's teaching, in the calm stillness, texts will glow with new meaning and life, and the heart will gain strength for the day's needs and emergencies. Green pastures—ever fresh and springing.

4. God provides fat pasture. "In a fat pasture shall they feed" (Ezek. xxxiv. 14). Those who have the charge of sheep sometimes say a piece of pasture land has "no heart in it"; and Christians sometimes say they find their Bibles lifeless—they read them regularly, but get no good from them. It is possible to read chapter after chapter without blessing, for the letter of the Word alone may be compared to the husk which covers the grain—to the casket which contains the precious gem. But use it as revealing Christ; see Him in and through it; take home its warnings; claim the fulfilment of its promises; touch Christ in the Word; feed on Him, the true Bread of Life; seek to extract the kernel from its covering, the gem from its casket, ever seeking and depending upon the Holy Spirit's teaching and power, and there will be no more complaint over a dull Bible; but it will be found to be fat, rich pasture that will abundantly satisfy (Ps. xxxvi. 8), and upon which the soul will gain new life, strength, joy, and power for useful service.

5. God provides pasture in high places. "Their pasture shall be in all high places" (Is. xlix. 9). And in Ezek. xxxiv. 13, 14, the Lord promises to feed his flock upon the "mountains" and "upon the high mountains." May not a New Testament parallel to these "high places" be found in the "heavenly places," or heavenlies, of the Epistle to the Ephesians? Five times in that epistle the words ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις occur (literally "in the heavenlies,") and in no other epistle. A careful study of the context would seem to show that it is a position attained through union with Christ in death and resurrection—a death unto sin (Rom. vi.) in his death, that, raised with Him, his resurrection life may be ours; not judicially only, but in actual fact and realisation, through faith in God's mighty power (Ephes. i. 19-23) and promise. A daily death unto self and sin, "that the life of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh" (2 Cor. iv. 10, 11), that we may be able to say with the Apostle (Gal. ii. 19-20), "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."

This will mean a life of victory over sin, and of abiding communion with God. It is a position attained by faith, and maintained by faith. God would have all his people feed and lie down on the heights. How is it with us? Is our spiritual life a moan of failure, or a song of victory and praise? But some one may say, "Are not the high places giddy places? Is not there the danger of self-righteous complacency and pride? Not if the soul climbs them in God's way of simple trust in and reliance upon the Lord Jesus Christ's work for him and in him. If an indwelling, reigning Lord vanquishes the believer's foes, the glory and the praise of victory belong to that Lord alone. Nearness to God must ever be a humbling position, even though it be upon the heights.

But what of the pasture there? We are told that grass is sweeter upon the mountains and hills than at their base, and hundreds in our day can testify to the increased helpfulness and preciousness of their Bibles since they mounted to the spiritual high places. "A new Book," say many, and no wonder! Let us not fear the heights, but follow on where God shall lead, remembering ever that his Word is "a lamp to our feet, and a light to our path," and guided by that we cannot go wrong.

Does not this brief, imperfect, and only suggestive glance at the pasture which God has provided for his sheep show that it is indeed very good, and shall we not from to-day avail ourselves more of this food, that we may grow in grace and strength, and bring glory to the name of our "Good Shepherd"? Truly it is a good thing to be one of "The Sheep of his Pasture!"

AFRICAN SLAVERY.—Herr Wolff states that during the South monsoons slave traders continue to attempt to smuggle slaves out of East Africa, and that the English gunboats Blanche and Racoon had set free 109 captives taken from the slave boats.

SEDGLEY HOME MISSION.—The thirty-third annual series of open-air services has just been concluded. Through the summer numerous meetings have been held throughout the district, and already tokens of good results are forthcoming. During the last week, special services have been addressed by the former missioner, Mr. W. Lindsay, an eloquent and untiring evangelist, and now of Olivet Memorial Church, New York, U.S.A. The services were largely attended, the hall seating about one thousand persons. The mission is still carried on by Mr. F. A. Homer, J.P., by whom it was founded, and is maintained on evangelical and temperance lines.

The Apostolic Speeches.

ACTS xvii. 22—34.

THE Apostle Paul is here addressing persons who were ignorant of the Old Testament Scriptures, and who were idolaters. Although their city was full of idols, yet they had an idea that there was a God of whom they were ignorant. Paul affirms that he can supply the knowledge they lack; and he sets God forth as Maker, Lord, Sustainer, Judge (investigating, awarding), who is at present calling to repentance, in preparation for the final investigation and decision.

The discourse on Mars Hill is not complete in itself. It contains no Gospel truth about the work of Christ for us. It is a continuation of Paul's preaching, he having already (ver. 18) "proclaimed Jesus and the resurrection." The hearers desired to have the doctrines, respecting what they regarded as strange deities, explained to them. To place God first, and man afterwards, was again the order of the Apostle's speech. Him, whom they worshipped, without knowing Him, Paul will declare unto them. Thus the speaker placed himself so far in touch with the existing groping condition of the mind of his audience—an example for all speakers.

(a) God—"the God," the Maker of the world, is Lord—Sovereign, Supreme Possessor of heaven and earth. And being such He does not dwell in temples made with hands. He is not a Receiver of anything which the hand can supply. He is a Giver, and He gives what none else can give—"life, and breath, and all things." God as a giver should ever be a leading truth.

(b) God made from one stock every nation; foreordaining and marking out the times and the limitations of their habitation.

(c) God desires that mankind:

1. Should seek Him;
2. Feel after Him; and
3. Find Him.

(d) God has not created and then left his creation to continue a course; He is not far from every one of us, and in Him we live, and are moved, and continue to exist. He sustains, and He recalls.

(e) God's offspring these idolaters were; and on that ground they ought not to entertain disparaging and erroneous conceptions of the Author of their own living structure, with its marvellous powers and characteristics.

(f) God overlooked the times of ignorance. But He has appointed a period of judgment, when He will investigate all lives; and as Judge will, in a righteous way, pronounce sentence upon them. And seeing this is appointed, He calls upon us now before that time comes, to repent—to turn our minds from all erroneous and unworthy conceptions of God—to change our lives practically from all things sinful—and to return to God in contrition of spirit.

(g) God commands all men everywhere to repent—"commands"—that is, not exactly in the sense of ordering, but of earnestly exhorting men to repentance, seeing the intense solemnity of the approaching judgment.

(h) God's judgment will be by Jesus in his character of man, by Him whom Paul had proclaimed to them; and this truth is certified to us by his resurrection.

(i) Thus far as to the knowledge of God. Then the assembly becomes divided into three classes, and breaks up:—

1. Some mocked when they heard of the resurrection of the dead.
2. Others will hear the speaker again on the subject.
3. Certain side with the Apostle, and believe his message.

Perhaps these three classes exist in many a large assembly. To which of the three do we belong? JAMES VAN SOMMER.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR SOCIETY.

BY REV. J. B. MORGAN, CHESTER.

I.—CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR PRINCIPLES.

THE Y.P.S.C.E. is essentially a religious movement. In the words of its worthy founder, Dr. Clark, of Boston, U.S.A., "the religious features are paramount." All its enterprises centripetalise in a prayer-meeting. There they begin, and round that as a centre they move in orbit. The difference between the Y.P.S.C.E. and the ordinary "mutual improvement class," "debating," or "literary" society, "guild," or church club, is, that these latter are generally in the first sense literary, social, or recreative, as the case may be, and to that the spiritual is an addendum. No doubt many of these societies, wisely led and controlled, are rendering excellent service to the church and the young people, but they go about their work in a different way; from the outside, perhaps cricket club or gymnasium, they aim to work centrewards, towards the inner church life. In method the Y.P.S.C.E. traverses that entirely. It begins at the centre. It comes to the young people saying: "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and these things shall be added."

A PART OF CHURCH WORK.

The motto of the Y.P.S.C.E. is "For Christ and the Church." That is a main plank in its platform of principles. It is not an organisation separate from and independent of the Church. It is "the Church at work for and with the young people, and the young people at work for and with the Church." It is "a half-way house to the Church; a training school in the Church; a water tower for the Church." Beholding a gap between school and Church the Endeavour Society aims to fill it, and in so doing is surely within the legitimate area of Church activity. Abundant room is there for enterprise in this direction.

For generations religious conferences have had as an ever-recurring theme of discussion, "How can we keep our senior scholars?" "How can we stop the leakage—that terrible leakage—between Church and school?" We claim for the Endeavour Society that it contains the answer to that as yet unanswered question. It steps in just "where brook and river meet." Where the Sunday-school finds its greatest difficulty, and in numberless instances loses touch of the young life; before the Church in its ordinary operations is able to interest and attract, there the Y.P.S.C.E. finds its great opportunity. It fits as easily and naturally into its place as did the well-shaped stones into Solomon's Temple of old.

The Christian Endeavour Society is not a denominational institution. It does not belong exclusively to any section of the Christian Church. Branches are to be found in every evangelical Christian denomination, in some districts more frequently in one, in other districts in another. While it affirms absolute loyalty to the Lordship of Jesus Christ, it has its basis rather in the experimental and practical than in any doctrinal or ecclesiastical test. "Love" and "Service" are its watchwords. It is more concerned with the heart's affections and the conversion of souls than with the "higher criticism."

While not denominational, neither can it be called an undenominational movement. We may hope it will do something to break down sectarian prejudices, and form links of love binding Church to Church, yet it is friendly to all, antagonistic to none. In each local church with which a society is connected it belongs to that local church, and would be called, say, "Claremont Congregational," or "High-street Presbyterian" Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour. In no case are the young people called upon to surrender any principle or custom of their own denomination. Dr. Clark calls it "an interdenominational society," and that, despite its somewhat formidable orthography, is perhaps the best description that can be given.

ADAPTABILITY.

Granted an evangelical basis, and certain essential features—to wit, The Pledge, The Weekly Prayer Meeting, The Consecration Service, The Work of the Look-out Committee—the constitution of the Y.P.S.C.E. may be freely adapted to suit local and denominational requirements. With loyalty to principle we would combine elasticity of method. Change of method implies no want of faith in the Gospel of Christ. Thus, a society well-known to the writer is practically the "class meeting" of a Methodist minister; in another case a Bible Class has become a Y.P.S.C.E. Here and there societies are exclusively formed of young women or of young men. In at least one instance two or more weak churches have joined together for Endeavour work and meet on the most convenient premises.

The constitution is not necessarily binding, in its entirety, on any society. It would, of course, be hardly fair to emasculate the main features of the movement, and call the truncated remainder by the name of Christian Endeavour. The Y.P.S.C.E. has earned the right to the exclusive use of its own name. Where the main features are adopted the name should also be taken; where that is not the case it should not be usurped. Experience goes to prove that societies formed more closely according to the Model Constitution are usually the most successful.

A MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

There must be something of Missionary Enterprise in connection with every true Christian Endeavour Society. That is half the meaning of the word "Endeavour" in its title. The "Endeavour" spends itself not only in effort for personal holiness, but also for the salvation of others. The nature and scope of this work must, necessarily, be determined in some measure by the strength of the society, the locality where it is situated, and local church organisations already in existence; but it ought to—must indeed—either assist in some mission work at present in operation, or strike out a new line of its own.

It would take too much space to enlarge on this part of the subject. Most societies have some such committee or committees as the following:—"Sick Visiting Committee," "Flower and Hospital Committee," Home and Foreign Mission Committee, the names of which explain their field of activity. With all temperance work, social reform, intellectual improvement, philanthropic enterprise, the Y.P.S.C.E. is in hearty sympathy; but it must always remain at the core a distinctly religious organisation, and nothing be allowed to interfere with its spiritual exercises and work. It is not to be made the cat's paw of any organisation to further ends other than its own. Where it begins there it ends, "Christ for the young people; the young people for Christ."

Ye hearts with youthful vigour warm,
In smiling crowds draw near,
And turn from every mortal charm,
A Saviour's voice to hear.

Cornish Coast Mission to Seamen.

LAST week the sixth annual meeting in connection with the Seamen's Christian Friend Society's Sailors' Home and Rest, at Fowey, Cornwall, was held at the Institute Hall. The gathering had been preceded by special mission services, Rev. G. J. Hill, secretary of the society, and Mrs. Hill addressing large meetings of seamen and others, both at the Rest and in the open air, at which a gracious influence was present.

Mr. R. FOSTER, J.P., who presided at the public meeting, said he had inspected the Rest, and found it not only to be an admirable place for sailors, but had received abundant evidence of their appreciation of it. Expressing his hearty approbation of the society's work, he hoped this anniversary would result in increased sympathy with and support of it.

Mr. HILL detailed the progress of the society in Fowey, and on his suggestion that those who had received benefit at the Rest should give testimony, several rose and thanked God that the place had ever been opened, for its influence had been very precious to their souls. Addresses were also given by Mrs. Hill, Professor Gerald Yeo, Mr. Atkinson, and Mr. Hanson.

Make Haste!

Notes of an Address at Belfast.

By REV. JOHN McNEILL.

"For the Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."—Luke xix. 10.

This story of the salvation of Zacchæus on the roadside, by Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of God in human flesh, in all His love and grace, is an illustration of the statement made in the tenth verse, "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." Of the real and awful meaning of the word "lost," every man and woman born is the vivid, particular illustration. The lost coin, the lost sheep, the lost son or daughter, are illustrations on a lower level. But the awful reality and fact of "lostness" lies here: I have lost God, and God has lost me. And the Gospel of the Gospel lies in that sentence, "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."

How does He do it? First of all He comes to the lost sinner's town. Theologians and writers in magazines sometimes write about a thing called "s-i-n" as if it were an abstraction, and discuss it in polysyllabic, philosophical terms. When we come to the Bible we do not find any of these polysyllabic discussions. We find sin is a reality. Sin has its power in the hearts of men and women. Sin is a something concrete, definite, substantial, incarnate, Says the narrative, "He entered and passed through Jericho"—that is to say, He came to the lost sinner's town. He came there, just as He has entered and come into Belfast to-day.

He comes to Zacchæus' town, but more than that, He comes to the particular street in which Zacchæus is. More than that, He comes to the particular tree, on the roadside, in the branches of which that particular sinner is sitting; and He calls him by his name, and says to him, "Zacchæus, make haste, and come down; for to-day I must abide at thy house. And he made haste, and came down, and received Him joyfully"; and that salvation story ends. Well, no, it does not end, for, of course, there is no end to it. Jesus and Zacchæus met together then at the foot of that tree, and they are together this afternoon. Whithersoever through the vast eternity Christ conducts to-day his magnificent procession, Zacchæus is there, be sure.

This was a man who needed saving. If any of you do not need saving, you may rise and go, for, of course, this is not for you. If you have already been found by the Saviour, you are the one who will be glued to the seat; because there is nothing you like to hear better than the old story over again. But if any of you think that you are above the need of being saved, then I would tell you to go out, on the plea that you may send in some other listener. The one trouble of your life, if you are not saved, is just that you do not know Jesus Christ, and have not given your heart to Him; and you will never have anything worth living for, either in present possession or in expectation, if you do not get to know Him.

Zacchæus was a publican; and he was a chief among the publicans; and he was rich. Now, "publican" does not mean drink-seller in this connection; although if there are any drink-sellers here, they might listen, because I believe that those in that trade need saving every way. Zacchæus was a tax-gatherer. The taxes were farmed out, and a particular class of men lifted the taxes for the hated Roman power. When a Jew gave himself to the business of lifting the tax, he must have been a case-hardened Jew, a man who had lost all patriotic and religious feeling before he could come to this low level, that he would soil his soul and his fingers making money by lifting the hated tax. They were a hated class of men, these turncoat renegade Jews. That is the kind of man we have in Zacchæus.

I wonder whether there is anybody here who is considered particularly unsalvable. Sometimes it does look as if we wasted our breath on these decent people whom you cannot call riotous sinners, and, equally, you cannot call them saints. God pity them, there they are—a kind of nondescript, well-dressed creatures. They wash like a wave into church, and they wash out again. Are there any big thumping sinners here? Then to you is the word of this salvation sent!

When Jesus is entering and passing through, Zacchæus is wakened up with a kind of natural curiosity: "He wanted to see Jesus"—to see "the Man." God often works upon curiosity. Fools have come to a meeting to scoff, and have before now remained to pray. Thank God for curiosity! That is what led you astray. Do you remember how the devil took advantage of curiosity to lead you away from God? The Lord likes to break the devil's back with his own stick, and He takes this curiosity which has led, and which still leads, so many to the devil, in order to bring Zacchæus from sin and the devil, back to salvation in Jesus Christ.

Notice the difficulties in the way of seeing Jesus. There is a great crowd of people, and Zacchæus is an undersized man. What did he do? He could not see Him for the crowd, because he was of little stature. If he had gone pushing and boring, there were men there who hated him, and they would have been glad to hustle him back. They would have been glad almost to take him, neck and crop, and pitch him back into the side walk again, and say, "Zacchæus, you have nothing to do with this. Stick to your accursed tax-lifting. That is good enough for you." What did Zacchæus do then? "He ran." I like that fourth verse. Instead of saying, "Ah, circumstances are against me; it won't do," he girded at the difficulties. Pluck up heart of grace, man! Do you want to be saved? Then put your foot on the neck of your softness and laziness and milksoppiness. You will get to heaven, I trust, but you will know about it on the road. In a word, you will have to put your feet below you and run for it. What effort are you making to break from the devil's chain?

I can imagine a man who says, "It is of no use for me to make an effort; I am too weak, and the chain too strong." Give a good tug, my brother. Put out your best. Rise, weak and all as you are, only rise, and God almighty will rise with you and in you and for you. Although Alps were piled on Apennines, God the Lord will lay them in dust. Thy feet shall stand in heaven, if thou wilt but begin. That is how we are saved. God is the bottom of it and the top of it, but He works along these natural, human lines of self-determination.

I think I hear the scamper of Zaccheus' feet on the road. And people would jeer, for there is nothing so easy, my friend, as to waste your little wit on "anxious souls." The Lord pity you for it! I can imagine that the Scribes and Pharisees, who were content to be merely in the crowd, were scoffing and saying, "Do you see him? See, he is going up like a squirrel!" They laughed and scoffed, I have no doubt. But, blessed be God, Zacchæus ran on.

Do your part, and Christ will do his. Do not lie back in the devil's lap, and expect that any good will ever come to you there, but spring up and out, and away and forward, and Christ will meet you. He is always going about looking for you. Have no doubt about that. He "came to the place, and looked up, and saw him." It is the same to-day. My hearer, you are getting a personal call to a personal Saviour. He said to him, "Zacchæus, be quick, and come down. I am wanting to stay with you." That is the Gospel.

Now, what are you to do? My friend, be honest and answer to your name. If I had called your dog by its name half as often as I have called you by that which is your true name in God's sight, the brute would have been up here wagging its tail beside me. And we poor preachers have to stand and call to you loud and long, as you are sitting in the branches of Gospel ordinances. "Come down! Come down! Come down! Be quick! Be quick! Be quick!" And—God pity you—you sit, and sit, and sit in the branches, and gape and stare all round about you, and drop off dead; but you do not come to Christ. It was very well for Zacchæus to climb up the tree. But it was better for him to climb down out of the tree, and come to the living Saviour at the foot of it. Sinner, are you willing to come down? It is not safe to be higher up than Christ. Come down! Come down! You are sitting up in those galleries in a state of spectatorhood. Come down, if you please, off your high horse. Come down out of pride! out of headiness! out of high-mindedness! Come down even out of sympathetic interest!

Have you come to Christ? Do not stand up and say you do not know. No man can touch Christ with the tip of his little finger and not be thrilled to the very core of the heart within him. Where are you? Sitting in churches and chapels and halls looking on; or down at the foot in close grips with the Christ of God Himself? Go home with Him, first to your home, and then to His home in heaven.

FAMINE IN CHINA.

We follow up the painfully interesting letter given in our last issue by some extracts from other letters that appear in the October number of China's Millions. The crisis seems a very grave one, and we trust there will be a liberal response to these appeals from workers on the spot. As stated last week, we shall be glad to receive and to forward contributions:—

Pastor Hsi, writing to Mr. Stanley Smith, says:—"From last year throughout Shan-si province there was no rain in the autumn, and so there was a poor in-gathering of the autumn crops. The eighth month was dry, and thus the wheat was sown in unfavourable circumstances. As soon as winter came, there was no good snow; after the new year there was no spring rain; and at present the ground is bare, for a thousand li the wheat-shoots are dried up, and on the wastes there is no grass; a famine is upon us. In my home I have a flock of sheep; they come in and go out and find no pasture; the old sheep are famished, and the lambs have short supply of milk; the dying are already dead, and the living, I fear, can hardly be preserved.

"Please pray for your brethren and sisters who are in distress; and also inform those pastors, pastors' wives, lady evangelists, elders, and deacons who, with fellow-hearts, serve the Lord and warmly love men, that they may together pray the Lord on behalf of the Church in Shan-si."

Miss Hoskyn, of Ping-yang-Fu, writing to a friend, says:—"Things are getting very serious here, on account of there being no rain; and if you can get anyone to send us money to keep the Christians from starving, will you see if it can be telegraphed out here, that we may know what we can do? Outsiders will be dying by hundreds, but if we could only keep the Christians going, or some of them! If rain does not come in a few days, nearly every one in this district will die of hunger next winter. I don't know how we can stay and see it, and yet we cannot leave our poor Christians.

"Even if rain does fall, many hundreds will die. Do stir up people if you can. I know it is a poor chance after the recent riots. It will be terrible to eat food when our man has to fight for it on the road home, or at least carry a big stick to keep the people off his basket; and yet that is what seems to be before us before long. We shall be able to buy at a price that puts food out of the question for these people, who at the best of times have no money, only live on what they get from their bit of land. If they had money, the food imported will not be enough for everyone. Do try and stir people up. It is getting dreadful.

"If anything is done it should be done without delay. We know we cannot help outsiders, even if help comes. It will take a great deal of money to help some of the Christians, and it will be so hard to help some and let others die. I am only just beginning to realise what a famine means."

Dr. Edwards, of T'ai-yuen Fu, writes:—"Rain is still a rarity. . . . Already some of the farmers have sown their fields for the third time this year. Only where the fields can be irrigated from a river are there anything like crops. In the East Hills, where we have our village house, there are practically none this year, and the people must suffer very much during the coming winter. Others of these northern provinces are suffering in the same way, and a repetition of the famine of fourteen or fifteen years ago is much feared."

Jews in New York.

Mr. Hermann Warszawiak writes:—"The Lord seems to have taken into his own hands our undertaking by way of developing the work in New York. Formerly American Jews were but little interested in Jewish work, but for the building of 'Christ's Synagogue' with the adjoining Hebrew missionary training school, they have already contributed 20,000 dollars, one-fifth of the whole sum required.

"Another wonderful leading of the Saviour is this. I have great hope that He is going to restore to me my dear wife and children, who are to meet me in Edinburgh in the first week in October, not, as of old, to persecute me, but in full love as letters clearly indicate. I am told that my mother and some of my brothers will accompany them, and I am happy to have at last an opportunity of testifying of Christ personally to my own kith and kin. Remember me in prayer, that Christ may give me the victory."

Dublin Christian Convention.

This Convention, which is an outcome of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's first mission in Ireland, was held for the nineteenth time last week. On Monday evening there was the usual social gathering. After tea the chair was taken by Mr. John R. Fowler, who in the course of his address said that they were met in the name of their crucified and risen Lord, in the unity of the Spirit and the bond of peace. However prominent the idea of organic union might be in some quarters, with them there was a real and essential union of faith in the one Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Their union was based upon the platform of the Evangelical Alliance and upon an experimental experience of the things of God.

Rev. J. D. Smylie read a portion of John xii. Commenting on the words, "Sir, we would see Jesus," he said: It is Jehovah's Christ that we are to see; not the imaginary Nazarene of the philosophers, but the Christ lifted up for the salvation of the world. They were not there to criticise the Lord Jesus, but to accept Him as their infallible Guide and Teacher. The speaker exhorted all present to seek a personal interest in that adorable Saviour.

Rev. Geo. Hanson, Dublin, dwelt on Christ's estimate of the importance of the Old Testament Scriptures. He began by saying that even sceptics admit that the Books of the New Testament are unquestionably the works of the men whose names they bear. He proceeded to show the utter impossibility of a character of such transcendent beauty as Christ's being the product of the mere Jewish mind. As well expect four rough uncultured Dublin artisans, with ordinary paintbrushes, to produce a masterpiece, as to think that Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John should invent the unique Personality who is the Hero of their story. To believe this would be to believe a greater miracle than the Incarnation.

What, then, did Christ think of the Old Testament Scriptures? (1) He referred to the Scriptures as a well-known volume in his day. "Search the Scriptures." We know certainly that the Scriptures to which Christ thus refers were the very Scriptures of the Old Testament which we now possess. He refers to events which cover the whole record from Genesis to Malachi. He speaks of the creation, of the institution of marriage, of Abel, Abraham, the giving of the manna, the brazen serpent, Moses and his writings, the Law, the Psalms. He refers to Malachi's prophecy of the Forerunner, and never once does He impugn the Record. He put his seal upon the miraculous—e.g., the stories of Lot's wife and Jonah in the fish's belly.

(2) Christ used the Old Testament Scriptures as a stay to his own soul in the hour of his greatest need. In his conflict with the Tempter He meets the fiery darts of the wicked one with "It is written." All the texts used by Christ in his hour of temptation are culled from that much-maligned book—the Book of Deuteronomy. When the shadow of the cross fell upon Him, Christ says, honouring the Old Testament prophecies concerning Himself, "The Son of Man goeth as it is written," and when Peter drew his sword to defend his Master, Jesus says, "Put up thy sword: how, then, shall the Scripture be fulfilled?" In the moment of his supremest agony He quotes in death the utterance of the Psalmist, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" "Into thy hands I commend my spirit."

Of course, there are difficulties in connection with the Old Testament Scriptures, but if we wait till all difficulties are removed we shall believe nothing. We can't tell how the sun is poised in the empyrean, but we believe in his reality and enjoy his beams. One thing we can be sure of—that is Christ. We must not be too sweeping in our condemnation of all professors of the higher criticism. Many of these critics do not deny, but presuppose inspiration. We could count on five fingers all the serious difficulties of the Old Testament. If the Book were a mere human production, how different would the case be. The few spots on the sun do not interfere with its full-orbed effulgence. The trifling discrepancies of the Holy Scriptures are not worth the fuss that is made of them. No other book is treated by critics as the Bible is.

TUESDAY MORNING.

Rev. George Ensor, Saxmundham, the first speaker to-day, took for his theme "The Study of God's Word." He said that his personal studies had for some time been carried on upon the lines of the higher criticism. The matter of the historic interpretation and general reliability of God's Word was in the air. He was well aware that it was easy for a speaker to raise more doubt and create more difficulty than he would be able to remove, therefore he desired to speak with caution, and under the guidance of the good Spirit of God.

If the Bible be fiction and fact intermingled, then he must refuse to accept any miracle upon the evidence of such a record. A man of science objects to any break in the continuity of physical law. If the apologist is not sure of his own evidence, then the man of science will refuse to listen to him for a single moment. Hume's objections to miracles may be put thus:—"It is contrary to experience that miracles should be true, but it is not contrary to experience that testimony should be false." How can we meet Hume if we admit any fiction or fable in the Bible? Paley, in his intellectual duel with Hume, must have owned humiliating defeat had he not believed that he possessed an infallible record. If you cannot sustain miracles on the theory of modern critics, no more can you go to the world and teach the people that there are bright rewards for the righteous and punishments for the wicked in a future life, for the worldling will turn on you and say, "After all, your evidence regarding the future life is doubtful." Better dismiss such assemblies as these, and confess our work a failure, if we have a mutilated Bible and an unreliable foundation for our faith.

The speaker took exception to the conduct of certain critics, who describe particular difficulties in the Old Testament, and completely conceal the fact that those difficulties had been met and answered a thousand times. These objections to revelation have a history. They can all be traced to Germany. If they went back far enough they would find most of these objections were nearly two thousand years old. Many of them are presented in books of the present day, and are given to the world without a hint that they have ever appeared before. The simplest commentary — say the "Speaker's Commentary"—will meet nearly all the objections raised by the higher criticism. The Scriptures are the best defence of the Scriptures. The Revised Version is the best cure for so-called higher criticism.

Rev. H. Montgomery, Belfast, read part of Acts xix. Referring to the text: "Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?" he said the first theological professor in Ephesus was a woman; Priscilla with her assistant, Professor Aquila, had for student the eloquent Apollos. Paul saw that the city of Ephesus was wholly given to idolatry. What would be the most likely thing for him to do? Would he go to the slums and preach the Gospel to the outcasts? By no means. The first thing he did was to look for the disciples of Jesus, who were lost in this great heathen centre, and hard work he had to find them, for they were keeping very quiet. Get the Christians made right, and God will begin to work. A baptism of the Holy Ghost would soon settle the higher criticism. There is a river that maketh glad the city of God; that river is the influence of Christian people filled with the Holy Ghost.

These people had not so much as heard of the Holy Ghost. But they did not wrap themselves up in ecclesiastical macintoshes to keep the blessed rain of the Holy Ghost from reaching them. After they received the Holy Ghost their experience was different to anything they had ever felt before. We live too often on the outskirts of the deeper life. The borderland experience is no true test of real fully consecrated life.

AFTERNOON MEETING.

Rev. J. G. Train, of Hull, spoke on the subject of "Lack of Consecration." He said Lot's wife was the type of a churchly-minded worldling; Abraham was a type of whole-hearted devotion. Lot was a worldly-minded believer. He is to be distinguished from his wife. Lot's wife simulated. She was at heart a worldling, but Lot dissimulated and hid the grace he possessed in order to conform to the world. Lot had come out of his own country, even as Abraham had, by faith. But herein is the difference between Lot's case and Abraham's. We read that Abraham not only obeyed the call of God and came out of his own land by faith, but by faith he sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country. He was a pilgrim to the last, he never settled down, but looked for a city that hath foundations. Lot did the very reverse. He settled down, he pitched his tent towards Sodom; he even attained some position of municipal dignity: he sat in the gate of the city.

Three characteristics of unconsecrated life are seen in Lot. First, he set small store by association with the godly. We do well to attend strictly to the sanitary condition of our material surroundings, but we ought surely to be equally as solicitous about the spiritual hygiene of our homes. A good many children may perish even as Lot's did if the parent is a worldly-minded Christian. Again, Lot made small account of prayer, and much of his own powers of observation. Abraham always reared an altar where he pitched his tent. No prominence is given to this aspect of spiritual life in the history of Lot. He looked on the prospect and made his choice, Abraham looked towards God and made his. They chose upon different principles altogether. The third characteristic common to Lot and the unconsecrated Christian was an aversion for exertion and a liking for ease and dignity. It is not persecution that the Church has to dread now, but ease and prosperity and a good social position. These are more dangerous foes than those who [illegible] the fires of Smithfield. Unconsecrated men have no influence in their neighbourhood or with their families. When Lot warned his son-in-law, he seemed to them as one who mocked.

Rev. H. Montgomery, in the absence of Mr. McFarlane, who was unexpectedly detained, spoke upon one aspect of the result of consecration, "The Trial of Faith." God does purify in order to lead to loftier heights even those who are nearest to Him. A scientist spends eight hours over a microscope, peering into one drop of water, and discovers life in it; we should so microscopically study God's Word till we find life in it too. Another result of consecration is Divine protection. Abraham captured Lot and in doing so overcame five kings. These potentates would surely hereafter be his enemies, but God says, "Fear not, Abraham, I am thy shield." Another result of entire consecration is testing. The wildest storms break upon the highest mountains, the noblest characters are the most tried. Whole-hearted Christians can rejoice in tribulation.

Fully-consecrated Christians can do service for God with the utmost ease. Theirs is a conquering life. The frigate bird can fly at a remarkable rate with an ease inconceivable. From Africa it could reach the American shore in twelve hours, whilst an ocean liner would be slowly toiling for more than a week on the same track. God created the bird to do its work, and it does it well. It is in his natural element. God created the fish to swim, and He created the Christian unto good works. To him then it will be easy and delightful to do God's will.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

Rev. H. Montgomery delivered an address on "The Need of the Church." Taking Isaiah chap. vi. as the basis of his remarks, he observed that all spiritual blessing must begin in a sight of the Lord, a sight so bright that it throws a deeper darkness upon self. It is said that the reason why Mesopotamians made such strides in astronomy was because Mesopotamia was a broad, level, uninteresting country, so the people naturally turned their eyes upward. When the Church gets her eye upon the Lord, there are times of blessing for her.

He would speak of two kinds of men—the saved man and the sent man. (1) The saved man saw a king upon his throne. What was the effect of the vision upon Isaiah? He began to see himself. No one gets a view of God without having a view of self also. "I am undone," he says. Another thing the vision of God does is to make man feel his responsibility. Immediately Isaiah begins to think of the people about him. "I dwell among a people of unclean lips." God's order is to discover sin first before he qualifies a man for work. David confessing his sin says if he is forgiven, "Then will I teach transgressors thy way." There are some believers who might be called "militia Christians," like the American preacher who is reported to have prayed, "Lord, send me anywhere, but not west of the Mississippi!" But (2) the sent man, the man truly cleansed, will go anywhere when persuaded he is sent of God.

Rev. H. D. Brown, of Dublin, followed with a striking address on "Casting the net on the right side of the ship." We have here a wonderful manifestation of Christ given to weary, downcast, unsuccessful men after a night of disappointing toil. The disciples had gone back to their fishing after these blessed years of intercourse with the Master. The most glorious manifestations of Christ we receive are not those of Sunday, but of the Monday and the Tuesday. There should be not a going down, but a going up from the Sunday in all our weekday lives. There is nothing like going into spiritual work for Christ, to cure a fit of despondency. As they row homewards in silence (for unsuccessful men don't say much), through the grey dawn of the April morning, they see Jesus, who asks them, "Children, have ye any meat?" We must come to an end of ourselves before we can have a beginning with God.

The speaker contrasted the action of Peter and John, the former jumping impulsively into the water to get to Jesus, and the latter, although the disciple whom Jesus loved, remaining at the post of duty. So the truest lovers of Christ are not always those who are most anxious to get home to be with him in heaven. Often miserable and cowardly feelings are hidden under that desire. Mr. Spurgeon once said that he would not wish to wait for Christ's second coming, if he had his choice, as he would then miss his blessed footsteps all the way, and through the dark valley; and he had his desire.

AFTERNOON MEETING.

The Archbishop of Dublin occupied the chair. He said that the conferences which were being held all over the world in these days were matters of much rejoicing, and that he had been much cheered by reading the recent address of Archdeacon Sinclair. The observance of Holy Communion by the Bishop of Worcester with several hundreds of brethren of different Churches at Grindelwald was a touching event. He had just come from a conference at Lucerne, and was deeply impressed by the evidence of general and increasing interest in the subject of union there displayed, and which promised well for the future.

Rev. J. G. Train delivered an address on "Life, Love, Light." Life towards God is the first sphere in the believer's existence, then love towards one another, and lastly, light towards the world.

Rev. H. F. Pegg, of St. Leonards, followed with an address on "The best we have." The great lack of the churches is tenderness. Our service must be our best acts springing from our best thoughts. A lack of tenderness will spoil all harmony. A disciple called "waste" what Jesus stamped as one of the noblest of acts. This tenderness is not to be acquired through struggle. In illustrating this point, the speaker drew an impressive lesson from a parable of nature, the angry waves striving and striving in vain to transform themselves by their own efforts into clouds, when the sun spake down amid the tumult, and directed the sea to lie quite still and open its wide bosom to his warm rays. What effort could not accomplish was brought about by quietness and rest and trust. The way of struggle and energy is always apart from the living God, yet, as the sea exposed her bosom to the rays of the sun, so our whole life must be laid open to the influences of heaven.

A missionary meeting was held in the evening, when addresses were delivered by Revs. Hudson Taylor, David Hill, and George Ensor.

THURSDAY MORNING.

Mr. James Barton, Dundalk, delivered the first address, on the subject of "The Servant of Christ." He dwelt upon the greatness of their privileges and responsibilities as servants. It might seem hard to have the name "slave" applied to a Christian, but they must remember that they had been redeemed by the precious blood of Jesus Christ. They belonged to the Master, and the greater their submission to Him the greater was their glory and their honour. At the same time, they knew that the smallest service willingly given to the cause of the Lord would not be lost.

Rev. Dr. McKee, in making the announcement, requested special prayer for blessing on the forthcoming two weeks' mission by Mr. Moody, to be held in the city during the coming month.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor addressed the meeting on "Keeping," which, he said, was a most comprehensive term, including both spiritual and temporal keeping by the Providence of God. They were exhorted to keep themselves in the love of God, while they knew that they were being kept by God. One of the earliest benedictions was that of the High Priest under the old law, "The Lord bless thee and keep thee." They had a striking illustration of God's power to keep, in his dealings with Israel in the desert wanderings. Millions of Israelites went to rest every night without any provision for the morrow, yet sure as the morning came the supply was forthcoming.

The speaker referred more particularly to spiritual keeping. He illustrated this point by many instances that had occurred in connection with the work of God in China, in which he had been privileged to be engaged for the past thirty-eight years. Many are now dying of want in China, and he feared that as yet the worst had not been experienced. He urged upon God's people to pray for the Chinese Christians in view of the ordeal of famine which is before them during the coming winter.

The Lord's power to keep our spirits and to save us from sin—not to keep us sinless—was illustrated by the living flesh of a man. My hand is corruptible flesh, but it is not corrupting. Nevertheless it was corruptible all the time, and if severed from the body would certainly become corrupt. We may be kept from sinning, walking always in the fear of the Lord, and neglecting nothing which we know to be his will. There was a distinction to be made between sinfulness and sinning. We believe that we shall be kept from falling from Him, but we also need grace to live for Him. Above all, we need keeping in the experience of holiness. "And the very God of Peace sanctify you wholly, and I pray God your spirit, soul, and body be reserved blameless—not sinless.

God undertakes not only to keep his people blameless but full. "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst. But the water I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up unto everlasting life."

AFTERNOON MEETING.

Through the unavoidable absence of Viscount Bangor, Mr. John R. Fowler presided.
